PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 76th CONGRESS, THIRD SESSION

SENATE

THURSDAY, APRIL 18, 1940

(Legislative day of Monday, April 8, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, who art the Father of our spirits, who alone guardest the secret of Thine own creation: How shall we live aright, we who are so weak and sinful, if Thou interpret not to us just what we are and are destined yet to be?

As we turn aside in this brief moment of rededication, conscious of our ignorance, aware of the hopeless poverty and confusion of our thought, may we understand that this is because, in the secret of Thy presence, we touch the wisdom of Thy mind and overhear Thy glorious thoughts. And, since Thou dost already know our veriest imaginings and bearest still to us a love wherewith we dare not love ourselves, may we now consent to walk this day with Thee along the highway Thou hast chosen, that our lives may find in Thy companionship their full fruition. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8438) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I think I should make a statement to the Senate with reference to a bill appropriating this amount of money. The bill as reported to the Senate provides for an appropriation of $963,797,478. It is a net reduction of $1,981,960 below the amount provided in the House bill.

After the bill reached the Senate supplemental estimates were submitted amounting to $8,839,000, which estimates were not considered by the House. Therefore in any fair statement as to the recommendations of your Appropriations Committee it should be stated, first, that the bill exceeds the appropriations for the current fiscal year by $48,437,229 and that it is $123,514,099 under the regular estimates submitted to the Congress. Your committee also made a reduction of $797,000 from the amount of the supplemental estimates.

The bill does represent an increase of $48,437,229 over the appropriations for this fiscal year. That is inevitable. The naval program is determined by the Congress. Once that has been determined as a result of the recommendations from the legislative committee of the Senate, and ships have been authorized for construction, and appropriations made, almost automatically there is fixed the appropriation for the next fiscal year; but, after all, when we establish a program and provide a number of ships in commission, men must be provided for the ships, fuel must be provided for the ships, all of the equipment for the Navy follows, dependent upon the number of ships that are authorized and appropriated for by the Congress.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think the point which the Senator now makes is a very important one. I am wondering whether he has any figures available indicating how much of this total is maintenance and how much is construction.

Mr. BYRNES. Yes. I have not broken down the appropriations made by the committee. In the estimates that were originally submitted, and which I know the Senator has, for ship construction in 1941 the proportion was about 7 to 4 on the basis of estimates of $1,134,000,000—about $700,000,000 for maintenance and $400,000,000 for construction. Those are the estimates. In this particular bill the replacement of vessels amounts to $340,000,000, so the balance may be properly said to reflect the difference between $340,000,000 for replacement and $1,000,000,000 for maintenance.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Has the Senator any comparative figures showing how this maintenance item is increasing over the years?

Mr. BYRNES. No; I have not such figures for the past few years. I can furnish them and will put them into the RECORD. I have them in a folder here, but I do not want to take the time to look at the folder. However, the maintenance is bound to increase with the increased program. It will increase next year if the number of ships in commission is increased.

I was going on to state a few of the reasons making up that necessary increase—personnel, for instance—in order to show how the Congress must expect this year an increase, and next year an increase, if the ship program is continued.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I repeat that I think the Senator renders a service when he emphasizes that fact, because in creating this larger Navy something vastly more is involved than the mere initial capital investment. A continuous subsequent investment is involved; and I was wondering if the Senator could give me this figure: Has any estimate been made as to the ultimate annual maintenance cost of the ultimate Navy as it is now projected?

Mr. BYRNES. I know the figures have been furnished me. I do not know whether they were originally furnished by the Director of the Budget or by the Navy Department; but, based upon an increased program, if it was continued it would reach a peak in the year 1945, when maintenance would cost $794,000,000 and ship construction would cost $371,000,000.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is an increase of only $94,000,000 over the maintenance figure which the Senator gives me for this year.

Mr. BYRNES. I will be fair to the Senator and say, too, that that figure is based upon the program now in existence. It has nothing to do with any proposal pending before the Congress. I should also say that there is nothing in this bill which has any reference to the proposals which are pending at this time before the legislative committee of the Senate.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Under those circumstances, of course, my question is more or less irrelevant at the moment; but can the Senator give me any figure—has any come to his attention—which would indicate the ultimate maintenance cost of the ultimate Navy as now projected?

Mr. BYRNES. I am satisfied that in the five or six volumes I have at my desk I have those figures. I could not put my hands on them immediately without causing some delay; but, based upon the requests before the committee, those figures can be obtained, and I shall endeavor to place them in the RECORD at the end of my remarks.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I shall appreciate it if the Senator will do so.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I stated that the ship program fixed in great measure the amount of the supply bill. I desire to include in the remarks I am making a statement of the number of ships for which initial funds are provided in this bill, the number of ships for which funds are provided to continue construction, and the number of ships that will be completed during this fiscal year by reason of the appropriations made at this time.

I said that the number of ships in commission regulated the number of men. Prior to September 1 we had, in the Navy, 116,000 men. When the 80 destroyers assigned to the neutrality patrol were placed in commission, the President issued an order, under the statutory authority given him, declaring the existence of an emergency, and increasing the personnel to 145,000 men. The estimates submitted to the Congress by the Navy for the next fiscal year were for 152,000 men. Your committee has not appropriated as much as the estimate, but has provided an amount which will enable the Navy to have 145,000 men, instead of the 152,000 estimated by the Navy, or the 150,000 provided for in the House bill.

In making this reduction, we are of the opinion that the original order of the President last fall fixing the enlisted personnel at 145,000 will provide sufficient men. That anticipated only 2,700 reserves. There are, in the Navy today, approximately 141,000 enlisted men. It is the belief of the Department that by June 30 the number will be 145,000. It is our belief that when the number reaches 145,000 there will be no reason for going above that figure. About a year ago the period of enlistment was made 6 years, not by reason of the emergency, but under the act of Congress authorizing the Department to change the length of enlistments. It is certainly my opinion that it is unnecessary to provide additional personnel over the 145,000. If the war abroad should cease, and the emergency be declared at an end, we would then have 150,000 men, and it would be very difficult to reduce the enlisted personnel to a much smaller number. Consequently we provide for only 145,000 men, but I am certainly very strongly of the opinion that the Department would render a real service if they would, as we have urged upon them, make an active campaign among the reservists of the country to induce them to enlist for service in the neutrality patrol. If, instead of going to sea for 2 weeks or 3 weeks a year, they could go into service upon destroyers, which would afford the best training they could have. They should have such training because, if we should ever engage in war, we would expect those men to serve upon ships in commission, and if they supplemented the enlisted personnel which we have provided, the dual purpose would be served of giving the men the superior training afforded by actual service with the regular Navy, and at the same time making it easier for us to have these volunteers retired from the service at the conclusion of the emergency, instead of having gradually to reduce the enlisted personnel from 145,000 or 150,000 to 110,000.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. My inquiry may have been partially covered by the able Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG]. Of the amount to be appropriated, practically a billion dollars, what amount would actually be used for the construction of vessels?

Mr. BYRNES. $340,371,000.

Mr. McNARY. Has the Senator a list of the vessels which will be constructed?

Mr. BYRNES. I am furnishing for the record a list of the ships for which the initial funds are provided, then the list of ships upon which funds will be spent, ships now under construction.

Mr. McNARY. I observe from the data supplied to me by the able Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] that there are eight battleships in process of construction.

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. And two upon which construction will soon start. Is that correct?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. What is the size of the two, measured in tons?

Mr. BYRNES. The two are proposed to be 45,000-ton ships.

Mr. McNARY. That will make four altogether?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. They are covered by the appropriations in this bill?

Mr. BYRNES. That is correct. I expected to refer to that, but, inasmuch as the Senator from Oregon has asked the question, I may say that the House reduced the amount of money made available for ship construction, and the Senate committee has continued the same reduction. We reduced it by $28,000,000.

I would not have the Senate under any misapprehension about that. It does not mean that there is any saving, because once these ships are started, they will be constructed. It affects only the speed of construction. I wish, however, to have it appear in the RECORD that the House committee was of the opinion that we should build ships superior in tonnage to the 45,000-ton battleships. The committee of the Senate is not of that opinion. We knew of no reason why we should delay construction of the two battleships provided for in order to determine whether we should have battleships of a greater tonnage than 45,000 tons.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator stated a moment ago that there were ten 45,000-ton battleships under construction.

Mr. BYRNES. How many?

Mr. McNARY. Ten.

Mr. BYRNES. Oh, no; I understood the Senator asked as to those provided in the pending bill, and the two provided last year.

Mr. McNARY. I was saying that there were eight now under construction.

Mr. BYRNES. But they are not all 45,000-ton ships.

Mr. McNARY. I asked that question.

Mr. BYRNES. I misunderstood the Senator. The two provided last year in the bill and the two provided in this bill was what I referred to.

Mr. McNARY. Then altogether there are four of that tonnage?

Mr. BYRNES. That is correct.

Mr. McNARY. What is the cost of those battleships, per ship?

Mr. BYRNES. That question is difficult to answer, but I will make the best answer possible. The cost is approximately $90,000,000. I say that for the reason that there is a difference between the cost of a ship built in a private yard and the cost of a ship built in a Government navy yard. Under the act of Congress they alternate between private yards and Government yards. Fifty percent must be constructed in Government yards and 50 percent in private yards. There is always an argument as to the accuracy of the estimated difference of five to seven million dollars, the argument being that in the navy yards there are not charged up to cost some of the items which should properly be charged.

I served on the Naval Affairs Committee in the House and in the Senate, and I myself have never been able to reach an accurate judgment as to that.

Mr. McNARY. There is a discrepancy of from five to seven million dollars in favor of the Government-owned yards?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes; that is the difference.

Mr. McNARY. Would there be any difference in cost as between those now under construction and the two about to be constructed?

Mr. BYRNES. There would be no difference, no.

Mr. McNARY. So that there has been no increase in the cost between last year and the present time?

Mr. BYRNES. We have no information of any increase. Of course, no contracts have been awarded, but I have given the best estimate the department could present at this time.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator a question in the same connection. How long does it take to build one of the 45,000-ton battleships?

Mr. BYRNES. Under ordinary conditions it takes 4 years. I have made investigation as to the status of the ships which are under construction, and upon investigation I find that there has not been any such speeding up of the construction of ships as has been represented in the press. As a matter of fact, the estimate furnished me today of the status of the ships under construction shows that the ships will be completed upon the dates originally contemplated, except in two instances, where there probably will be an extension of 6 months asked because they cannot be completed within the time limit provided.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Has the Senate committee given any consideration to this question: If it takes 4 years to build one of these 45,000-ton ships, may we not have acquired an entirely new conception of wise and useful naval technique by the time the 4-year period is ended if the present world war continues to instruct us?

Mr. BYRNES. Of course, that matter has been discussed daily. It is a subject to which we have all given attention. As a matter of fact, in the committee report, which I expected to discuss, the committee inserted this statement:

> In recommending for the construction program, the amount carried in the bill as it passed the House, the committee are not of the opinion that construction should be delayed for the purpose of determining the question of the construction of battleships having a tonnage in excess of 45,000 tons. While the plans for the new ships are being drafted, the Department can profit by the lessons growing out of the war in Europe. In the opinion of the committee, the construction program should be proceeded with at a normal rate in accordance with the existing plans of the Department.

The purpose of the committee in making that statement was to indicate to the Department that, so far as the Senate committee is concerned, it does not agree with the position of the House committee. Furthermore, we did not restore the amount of money asked for by the Department, but, instead, continued the reduction of $28,000,000 in the ship-construction fund.

My own opinion, from the best evidence we can secure from the naval experts, is that there is no justification for the opinion generally held as to the changes in battleships, because, after all, change must keep pace with developments, particularly in the air, as to which the development is so much greater than in the construction of battleships. But it is a question of speed, it is a question of armament, and it is a question of armor. Thus far, from the lessons of the war, there is no reason for the Navy Department, so far as I can ascertain, to change its opinion as to construction design with reference to the important features of battleships. There may be reason for change as to equipment. Nevertheless, the committee entertained somewhat the opinion which I judge the Senator from Michigan has, that as a result of the reduction in the amount of the appropriation, and by reason of the statement in the report, the Navy might proceed a little more slowly—certainly not speed up production. When in the report of the committee we ask that they proceed at a normal pace, we mean that they should proceed at the pace at which they are proceeding under existing plans, and under those plans, as I have heretofore stated, there has been no speeding up to complete the construction of ships before the time originally contemplated.

This supply bill is based, not upon anything pending in any measure in the Senate, and not upon anything that has happened in the present world war, but it is based upon a program which was determined upon by the Congress in time of peace, looking to providing for the national defense a navy which, in the opinion of the General Board, would be adequate and essential for the national defense.

Mr. VANDENBERG. But, of course, the bill does carry approximately $180,000,000 for two 45,000-ton battleships now. Is that correct?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. So this is our only opportunity to pass upon that question if we are to pass upon it at all?

Mr. BYRNES. This is the only opportunity if the purpose were to prevent the construction of those battleships; yes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I now ask the Senator whether any other countries are building 45,000-ton battleships.

Mr. BYRNES. The information our committee has is that 45,000-ton battleships are being constructed, and I think that I might as well put into the RECORD the information we have along that line. I say to the Senator that the question argued in the House was based on the assertion that ships in excess of 45,000 tons were being constructed abroad, and that we should proceed to the construction of 45,000-ton battleships. Certain information has appeared in various newspapers. Since 1936 we have been unable to secure any definite or accurate data as to the Japanese Navy. Up to 1936 we were able to secure a reasonable statement of the construction program. Since that time we have not. Therefore we can report only what we see published in the newspapers as to their program, and under that they announce only 4 battleships of 40,000 tons to 43,000 tons. But the information secured in ways satisfactory to the Navy Department, and which impresses me—I do not want to speak for the committee, but it impresses me as reasonably accurate—certainly the best information that the Government of the United States can obtain, is that the Japanese at this time are building 8 battleships, instead of 4, of from 40,000 to 43,000 tons, 8 cruisers, 4 carriers, 33 destroyers, and 20 submarines. There is a variance when we come to the Japanese figures as between those published with the names of the ships and the actual figures. It is no fault of ours, for we have followed the plan which at this minute we are following, of stating publicly in the Senate here and stating to the world, the construction program of the United States Navy. Similar information can be obtained as to the navies of Great Britain, Germany, Italy, and France. Germany is building 4 battleships. Italy is building 4 battleships at this time.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Of 45,000 tons?

Mr. BYRNES. I do not know their tonnage. If that is the tonnage, those figures are again imbedded in this mass of figures. I cannot at the moment recall. I do not have those figures in mind. But I must say it has made an impression upon me, that at the time when we have been discussing the advisability of building battleships, the Government of Germany had sufficient faith in battleships, when its situation was entirely different, to start the construction of four. Italy is constructing four. We could understand Great Britain proceeding with the construction of battleships, because her position is more like our own.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I understood the German program was that of building battleships of lesser tonnage, so-called pocket battleships of around 10,000 tons. Am I wrong about that?

Mr. BYRNES. I stated, too, that I could not answer as to the tonnage. But I have a statement of the comparative combatant strengths of sea powers, which I will put into the RECORD, and then I will endeavor to furnish along with it the tonnage of the ships of Germany, because of the Senator's inquiry.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point the table to which I have referred.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. VANDENBERG. When can the two additional 45,000-ton battleships be laid down? When can construction start?

Mr. BYRNES. It depends entirely upon a determination that has not yet been reached. If the Navy follows the exact design of the two now under construction less time would be consumed than would be required if it should have more designing to do. Ordinarily the designing takes a year. Certainly 9 months to a year is the time required for the designing of a battleship. That is a matter that has not been determined, so far as we know.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Are there construction ways available for two additional 45,000-ton battleships?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Immediately?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes. I may say that the bill carries additional amounts for facilities for shipyards. It was found that it was essential that such additional facilities be furnished, because, in the first place, we put 80 destroyers upon the sea, which required more repair work. Then, without regard to that matter, there are many things pertaining to the emergency that must be done. We had to increase the program of the Navy, and when we increased the program of the Navy it was found that the requirement that 50 percent of ships be constructed in Government navy yards made the provision for increase futile unless we were to provide the additional facilities needed. Whether or not even they will be sufficient is a question. The navy yards, of course, asked for a much larger sum. The Navy Department sent out a commission which went to the yards, made a personal investigation, reduced the amount, and then we reduced it a little on our own account.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I should like to revert briefly to the subject the Senator was discussing when he was interrupted by the able Senator from Oregon, namely, the neutrality patrol.

Do I understand that the neutrality patrol is estimated as a unit by itself? Can the Senator tell me what the neutrality patrol costs?

Mr. BYRNES. It will cost $34,000,000 next year. Of course, it costs more this year because of the number of destroyers which had to be fitted out and put into commission. But it will cost approximately $34,000,000 for the fiscal year provided for in the pending bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Can the Senator tell me, what does the neutrality patrol patrol? Does it patrol the pan-American neutrality belt, the rather fantastic thing that was laid out in the middle of the ocean?

Mr. BYRNES. I am glad the Senator asked me that question, and I can say to him that it does not. The question arose when we brought in the supplemental appropriation bill. I then took the trouble to have the Navy Department officials come here and confer with us. They had a chart, which I have before me now—and I shall be glad to show it to the Senator from Michigan—showing exactly the areas which are patrolled. I am glad to say that there is no justification for the statement which appeared that the Government is attempting to patrol the zone the Senator has in mind.

Mr. VANDENBERG. And that is not included in the bill, by the way?

Mr. BYRNES. No; that is not included. I may say that the Chief of Operations within the last 2 weeks again assured the committee that there was no justification for that assumption.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is all I wish to ask.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. KING. Then what is the function of this patrol which is to cost $35,000,000?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, when the war started the patrol was established for the primary reason of keeping the Navy of the United States advised as to the presence of belligerent ships in the waters adjacent to the coast of the United States. It does not interfere with the movement of any ships. It does advise the Department of the presence of any craft of a belligerent nation in the waters off the coast of the United States.

There is a very good reason for it, as I think the Senator will agree with me. We do not want to have any of the embarrassing incidents that have occurred elsewhere. The patrol, in my opinion, has provided a great deterrent to the ships of other nations coming into our harbors or waters adjacent to our harbors. We are still having the merchant ships of the world come into our ports, and we do not want to have any conflict within the waters of the United States if it can be avoided. It is one of those matters with respect to which we can say nothing has occurred, but we do not know what would have occurred had the ships of the Navy and the planes of the Navy not been on guard. At least the Government of the United States knows what is happening in the waters along its own coast. It does not communicate with or attempt to influence the action of belligerent ships.

The information given to the committee off the record was very conclusive of the strict adherence to our position of neutrality.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, I have in mind the fact that none of the French Fleet—and, of course, France is a belligerent—is in the waters of the Atlantic. We need not have the patrol out to determine the activities of the French Fleet. The British Fleet is pretty well occupied now in the Mediterranean and in the North Sea. The German Fleet, if not largely destroyed, at least is very busily occupied in the Skagerrak and the Kattegat. So it seems to me there is very little occasion for us to spend any considerable sum patrolling the Atlantic Ocean, or the Pacific for that matter, with the view to determining whether our position as a neutral is being violated by either of the belligerents.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I do not know what information the Senator has about it and I do not know that what he has just said can be stated with accuracy. However, the information furnished to the committee was that ships of Great Britain and ships of Germany have been within the zone patrolled by the ships of this country. As a matter of fact certain ships of the United States Government were in position where they could see one of the warships of Great Britain within a very short distance of a German ship, and wondered why she did not see the German ship. There was no information communicated by our vessels to the belligerent vessels. Ships of the German Government have also been seen in that zone. At least this Government knows what is being done. I will say to the Senator that I agree with the position of the Navy Department in that particular matter, to this extent, that the neurality patrol has served an admirable purpose in the wonderful training it has given in the destroyer service to the enlisted men and officers of the Navy.

Mr. NORRIS and Mr. LODGE addressed the Chair.

Mr. BYRNES. I yield first to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to ask the Senator if he can inform the Senate what, if any, connection our Government has had with what I thought—and still think—is a rather fantastic idea, which came from some sort of organization of nations in the Western Hemisphere, by which fighting by the belligerent nations was prohibited within 300 miles of our coast?

Mr. BYRNES. I can say to the Senator that the positive statement was made to the committee by the Chief of Operations that our Navy has had absolutely no connection with it.

Mr. NORRIS. What is the organization which issued that pronouncement?

Mr. BYRNES. I assume the Senator has reference to the conference of South American Republics.

Mr. NORRIS. Were we not represented in that conference?

Mr. BYRNES. We did not go into that question with the representatives of the Navy Department. I was confining my statement to the fact that the Navy has not at any time undertaken to patrol that zone.

Mr. NORRIS. I understood the Senator to say that.

Mr. BYRNES. This Government undertook no obligations in that connection.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator know what government, if any, of the Western Hemisphere did have any obligation by which it sought to prohibit fighting by belligerent ships within a distance of 300 miles of the coast of the Western Hemisphere?

Mr. BYRNES. I must say that I have no information other than what has appeared in the press because the question was not discussed. We were interested only in whether or not the Navy was participating; and the Navy was not participating.

Mr. NORRIS. I remember reading in the press that some fighting occurred between Germany and Great Britain within 300 miles of the Western Hemisphere. Complaint was made by some sort of organization of nations protesting against such fighting, and perhaps making some threats to stop it.

Mr. BYRNES. I must say that I am not familiar with it, but I am heartily in favor of a protest on the part of anybody against a fight on his own doorstep.

Mr. NORRIS. So am I.

Mr. BYRNES. I do not know how it could be stopped.

Mr. NORRIS. It occurred to me that our doorstep is not 300 miles in width.

Mr. BYRNES. That is the opinion of the United States Navy.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me that if our Government were engaged in war we should refuse to permit any other nation or organization of nations to prohibit our fighting the enemy within 300 miles of the shores of such nation or nations.

Mr. BYRNES. Because the Senator refers to it, I call attention to the fact that Admiral Stark made the following statement to the committee:

> Admiral STARK. That zone has been referred to frequently and has gotten to be known almost as the 300-mile zone. It extends beyond Bermuda, for example. It runs from just south of Nova Scotia practically due south until it reaches the Caribbean. It follows the islands down there and then it is a band along the coast. I will send you up a chart, if you would like to see it.

He did send us a chart, which I shall be glad to show the Senator.

> Senator HALE. Yes. But you are not pretending to patrol that zone?
> Admiral STARK. No, sir; not that entire zone. If we patrolled away out there we could not watch the focal points of shipping.
> Senator ADAMS. Well, your patrol would be the same if there had been no such declaration?
> Admiral STARK. I think it would have been exactly the same; yes, sir; covering the so-called coastal-sea lanes.

In several points in his statement the admiral advised us of his opinion, which is in accord with that statement.

Mr. McNARY and Mr. ADAMS addressed the Chair.

Mr. BYRNES. I yield first to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator very kindly answered my inquiry a moment ago regarding the size of the battleships. What is the size of the cruisers contemplated?

Mr. BYRNES. Ten thousand tons. Of course, as the Senator knows, this program has no reference to the expansion program. These are 10,000-ton cruisers.

Mr. McNARY. The table shows seven cruisers now laid down, and two to follow, under this appropriation. Are they all to be of the same size?

Mr. BYRNES. They are all to be of the same size—10,000-ton cruisers.

Mr. McNARY. What is their average cost?

Mr. BYRNES. The cost is $20,700,000; in addition, the cost of armament, and ammunition—and it is fair to take into account the supply of ammunition which must be provided for a ship upon its completion—is $7,500,000, making a total of $28,200,000.

Mr. McNARY. Does the pending bill disclose any additional cost as compared with the cost contemplated in the bill of 1940?

Mr. BYRNES. It is the same program as the 1940 program—two battleships, and the same number of cruisers.

Mr. McNARY. Has there been any increase in costs as between the ships under construction and those now contemplated?

Mr. BYRNES. There has been none. There is no contemplated increase in cost of construction of such ships.

Mr. McNARY. What percentage of the cruisers is constructed in Government-owned shipyards?

Mr. BYRNES. Fifty percent.

Mr. McNARY. And the same rule applies to battleships and cruisers?

Mr. BYRNES. The same rule applies to battleships and 10,000-ton cruisers. It does not apply to many of the smaller ships. However, as to the 10,000-ton cruisers and battleships, that is the program to be followed.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for an interrogation on a point just raised by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY].

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LUCAS in the chair). Does the Senator yield for that purpose?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. As I understand, the Senator from South Carolina says to the Senator from Oregon that there has been no increase in the cost of cruisers. As a matter of fact, has there not been an increase of 200 or 300 percent in the past 10 years?

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator from Oregon did not ask me that question. The Senator from Oregon asked whether or not, for the next fiscal year, an increase is contemplated over the cost of the vessels authorized in the 1940 bill. Of course there has been a great increase in the past 10 years.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Did we not, as recently as 1934, obtain such cruisers for $5,000,000 or $6,000,000 apiece?

Mr. BYRNES. I do not think we obtained a 10,000-ton cruiser for any such figure.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I rather think we did.

Mr. BYRNES. There has been a great increase, although I am satisfied that there has been no such increase as that suggested by the Senator. I have given the Senator from Oregon the complete figure, including armament and ammunition. There could not have been any figure of $5,000,000 or $6,000,000 for a cruiser with its armament and ammunition.

Mr. VANDENBERG. My recollection is that the figure was in that neighborhood, and that even at that figure we thought there must be considerable profiteering.

Mr. BYRNES. I must say that there is no evidence of it. The Senator knows that in the contracts for the Navy we have a provision for a 12-percent limit for profit. In my investigation of this matter last year I found that that provision amounted to something, and that in many instances the Treasury Department had obtained refunds from contractors because the amount of profit had exceeded the amount specified in the contract.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I promised to yield first to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ADAMS. My interest was aroused by the suggestion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. I have been somewhat interested in what seemed to me to be a case of very extreme presumption on the part of an assistant secretary of some department, who joined with representatives of South American countries in making over international law. They were called together in a conference for some friendly Pan-American purpose, and the country suddenly found that our representative, whoever he was, saw fit to represent the United States of America—entirely beyond his authority—in laying out a zone which might cause infinite trouble to our country if it were accepted and if we should undertake the responsibility of enforcing it. It seems to me that it ought to be made rather clear from time to time that this action was presumption, that it has not been accepted by this country, and that it is not a doctrine which this country supports.

Mr. BYRNES. Let me say, in answer to the question of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] as to the cost of the cruisers, that, while the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] has been addressing the Senate I have looked at the table, and find that a 10,000-ton cruiser laid down November 1, 1933, cost $20,475,000. That was 7 years ago. There is no question that there has been an increase from approximately $20,000,000 to $27,000,000 or $28,000,000 in that time, due to conditions which were certainly beyond the control of the committees of Congress.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Does the table which the Senator has show the cost of cruisers of the Chester class?

Mr. BYRNES. The one at which I was looking happened to be the Philadelphia. I shall ask the clerk to find the exact cost of the Chester and inform me.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. I rise to ask what increases have taken place during the past 5 years. If the Senator has not the data presently available, he may supply them for the RECORD.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I have that information. I shall take the liberty of putting into the RECORD information not merely with respect to the past 5 years, but with respect to the past 15 years. I do not mean to do so for any partisan purpose of showing standards under other administrations, because, as a matter of fact, after 1922 we were working under a limitation of armaments, and because we were proceeding under a limitation of armaments there was a lessened cost of construction.

The Senator will recall that in 1930 we sent a delegation to London. I think the whole Nation perhaps was alarmed. Our representatives included, as I recall, the then distinguished Senator from Arkansas, Mr. Robinson, whose memory we revere. Our representatives fought for the right to have a Navy equal to any navy on the face of the earth. The American delegation fought for weeks and weeks for the right to have a Navy equal to that of Great Britain, and, after a bloody battle, so to speak, in the conference room, we won, and it was conceded that we were entitled to have a Navy based on a ratio of 5–5 with Great Britain and of 5–3 with Japan. However, we did not proceed to build the Navy which we fought for the right to build. The expenditures on naval construction and the number of ships which were authorized show that it was a Navy, as Will Rogers said, solely on paper.

Beginning in 1934, the table shows there was an increase in the amount spent for the construction of ships. There had to be. Then, in December 1936, when the limitation of armament treaty expired, not by reason of any action of the United States but by reason of the action of other parties to the contract, we were obliged, in defense of this Nation, to proceed with our naval program, and the cost of the United States Navy continued to increase, until it has reached the enormous sum that now confronts us.

Occupying a position on the committee, I can speak with knowledge when I say that back in 1920, as a Member of the House of Representatives, and a member there of the subcommittee on naval appropriations, I offered to the naval bill an amendment requesting the President of the United States to call a conference with the naval powers for the purpose of limiting armaments. After the Appropriations Committee had agreed to it, on a point of order, the amendment was eliminated from the bill in the House. The bill then came over to the Senate, and the late Senator Borah, of Idaho, took up the fight. I came over to the Senate and discussed the matter with him. He succeeded in having added to the bill in the Senate the amendment which I had endeavored to have added in the other House.

Some time after that, the conference was called and, as a result, we were able to limit our naval expenditures for years; but after Japan denounced the treaty, followed by similar action on the part of Great Britain, there was no course left for this Government other than to proceed with its program. Yet today, we have not the Navy that we fought for the right to have; we have not a Navy equal in combatant strength to that of Great Britain or one on a 5–3 ratio, as to Japan.

We hear it said that we have a battleship strength of 15 battleships, but the Navy Department and its experts advise us that three of them, the New York, the Arkansas, and the Texas, without modernization, are incapable of keeping up with the rest of our battleship fleet, and that their guns must be elevated. My own thought is, whenever legislation is considered for an expansion of the Navy, if there should be any expansion, that the thing for us to do first is to modernize these three vessels, which are still upon the sea, and still effective fighting weapons, and make them equal in strength and in range to the other ships upon the sea. I would a thousand times prefer to see that done rather than to be told by the experts that we have 15 battleships on our naval list when we really have only 12, because 3 cannot keep up with the others.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the Senator a moment ago, in answer to my inquiry, said that he would give the figures as to naval appropriations for 15 years. Can he give it for 10 years? That would be a nonpartisan period, and take in both Republican and Democratic administrations. I do not want to treat this as a partisan matter. I inquire if the Senator has any record showing the annual increase from say 1931 to 1940?

Mr. BYRNES. I will say to the Senator, I have it complete, in fact, the figures really go back beyond 1915. I will furnish them for 20 years, if the Senator desires, so that there can be no question.

Mr. McNARY. Can the Senator read off the "high lights"? It will not do me any good to read the RECORD after the bill shall have been passed.

Mr. BYRNES. I will be glad to read the figures. In the year 1928—that was 12 years ago—total naval expenditures were $336,441,214.24; in 1929, $366,443,933.40.

Mr. VANDENBERG. May I ask the Senator if those figures include maintenance and construction?

Mr. BYRNES. They represent the amount expended for all purposes, including public works, aircraft, everything. It is only fair to include all expenses. The figures are broken down in this statement, if the Senator is interested, to show the various items for maintenance, aircraft, modernization, and all other expenditures.

I have given the figures for 1929, which were $366,441,214. In 1930 the total was $375,291,828.11; in 1931, $357,806,219.10; in 1932, $353,628,362.38; in 1933, $342,176,417.52; in 1934, $266,581,699.68; in 1935, $327,554,194.01; in 1936, $404,702,348.42; in 1937, $503,350,016.63; in 1938, $575,453,311.07; in 1939, $635,474,414.22.

Mr. McNARY. And for 1940, what are the figures?

Mr. BYRNES. I must say that, perhaps, the figures are not entirely accurate because the table shows, in addition——

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

Mr. BYRNES. If the Senator will permit me, I want to go on with the statement.

Mr. McNARY. May we not complete it?

Mr. BYRNES. I want to complete it, but, as I was about to say, there should be added to those amounts since 1934 additional amounts which were expended from emergency funds. The Senator will recall that relief bills included expenditures for public works and embraced certain naval expenditures; so there were expended from 1934 to 1939 amounts in addition, which amounts I will add to this statement.

Then, in 1940—and that is the year as to which the Senator asked.

Mr. McNARY. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES. In 1940, the appropriations were $915,000,000.

Mr. McNARY. And this bill calls for what?

Mr. BYRNES. It calls for $963,000,000.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator whether or not he knows that this is the final bill for this purpose this year, or whether the program anticipates a further request for appropriations for this purpose?

Mr. BYRNES. I cannot say as to that. I know statements have been made in the press purporting to quote officials of the department as asking for funds, provided there shall be passed by the Congress the bill for the expansion of the Navy. It depends entirely upon the passage by the Congress of that bill. If the Congress shall pass that bill, there may or may not be further appropriations. I would not hazard a guess about that before the enactment of the expansion bill; I did not want to invite the department to send an estimate. I have never noticed any hesitancy on the part of any department to submit an estimate once the Congress authorizes an expenditure. The question suggested by the Senator from Michigan, I submit, is to be determined hereafter. The committee has been dealing with an entirely different matter; that is, the amount of money that should be appropriated and expended under the existing authorizations.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. BYRNES. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to ask the Senator from South Carolina a question regarding the matter of battleships; and if there is a flaw in the argument, I should certainly like to have it pointed out to me.

Is it not true that the naval position of the United States is unique, and that, unlike England and unlike Japan, our oceanic routes do not run alongside of continents which are conveniently punctuated with naval bases, but that our oceanic routes run across the Atlantic and across the Pacific; that, consequently, we must have ships that can hold the sea for a long period of time, and that where one nation's naval policy may be well served by small vessels, in general our purpose may be served only by large vessels?

Mr. BYRNES. There is no question about the accuracy of the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts. Some 20 years ago I heard an argument in the House of Representatives on the question as to whether or not we should construct battleships. That question has been argued ever since, and at this time, when nations are at war, and every man is a military and naval expert, the argument is bound to become intensified; but, to my mind, it has always been very significant that even nations such as France, Italy, and Germany should build battleships, when, for the reasons set forth by the Senator from Massachusetts, they have not the same justification for building large naval vessels that we have in the United States.

We have heard the question argued that a battleship is at the mercy of the airplane. I heard a very distinguished Army officer, a good personal friend of mine, 15 or more years ago argue that battleships would all be destroyed, but, in the history of naval warfare, we find that the government without battleships is a government whose shipping is off the sea.

Mr. LODGE. Is it not true that not a single battleship has been destroyed by aircraft power?

Mr. BYRNES. I have before me, and ask to have incorporated in the RECORD at this point, the latest information, in the form of tables, as to the naval losses in the present European war abroad, showing the ships that have been destroyed or damaged, whether they are battleships, cruisers, or what other type, how destroyed, and how damaged.

There being no objection, the tables were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

Mr. BYRNES. I will yield in a moment. No battleships of the Allies have as yet been sunk by airplanes. One was sunk by a torpedo, and one battleship was claimed by Germany to have been sunk by plane, but our information is to the contrary. Only one was sunk; that was by a torpedo. There is a vast difference between the fleet of Great Britain having battleship strength and that of the United States, for the reason that the United States fortunately still has the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans on either side, and when we think of a battleship resting at anchor in a foreign harbor as a target for airplanes, we must concede that the situation in which we find ourselves is entirely different. When planes may fly 200 miles or 300 miles from an enemy base to drop bombs upon a battleship at anchor, that requires one kind of plane and one kind of success in reaching the plane's target; but when we are 3,000 miles removed from an enemy base, and we have to the north of us a neighbor that as a general thing gives us less trouble than some of the States within the Union—we are at peace with our Canadian friends, and have no fear of an enemy base there—we are not in the same danger that confronts the Allied governments and their battleships. Anyone can picture the pilot in a plane flying above a ship at anchor and relying upon a bomb sight. It is quite a different thing from meeting the battleships of the United States Navy at sea and attempting to bomb one of them, with its speed given to it for the purpose of enabling it to escape an attack. Our battleship can rely upon the aircraft defense of the fleet going up to meet a plane that meets it at sea; it can rely upon its antiaircraft guns; and then it can rely upon the armor given to it for protection, and which has been ample to protect the battleships in Great Britain's waters, even though they were at anchor.

I have always believed, from my long courthouse experience in hearing men describe shooting affairs, that there is quite a difference between shooting at a target that is stationary and shooting at a target which happens to have a gun in its hands shooting at you. When a plane flies over a battleship at anchor, it may require one kind of marksmanship, but if our fleet should meet an enemy fleet at sea, and a plane of the enemy should appear and attempt to drop a bomb upon our battleship, and meet our aircraft and our antiaircraft guns, the marksmanship of the plane might not be quite so good as if no one at all were shooting at it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator has pointed out that thus far in the present war no major battleships have been destroyed from the air. Can he point out to me how the major battleships have been of any affirmative utility to their owners?

Mr. BYRNES. There is not a German ship upon the sea.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is that the result of the other side having battleships?

Mr. BYRNES. That is the primary reason, and I imagine from the Allied strength that it is the greatest one. There is not a German ship upon the sea; and if a nation is so helpless that it cannot put a ship upon the sea, it might as well have no ships at all. Having the second-best navy has always seemed to me like having the second-best horse in a horse race.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I strongly disagree with the Senator's conclusion that it is the battleship which has swept the German shipping from the sea. I think it is the lesser units of the Navy that have done it.

Mr. BYRNES. I do not set myself up as a military or naval expert; but, according to the military experts, without a balanced fleet, one with battleships, planes, and submarines, there is no fleet; and my experience leads me to agree with that conclusion.

Today Germany is alleged to have superiority in planes. I do not know whether it really has such superiority or not, but its planes have served its purpose up to this time. Great Britain has its fleet, but is comparatively lacking in aircraft. The experts of the United States Navy believe that a safe defense for this country should be a balanced fleet—balanced with aircraft, with battleships, with cruisers, with submarines—and I must say that in a matter of that kind I bow to the experts.

There are times when I very seriously question the requests of the Navy Department for funds, because I know the enthusiasm of a man for his particular department. I should have no respect for the man in charge of engineering if he did not believe engineering the most important part of naval activities, and the same thing as to the man in charge of aviation. We must see the whole picture, and consider the whole picture, and determine what is true; but when it comes to a technical matter as to strategy, I suggest to the Senator from Michigan that it has been a great comfort to me through all my experience with the naval appropriation bills that, unlike other governments, the people of which have to look with suspicion upon a militaristic class, this Government, thanks to the best system ever devised for private and commissioned personnel, selects its officers of the Army and Navy by appointment of Senators and Members of the House of Representatives.

From Chicago there may come a boy of one nationality, his father having been born in another country. From Los Angeles there may come a boy of another nationality. From Carolina there may come another boy from the farm. They all go to the Naval Academy; and so, instead of having in charge of our fleet officers who are all alike in their views, the personnel selected furnishes the best possible cross-section of the American people.

I was interested in the attitude of the retiring Chief of Operations about 7 or 8 years ago. When I asked him what he was going to do upon retirement he said, "Well, first I am going back to a little farm where I spent my boyhood days. I doubt that I shall want to stay there, but it is my only ambition right now"; and he went back. Another naval officer expressed the same thought. We owe a debt of gratitude to the man who first proposed the selection of the officers of our Army and Navy in this most democratic of all ways; and whenever they come to us, year in and year out, with the same expert opinion, I cannot avoid paying heed to them. I might have questioned the wisdom of one man when, 15 or 20 years ago, I heard him express the opinion that the battleship was the backbone of the fleet and was essential, but the men of that day have passed on. Other Americans came into the commissioned personnel to dictate the policies of the Navy Department. They held the same view, and today there is not an officer in a responsible position in the Navy of the United States who does not believe that the backbone of the American fleet is the battleship and must remain the battleship. There is not a man in the Japanese Navy who does not hold that view. There is not an officer in the British Navy who does not hold that view. Apparently there is not one in Italy, in Germany, or in France, because those nations are spending their money for ships of that kind.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to complete my inquiry?

Mr. BYRNES. Let me conclude. As against all the expert advice of the United States Navy and the evidence of that view being held by the naval experts of all other naval powers, I hesitate to dissent from or to argue against that view.

I now yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to say so, I completely join him in my belief that we should rely upon gentlemen who know what they are talking about when the technique of defense is discussed, and I think I have never intruded any swivel-chair strategy upon the Senate so far as I am concerned.

The only question I submit to the Senator is whether or not 4 years from now—which will be the first moment when these two new 45,000-ton battleships can be completed—these experts, in whom both the Senator and I so thoroughly believe, will probably not have had an opportunity to learn something conclusive from world war naval experience, whereas it seems to me that the conclusion is not final as yet.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I do not believe the evidence will ever be conclusive, but certainly up to this time all the evidence is in favor of the battleship. At the same time it can be said that the battleships authorized will not reach, for a year and a half or two years, such a stage as will not permit the United States Navy to profit by the lessons of the present European war, because, as the Senator knows, the lessons probably will not relate to the very fundamentals of the ship, but to its armament, its equipment, and the things that are placed on it. Certainly for a year and a half we shall have the benefit of the experience gained from the present war. I agree in part with the Senator's view, and one thought I have expressed here is that we should not speed up these new ships because we can profit by the lessons of the war.

As a matter of fact, if the decision were left to me, I would speed up the construction of the ships which are near completion, because, in the disturbed condition of the affairs of the world, if one of our ships today is 85 to 90 percent complete, I should like to see it completed at the earliest possible moment. If, as a result of the disturbance, something should arise to involve us, I should want that ship upon the sea. The ships laid down in this bill, with 3½ to 4 years to go, would necessarily not be in the same position.

I believe that out of the present conflict, if civilization is to survive, there must come some kind of limitation of armament that will stop the mad race which is now proceeding; but until that time arrives we cannot afford to sit idly by, the richest government on the face of the earth, and leave ourselves undefended and unprotected. When bandits are loose upon a street, they do not attack a poor man, and they do not attack a man who has a gun in his hands. They are likely to attack a big, fat, rich, undefended man. I do not want Uncle Sam to be that man. I do not want him to be so undefended.

Mr. President, I wish to add to what I said about the Army and Navy personnel something I did not know, but which I am glad to know, that the captain of this year's Army football team is the son of parents born in Italy and that the captain of this year's Navy football team is the son of a man born in Germany.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. In reply to the question asked by the Senator from Michigan I may say that the Committee on Naval Affairs propounded to the Navy Department a large number of questions recently, which are available in some of the reports of the hearings. One relates directly to the question of the Senator from Michigan, and I should like to read it, with the answer of the Navy, which came to me only today.

Mr. BYRNES. I am very happy to have the Senator read the question and answer.

Mr. WALSH. These questions were sent to the Navy Department 2 weeks ago in anticipation of hearings. Over 50 questions of a technical character were submitted, and the officials of the Department were given ample opportunity to answer them, so that they would not be expected to make replies on the spur of the moment. This is the question and answer to which I have referred:

Question. If Germany's submarines and aircraft can overcome the British and French Navies, why continue to build ships similar to those now possessed by the British and the French?

Answer. First, it should be said that Germany's submarines and aircraft have not as yet overcome the British and French Navies and have not as yet indicated their ability to do so in the future. At the present time the British and French Navies have swept the German merchant marine from the seas and are maintaining a very stringent blockade. There is nothing to indicate as yet they will not continue to be able to maintain this sea superiority in relation to Germany. Should the German submarine and aircraft, however, succeed in overcoming the Navy of France, a neighboring nation, and of Great Britain, a nation separated from Germany by the narrow reaches of the North Sea, and thus within ready reach of short-range aircraft and numerous small submarines, it would by no means follow that German submarines and aircraft could overcome the United States Navy in a similar fashion. The position of the United States—the insular position as regards other major powers—is such as to enable it to utilize a strong Navy to keep hostile forces (in major strength) far distant from our shores. This is accomplished by the use of a seagoing Navy—battleships, carriers, cruisers, destroyers—as well as oceangoing submarines and aircraft.

I thought that might be appropriate for the RECORD as an answer from the Navy Department, given within a very few days.

Mr. BYRNES. I am very glad to have had the Senator read the question and answer.

Mr. President, I have nothing more to add, and I ask that the reading of the bill may proceed.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Michigan that I do not agree that the battleship has lost its utility as a naval weapon. In the first place, a battleship can carry heavier armament, and therefore it can shoot farther. It also carries heavier armament——

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I do think the Senator was not in the Chamber when the colloquy started. I would not want the Senator to understand that I stated I believed the battleship had lost its value. I was merely inquiring as to the relative values which might be disclosed from contemporary experience.

Mr. CONNALLY. I probably went further than the facts warranted. What I had in mind was that a study of recent naval maneuvers—for instance, the contest in South America between the cruisers of the Germans and the English—will make it perfectly apparent that the ship with the heaviest and longest range guns has a tremendous advantage. It took three cruisers to put the Graf Spee out of business, and one of those was probably disabled, because the Graf Spee's armament was of longer range and heavier, and it was only by maneuvering, laying down smoke screens, and tactics of that kind, that the English cruisers were able to dispose substantially of the Graf Spee.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I wish to make a statement in connection with the subject the Senator is discussing. Among the other questions submitted to the Navy Department was one based upon statements presented on the floor of the House of Representatives. One of the statements made on the floor of the House, which appears on page 1551 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 16, 1940, was as follows:

It has been stated that bombing accuracy has increased to such an extent that 8 out of 10 bombs dropped from an altitude of 14,000 feet will hit a 12-foot target.

This question was asked by my committee, through me as chairman, of the Navy Department:

Has bombing accuracy increased to the extent stated?

This was the answer:

No; but it is considered that this country is considerably in advance of foreign countries in the development of bomb sights and bombing accuracy.

Question 25. Is there any recent evidence to show that battleships or other surface craft are obsolete as a result of increased efficiency of bombing from aircraft?

Answer. In view of the controversial aspects of this ever-present and important question, it is answered at some length.

There is no recent evidence to show that battleships or other surface craft are obsolete as a result of increased efficiency of bombing from aircraft. The manner of employment of naval vessels has been affected by the comparatively new form of attack from the air, and the armament, armor, and protection of ships has been adapted to resist damage as far as practicable.

All new weapons of importance have had their effect on naval strategy, tactics, and on naval construction. In the case of aircraft, as in the case of weapons such as the torpedo, submarine, and high-powered gun, the threat of attack has been anticipated by the inclusion in naval vessels, from destroyer to battleship, of appropriate counterweapons and powers of resistance. Increased power and effectiveness of antiaircraft batteries, increased speed and maneuvering ability, increased thickness of deck armor, and greater compartmentation are all characteristics included to resist air attack. In addition, naval air forces are employed, both offensively and defensively, to reduce the effectiveness of enemy aircraft. By these means, and by appropriate consideration of enemy air strength in the carrying out of strategic and tactical operations, aircraft attack is effective only to a degree compatible with the introduction of any additional and important weapon.

Air power has not seriously affected British control of the sea lanes of the world. It has, in a restricted area, comparatively close to its home bases, become of increasing effect against ships and shipping within range of these bases. After 7 months of war, in which the immediate major objective has been the reduction of the sea strength of Great Britain, relatively small damage has been done by air attack from German advance bases located 480 to 560 miles from the British Fleet bases. The principal menace and effect has been against commercial shipping in certain localized areas and ports. The proximity of British seaports to German air bases may result in continuing, and perhaps increasing, damage to this localized shipping unless the British counteraction becomes more effective.

The United States is not confronted with the same situation with regard to its home ports and shipping centers. They are not only farther from tenable enemy air bases, but they cover a wider area and are available in two oceans. These considerations stress the importance of the recommendations of the Navy Department with respect to home and advanced air bases so located as to best cooperate with the fleet in the establishment and maintenance of control of coastwise sea lanes and important overseas lines of communication and trade.

Manifestly all naval powers have given serious consideration to the effectiveness and relative security (ability to remain effective) of naval ships against all threats contemplated under the conditions of their employment in war. It is significant that all are continuing their naval-building programs. The heavily gunned and heavily armored battleship, built to withstand the plunging fire of the heaviest armor-piercing projectiles, is least affected by air developments. Even admitting the practicability of accurate bombing in the face of determined resistance of air forces and antiaircraft weapons, the heavy bomb, with its restricted ability to penetrate armor plate, is certainly less potent than the heavy shell. That these views are held by all of the principal naval powers, including the belligerents in the present wars, is indicated by the recent completion and continued building of battleships as follows:

	Recently completed	Building
(1) Germany	2	4
(2) Italy	2	2
(3) Japan	0	8(?)
(4) Great Britain	0	9
(5) France	2	4
(6) United States	0	8

The latent effect of preponderant battleship strength is frequently overlooked by the lay mind due to the absence of the drama of the frequent naval and air battles of lesser naval war craft. Whether actively engaged or not, battleship strength, around which are shaped the activities of lesser craft, is of preponderant effect in the control of sea lanes and areas.

In summation, the development of aircraft bombing has had its effect on the constitution of naval forces as to type and on their employment. Aircraft alone, or battleships, or cruisers, or destroyers alone are unable to control the sea. Together, in properly constituted forces, supported by suitable and properly located bases, they can. So long as other nations possess armed surface ships, and so long as the free use of the seas is a national need, a navy of adequate surface, subsurface, and air strength in suitable proportion is necessary. Developments in the art of war and in the international situation will undoubtedly change the acceptable composition of the fleet and will cause modification in the characteristics of ships and aircraft, but there are no developments apparent which will render obsolete surface ships of existing types or the basic principles under which they are employed in the national defense.

It may be pertinent to quote from a recent report (July 1936) of the British Committee of Imperial Defense, which went exhaustively into the question of vulnerability of capital ships to air attack. This report sustained the British building policy and included these significant words: "The advocates of the extreme air view would wish this country to build no capital ships (other powers still continuing to build them). If their theories turn out well-founded, we have wasted money; if ill-founded, we would, in putting them to the test have lost the Empire". It is British preponderance of naval power that has gained control of sea-borne trade and denied this trade to Germany. It is German preponderance of air power which threatens allied and neutral trade in comparatively restricted zones near German bases. Neither of these facts point to the obsolescence of surface men-of-war or the superiority of air power. They merely point to the restricted effectiveness of unbalanced military or naval forces.

In this connection it is interesting to note that Germany, in spite of her preponderance of air power, has recently completed two capital ships and is proceeding with the building of four more.

I thank the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator from Massachusetts for his contribution.

One of the reasons why no more battleships have been sunk by bombs from the air is that those responsible for building the navies have made use of heavy armor, which formerly was not so extensively used, because there was not the need for it. In all forms of warfare, whenever an offensive weapon is invented, the next step is the invention of a defensive weapon against it. It is like arguments on the floor of the Senate; one Senator makes a speech in favor of one point and some other Senator meets that with a counterattack with some other argument. It is the same with military and naval affairs.

As a result of the fear which all have entertained of attack from the air, defensive measures have been adopted. But when a bomb hits a battleship, as a rule it destroys some of the superstructure, some of the deck house, some of the turrets, probably, but it does not reach the inside of the ship and therefore does not sink the ship.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, if it gets into the ship, it gets into only one compartment, and there are many compartments.

Mr. CONNALLY. There are many bulkheads all over the ship, different compartments and different bulkheads, and, as suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts, a bomb does not do much damage, except probably to one compartment. So, it is my belief that we cannot rely upon any one arm. We cannot say, "Well, we will merely have a fleet of airplanes; that is all we need," or "We will have a fleet of cruisers, and that is all we need." We have to have a balanced fleet, and the basis of the fleet, of course, is the heavy battleship; then the fast cruisers, the cavalry of the sea; then the destroyers for more mobile employment; then submarines; and, finally, aircraft, which, of course, is merely a supplementary agency of the Navy.

Mr. President, I have always been in favor of a strong navy. I think the United States should have the best navy in the world. We are flanked by two oceans, and the only way in which we can protect ourselves is by dominating those two oceans. It does not do any good to dominate a creek somewhere when the ocean is where the enemy will appear. A navy costs a great deal of money, but it does not cost us as much as a war would cost us. I think it is the duty of the American people to provide an incomparable navy, one which will have no superior on the sea, and I am prepared to vote the necessary funds. I see the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] in his place. He reminded us yesterday that we did not have the funds; but we probably can borrow them or get them in some other way.

Mr. ADAMS. Perhaps we might print the money.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not advocate that, and I am surprised to hear the Senator from Colorado advocate it.

Mr. ADAMS. I am not advocating it; I am merely uttering a warning of what might happen.

Mr. CONNALLY. I withdraw what I said. I know the Senator from Colorado does not advocate it, but I do not like to have him even suggest it. There are Senators, perhaps, upon whose ears that might fall with a pleasant sound, like seed on fertile ground.

Mr. President, I shall vote to provide the additional battleships, but not because of apprehension of any imminent danger of attack. The United States is not going to become involved in the European war. I think the Neutrality Act which we passed affords absolute assurance that we will not get into the present war. The only way we could get into it would be by some foreign nation attacking us, and no foreign nation is going to attack us, especially if it knows we have a navy capable of meeting its navy and destroying it, and that is what we have.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I agree with what the Senator is saying.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. But my mind turns back to a long time ago, just before, during, and just after the World War. Under the administration of President Wilson we built up a navy that was certainly the equal, and probably the superior, of any navy on the seas.

Mr. CONNALLY. In some categories it was superior and in others not.

Mr. McKELLAR. We had finished building most of our warships; I believe all but three. Shortly before we completed those three a disarmament conference was called in Washington, and our own delegates to that conference agreed to sink our splendid new battleships, whose cost, as I remember, was approximately half a billion dollars, and they were sunk.

Mr. WALSH. Their cost was approximately $300,000,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. It was more than that. We spent nearly one-half billion dollars for the building of new battleships. They were taken into the ocean and sunk, where they could never do anyone any good.

Mr. President, when we build this navy—and we should have as good a navy as exists in the world—I think it would be wise to put into the measure providing for its construction a provision that after we shall have built that navy at such an enormous cost to our people, no one shall be authorized hereafter to sink it needlessly and without any excuse whatsoever.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Tennessee, and I want to make a confession. I was a Member of the other House at the time to which the Senator refers, and I offered an amendment in that body seeking to provide for the calling of the disarmament conference in question, which was afterwards called by reason of Senate action in placing an amendment on a naval appropriation bill.

Mr. President, no fault can be found with that sort of an idea, but the British and Japanese simply outtraded us. They met in the conference, and the delegates from the United States, Mr. Hughes and others, were so anxious and were under such a tremendous pressure to bring about an agreement, that they were outswapped, outtraded. We then had warships in the course of construction. Our delegates took the view that it was cheaper not to finish the new ships, and to keep the old ones. In the long run it probably would have been more economical to have completed the new ships and done away with some of the old ones.

Mr. President, no fault can be found with the idea of disarmament so long as we are not outtraded. But in the conference in question we simply were outtraded, and that is all there was to it. I think the Senator from Tennessee will agree with me that certain other nations outtraded us.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes. By the way, I was one of the very few who did not vote for the agreement resulting from that conference. I felt I could not vote for it at that time, and I feel I could not vote for such an agreement now. I think there has been no greater waste of the people's money in the history of this Government than there was in the sinking of brand new ships under the so-called disarmament treaty of 1922, a treaty which never did us any good, and which the other nations that entered into the agreement have not lived up to just as they do not live up to any other agreements. I think it is time for us to look after America.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me say to the Senator from Tennessee that I think it was the disarmament conference of 1922 that prompted the late lamented Will Rogers to observe that the United States had never lost a war but never had won a conference.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is true, and it is an admirable way of expressing the idea.

SELECTION SYSTEM AND PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I submit a conference report and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The conference report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4929) to amend the act of June 23, 1938 (52 Stat. 944), having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 10, and 11.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 5, 6, and 9, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: Section 9, subsection (b), change the period to a colon and add the following proviso: "Provided, That officers who are or who may hereafter be assigned to engineering duty only or to aeronautical engineering duty only may be recommended for retention in addition to the number equal to the percentage furnished to the board by the Secretary of the Navy"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended to read as follows:

"(d) The recommendations of selection boards in the case of officers who are now or may hereafter be assigned to engineering duty only or to aeronautical engineering duty only shall be based upon their comparative fitness for the duties prescribed for them by law. Upon promotion they shall be carried as additional numbers in grade. Officers assigned to engineering duty only or to aeronautical engineering duty only shall succeed to command on shore only when designated to do so by the Secretary of the Navy."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment inserted the following: "Provided further, That all such officers who were transferred to an appointment in the permanent grades or ranks in the Navy pursuant to the Act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat. 812), and who were on July 21, 1939, assigned to duty involving flying shall be retained on the active list until June 30, 1944, and they may become eligible for selection as provided and as limited in subsection (d) of this section: And provided further, That any officer who was placed on the retired list in the grade of commander on June 1, 1939, or who was or may hereafter be placed on the retired list in the grade of commander pursuant to this subsection after June 1, 1939, who had not or shall have not completed twenty-three years of service for pay purposes at the time of retirement shall receive from the date of his retirement retired pay computed at the rate provided for officers who have completed twenty-three years of service for pay purposes,"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 8: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"(m) To meet emergency or special needs of the Navy, the President is hereby authorized to retain on active duty, or to order to active duty if retired, not more than two officers above the grade of captain in the Navy. While serving on active duty such officers shall have the highest grade or rank held by them on active duty and receive the full pay and allowances of the highest grade and the personal money allowance of the highest rank held by them on active duty exclusive of flight or submarine pay. Officers retained on or ordered to active duty pursuant to this subsection shall become additional numbers in their grades, and if of the rank of admiral or vice admiral shall be in addition to the number of admirals and vice admirals otherwise authorized by law. Nothing contained in this subsection shall be construed as repealing other provisions of law under which officers may be retained on active duty or under which retired officers may be ordered to active duty."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Strike out the matter inserted by said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 13: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 2. Any officer who may heretofore have been placed on the retired list pursuant to the provisions of section 13 or subsection 15 (e) of the Act of June 23, 1938 (52 Stat. 944), or both of them, shall receive the retired pay of a rear admiral of the upper half."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 14: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Change the number of "Sec. 4" to "Sec. 3" and the date of "January 3, 1940" to "January 3, 1941,"; and the Senate agree to the same.

DAVID I. WALSH,
MILLARD E. TYDINGS,
FREDERICK HALE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

CARL VINSON,
P. H. DREWRY,
M. J. MAAS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. WALSH. I move the adoption of the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. In order that the RECORD may be complete, I ask unanimous consent that a memorandum explanatory of the amendments covered in the report be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the memorandum was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Amendment No. 1: The Senate recedes. The effect of this is: The commander in chief of the United States Fleet may not serve on selection boards for the selection of officers.

Amendment No. 2: The Senate recedes. The effect of this is: Medical records, along with the other official records of officers, will be furnished to the selection board for its consideration in the selection of officers.

Amendment No. 3: The House recedes with an amendment. The House amendment modifies the Senate language so as to permit the retention of officers assigned to engineering duty only or aeronautical engineering duty only in addition to those representing the percentage furnished the board by the Secretary of the Navy.

Amendment No. 4: The House recedes with an amendment. The House amendment is identical with the Senate amendment except as follows: Engineering duty only officers shall succeed to command ashore only when designated to do so by the Secretary of the Navy.

Amendment No. 5: The House recedes. This strikes out the House provision which required the reports of the selection board to include a statement giving reasons actuating the selection of every officer recommended for selection and the reasons for passing over those officers not recommended for selection.

Amendment No. 6: The House recedes. This strikes out the so-called Ditter amendment adopted on the floor of the House. The purpose of the Ditter amendment was to promote both fitted and best fitted officers to fill vacancies. It also provided that officers found fitted for promotion should be restored to the place they originally held on the Navy list.

Amendment No. 7: The House recedes with an amendment. The effect of this is: Officers who were transferred to the permanent Navy pursuant to the act of June 4, 1920, and who were on July 21, 1939, assigned to duty involving flying shall be retained on the active list until June 30, 1944. It also provides that commanders placed on the retired list shall receive retired pay computed on a basis of at least 23 years' commissioned service.

Amendment No. 8: The House recedes with an amendment. This strikes out the Senate provision which permitted rear admirals to retain on the retired list the highest rank that they held while in active service. It now permits the President to retain on active duty or recall to active duty two officers above the grade of captain and provides that these two officers while employed on active service shall have the rank and the pay of the highest rank that they held while on active service.

Amendment No. 9: The House recedes. This strikes out the House provision which would have prevented the counting of temporary and Reserve commission service for retirement purposes.

Amendment No. 10: The Senate recedes. This increases from eight to nine the number of annual vacancies that must be maintained each year in the grade of admiral, else a selection board is to select admirals out of the service.

Amendment No. 11: The Senate recedes. This strikes out the Senate amendment which repealed the existing law which requires that a specified average number of annual vacancies in the grade of rear admirals in the Navy and in the grade of general officers of the line in the Marine Corps be maintained.

Amendment No. 12: The House recedes with an amendment. This strikes out both the House and the Senate amendments which established a selection for retention system in the grade of admiral in the Navy and the grade of general in the Marine Corps.

Amendment No. 13: The House recedes with an amendment. The effect of this is: It grants General Mead the retired pay but not rank of a major general on the retired list.

Amendment No. 14: The House recedes with an amendment. The effect of this is: The board appointed to investigate and report upon the question of promotion and retirement of officers of the staff corps of the Navy and officers assigned to engineering duty only and aeronautical engineering duty only shall make its report to the Congress on January 3, 1941, instead of January 3, 1940.

CITIZENSHIP DAY

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 437) authorizing the President of the United States of America to proclaim Citizenship Day for the recognition, observance, and commemoration of American citizenship, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. CHANDLER, Mr. MILLER, and Mr. WILEY conferees on the part of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That concludes the committee amendments.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, earlier in the day I requested the able Senator in charge of the bill [Mr. BYRNES] to state the amount of money to be expended for construction. What amount of this huge appropriation is for maintenance?

Mr. BYRNES. It would be difficult to say offhand. In addition to the amount I read for construction costs—approximately $300,000,000 for construction of ships—there are many other items, for construction of aircraft, and so forth. There is a break-down.

Mr. McNARY. That would leave approximately $750,000,000 for maintenance.

Mr. BYRNES. I do not think that would be quite a fair conclusion.

Mr. McNARY. I am simply in pursuit of information. I am curious to know, and I want the RECORD to show, how much of this large appropriation is for maintenance.

Mr. BYRNES. I understood the inquiry of the Senator. I regret that I do not have the answer in mind. I have put into the RECORD the figures for maintenance for every other year, and I shall have the figures broken down and put into the RECORD for this year. It would not follow from my statement as to the amount for construction of ships that the remainder of the appropriation is for maintenance, because some of it is for construction of other things. I have asked the clerk to ascertain the exact amount, so that I may give it to the Senator while the bill is still under consideration.

Mr. McNARY. I should prefer to have the information today, if we are to pass the bill today, rather than tomorrow.

Mr. BYRNES. I have asked the clerk to ascertain the figures, and he is now working on them.

Mr. McNARY. Will that information consist of a break-down?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. I shall withhold further questions until it is offered for the RECORD.

Mr. BYRNES. I will say to the Senator that it involves excluding the amount for some public works, for example. I have in the break-down the amount for construction of aircraft.

Mr. McNARY. Does the break-down show the number of officers, high and low, and their salaries, as well as the number of employees, and the average wages?

Mr. BYRNES. No.

Mr. McNARY. How much of the figure for maintenance is represented by wages?

Mr. BYRNES. I can give the figure as to maintenance. The information does not show the exact number of commissioned personnel. I can give the Senator the enlisted personnel and the cost, but I cannot break it down to show the compensation of the officers of various grades.

Mr. McNARY. Does the break-down indicate the number of officers of all ranks?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes; all the commissioned officers.

Mr. McNARY. And the aggregate salaries or compensation?

Mr. BYRNES. The break-down will show the aggregate; yes.

Mr. McNARY. I should like to have that information. If we are considering this bill as an appropriation for expanding the Naval Establishment for national defense, I do not understand why three-fourths of the appropriation should be used for maintenance.

Mr. BYRNES. It depends on the definition of "maintenance." As I stated to the Senator, $100,000,000 is for the aviation branch of the Navy Department. Of that amount, $46,000,000——

Mr. McNARY. That is not for construction of ships or planes, is it?

Mr. BYRNES. Forty-six million dollars is for construction of planes.

Mr. McNARY. Of the $100,000,000, $46,000,000 is for the construction of planes?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. And the remainder is for personnel?

Mr. BYRNES. Oh, no. In addition to construction, it involves the servicing and repair of planes, which items increase with the number of planes. The amount for personnel would not be any such figure. I should have in mind the exact amount for personnel. I have it among the papers.

Mr. McNARY. I do not expect the Senator to have it in his mind. That is too big a chore for anyone.

Mr. BYRNES. I am unable to give it to the Senator. I was trying to calculate it in my mind. By reason of the reduction of 5,000 men which we made, there was a reduction of approximately $10,000,000, but I shall have to ask the clerk to ascertain for me the exact number of personnel and the amount for commissioned personnel and enlisted men. I shall hand the information to the Senator within 5 or 10 minutes.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I understand that the bill is now open to amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. LODGE. I offer an amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 48, lines 20 and 21, it is proposed to strike out "of which amount not to exceed $20,000,000 shall be available" and in lieu thereof to insert the following: "all of which shall be obligated prior to July 1, 1941, and not to exceed $20,000,000 of which shall be available."

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, this is a very simple amendment. The purpose of it is to make sure beyond any doubt that the money which is appropriated in this bill for new airplanes for the Navy shall be devoted entirely to acquiring new airplanes for the Navy before the end of the next fiscal year. Congress has repeatedly expressed itself in favor of a proper air force for the United States Navy, and has authorized the construction of a large number of airplanes for that purpose. The appropriation in the pending bill calls for 352 new airplanes for the Navy. At the present time we have the policy of helping foreign nations to buy American-made airplanes. This amendment does not oppose that policy. It simply provides that the Navy shall have its regular quota, even if some of the foreign nations may have to wait a little while.

My amendment has been worked out with the officers of the Navy Department. Admiral Towers, Chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics of the Navy Department, has expressed himself to me as in sympathy with it. It is within the rule; it is not legislation on an appropriation bill, and it simply makes sure the Navy will get its quota.

I presented this amendment in the subcommittee where, as I recall, the vote was 4 to 3 in opposition to it, and then again in the full committee, where the vote was 10 to 7.

The only argument I have heard advanced against it, if it can be called an argument, is that if there should be a disarmament conference next spring the Navy would have to buy 352 new airplanes, and that would be the straw that would break the camel's back of world peace.

Mr. President, I do not think that is a very impressive argument. I think Senators are perfectly capable of making up their own minds as to the possibility of a disarmament conference during the next fiscal year, and also as to the question of whether the mere fact that the United States Navy was directed to acquire 352 new airplanes would be sufficient to prevent the arrival of world peace.

It is, in the language of the business world, a case of "execute or cancel." If we are going to appropriate this money for airplanes, let us be sure that the money is all obligated for that purpose. Let us either fish, cut bait, or row ashore. Let us make it perfectly clear that, regardless of what our sympathies with foreign nations may be, we believe in preparedness for ourselves, and let us adopt this amendment which will insure that no matter what happens in the foreign field the United States Navy will be properly equipped with airplanes.

The amendment is not aimed at any foreign country; it is not antianything; it is a pro-American amendment; and it will simply mean, if it shall be adopted, that the United States Senate will have recorded itself in favor of the United States Navy.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, when the Senator from Massachusetts first offered this amendment it provided that the Navy, by June 30, 1941, must spend the amount of money that was carried in this bill. That meant if the airships which they thought best for the purpose of national defense could not be delivered, they would have to buy any kind of planes in order to get rid of the money. Ordinarily in the appropriation bills we have provided funds for expenditure by departments without any requirement that those in control of the Department would either have to spend it or go to jail, for instance. There is never any lack of desire on the part of officials of the departments to spend money appropriated for them.

When the Senator's amendment provided that the money appropriated must be spent by the end of the fiscal year 1941, I knew that there might arise a situation toward the end of the year when we would have such a condition that it would be called "hot money" and the Department would have to get rid of it. The Senator then changed his amendment and it now reads:

> To require the obligation by the Department of the amount of cash provided in this bill for planes.

Of the amount provided, only $21,000,000 would be affected. Twenty million dollars is appropriated for the payment of planes already contracted for which will be delivered during the fiscal year. Twenty-one million dollars is available for contracts for new planes.

The Chief of the Aviation Bureau urged the committee to increase the amount of money that would be available for the purchase of planes. There was no intimation on the part of those in charge of the purchase of planes that they would withhold the obligation of the purchase of planes; on the contrary, they want more money than is provided in this bill for the purchase of planes.

Under the circumstances the amendment would not accomplish the purpose the Senator originally had in mind. The amendment would do nothing more now than require the Navy Department to place contracts for $21,000,000 worth of planes before the expiration of the fiscal year 1941. If the Department should not make contracts and should not obligate the $21,000,000 before the end of the fiscal year, the only result would be that the money would go back into the Treasury. That is what Admiral Towers, Chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics, advised the Senator from Massachusetts.

Boiled down, it means then that, on the one hand, if the bill provides appropriations for the Navy Department just as appropriations are provided for all other departments, this money will be available to the Chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics, and he must contract for planes of the value of $21,000,000 before June 30, 1941.

The Chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics advised the committee and advised the Senator from Massachusetts that he expects to obligate the $21,000,000 immediately after the beginning of the new fiscal year. He would like to have more money to obligate. There can be no question about its being obligated.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

Mr. BYRNES. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. I assume from the argument that the language of the amendment is mandatory and that the implication is that what the amendment proposes must be done?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator is saying now that it is the intention of those in charge of the Department to do this particular thing?

Mr. BYRNES. I am saying that, if it is not done, the money goes back into the Treasury.

Mr. McNARY. What objection, then, can there be to including this language in the bill?

Mr. BYRNES. There is this objection: I say that if it is not obligated it goes back into the Treasury. That would be the penalty on the Navy Department for not obligating it. To my mind that would be no penalty. If the amendment were adopted, the money would not under any circumstances go back into the Treasury.

Mr. McNARY. The money will be expended anyway; will it not?

Mr. BYRNES. It is my belief it will be, and that is the statement of the Chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics.

Mr. McNARY. So why not include it in the bill?

Mr. BYRNES. Then, why include it in the bill? My reason is that such a provision has never been included in any other bill, except, as I recall, in two instances. In the history of the Congress it has been done only twice. It was done then only because the member of the Cabinet in charge of the expenditure of funds refused to spend the money for the purposes it was appropriated for by the Congress, and the subsequent Congress required the expenditure. In this case there is no refusal on the part of the executive department to expend the money. Why should the Congress say to this one particular bureau this money must be contracted for whether you want to or not?

Mr. McNARY. Let us put the amendment in the bill simply to "make assurance double sure." There will be some satisfaction in that.

Mr. BYRNES. If it is not made certain, what is the penalty? The penalty is that it goes back into the Treasury. Would it not be a fortunate thing at some time in the existence of the Government if money was not expended and went back into the Treasury? That is the only purpose of framing the appropriation bills as they are framed.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair). Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. WILEY. Is it not the crux of the whole matter that we want to know that the Navy will have the airplanes for use in case they are needed? In other words, there is much discussion about what we are doing in America in relation to airplanes. I read in the press not long ago something to the effect that we were going to be so efficient at the end of a certain term, a year or so, that we would be able to produce about 1,500 airplanes a month. I was informed by a Senator just a few moments ago that the production in America in January was only 351 planes.

The point, as I get it, of the Senator's amendment is to make sure that if there is going to be a minimum of airplanes produced we, at least, will have them, and not some foreign country. What are the facts as to the production of airplanes?

Mr. BYRNES. I know what the Senator refers to. I have inquired about that. It is somewhat difficult to make a definite statement, because there can only be an estimate. However, the best estimate of the officials of the Navy Department and the Bureau of Aeronautics is in accord with the statement suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin, not based on what was done last January but based upon the expansion of facilities now going on in this country, that within 12 months it would be possible to produce in this country at least 1,500 planes a month. There is not any question about the increase of plant capacity.

Another reason why I object to the amendment is that there is no justification for questioning the Navy Department. The records of the Navy Department show no delay in the purchase of planes. Only one instance arose, and that was in the case of the Brewster Co., involving 44 planes which the Finns wanted. An unusually effective engine had been developed, and the Navy Department wanted to have that engine included in its planes; and when it inquired as to including it, it found it would cost a great deal of money to change the planes in order to put the new engine into the planes. The Brewster Co. then advised the Navy Department that they had an order from the Finnish Government for 44 planes. Six or eight of the planes had already been delivered to the Finns. The entire 44 planes were delivered to the Finns; and, as a result, the Navy Department got 44 other planes equipped with the new engine which were 30 miles an hour faster than the ones they had contracted for, without paying an additional dollar for them; and no delay was occasioned to the Navy, because the Navy had arranged with the Army in the meantime to furnish planes to be sent to Florida, where there is a training school for aviators. No delay was involved; and, as a matter of fact, we know that this expansion has been going on, and there is not any question about our getting planes.

The Navy Department advises me that the Pratt-Whitney Co. had a contract for 200 fighting planes; and, because of the plant expansion, the Pratt-Whitney Co. advised the Navy that they could reduce the unit price to such an extent that the Navy Department saved $584,000 on the planes.

So there is not any occasion for questioning the statement of the Navy. If anyone wants to question the statements of the Navy, he has the assurance that all that will happen, if the money is not spent, is that it will go back into the Treasury. Therefore, why for the first time in the history of action upon a naval appropriation bill require that the money be obligated and not permitted under any circumstances to go back into the Treasury?

That is not the reason for this amendment, however. The Senator from Massachusetts has stated the reason. The Senator from Massachusetts simply wants the Senate to go on record as stating that the Senate believes that this money which the Navy is asking for planes will not be obligated by somebody in authority in the Navy Department, but will be held back. He wants the Senate to say that it believes the Navy would do that to the injury of the national defense of this country. There is nothing in the history of the Navy Department to justify it. If the Navy Department refused to spend the money, it would be different.

The Senator says the statement was made by the admiral in charge of the Bureau that he had no objection to his proposal. I shall read what the admiral said. I have a letter which was written on the day following; and the substance of that letter, boiled down, is this:

> The proposal first advanced by Senator LODGE to incorporate language in the bill requiring that we expend during the fiscal year 1941 the entire amount of the cash appropriation for new aircraft might well be a serious handicap to us. Aircraft are paid for upon delivery, and, while our estimates of cash requirements are based upon anticipated deliveries, they are at best only an intelligent guess. * * *
> Moreover, it would be necessary to contract for the entire year's program immediately in order to utilize the full year productively.

Mr. LODGE. That language does not apply to this amendment.

Mr. BYRNES. No; I am going to get down to it. I am trying to find the place in the letter which does refer to it. This letter was written after the Senator offered the amendment he now has; but I must say the first part of it refers to the expenditure.

Then the Admiral says:

After discussing the above matter with you yesterday afternoon, I saw Senator LODGE and discussed it briefly with him. He told me that while he had intended endeavoring to get language inserted requiring actual "expenditure" of the cash, he had decided to substitute "obligation", and asked me if I saw any objection. I told him that obligation was a usual practice and is intended for next year, and that there was no need for any language requiring it.

And this is what the Chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics says:

It is, in fact, required under the law; otherwise unobligated funds revert to the Treasury.

That is the position of the Chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics—that what is proposed in the amendment is unnecessary because it is now required by law, and there is not any necessity for adopting language which would even intimate that the Chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics is not going to contract for the delivery of these planes.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I should like briefly to rebut some of the arguments made by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McKELLAR in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I wish to address myself briefly again to the amendment, the effect of which would be to earmark 352 airplanes for the Navy regardless of what the policy may be insofar as furnishing airplanes to foreign governments is concerned.

I will try to take up the various points the Senator from South Carolina raised. One of the points to which he referred was the fact that there was not precedent for a motion of this kind. That is an argument which never has a very strong appeal to me. If something is good, we should do it even if it has never been done before. I am sure the Senator from South Carolina, like many other Senators, has not hesitated to vote in favor of policies which were unprecedented when he thought they were good.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator has a very distinguished example in the White House of the policy to which he adverts.

Mr. LODGE. I am grateful to the Senator from Michigan for reminding me of that. I think no one has been less bothered by precedents than has the President of the United States himself.

As a matter of fact, this is not an unprecedented course. I will not burden the Senate with many details, but I have a memorandum prepared for me by the Senate counsel, and I will quote just one sentence from it, without bothering to read all the instances. He states:

The purpose of the amendment is not novel, but is in conformity with well-recognized practices and principles.

I am particularly struck with the fact that there is a precedent for doing this in the speech the able Senator from South Carolina delivered earlier in the day in support of appropriating funds for battleships. I listened to that able utterance with great admiration, and I jotted down some of the words the Senator used. When he was referring to a battleship, he said:

I want it finished. I want that ship upon the sea.

Mr. President, that is exactly the philosophy I seek to apply to these airplanes; I want to see them built for the Navy. I want to see them in the air, flying for the United States Navy.

Mr. President, the Senator says that to vote for an amendment of this kind is to cast some sort of reflection upon the patriotism of the Navy Department, and upon the conscientiousness of the Chief of the Bureau of Naval Aeronautics. Of course, nothing is further from my thought, and I think nothing is further from the truth. Admiral Towers, who is the head of the Bureau of Naval Aeronautics, is an able and excellent officer. If I am not mistaken, he was one of the first men ever to fly across the Atlantic. He is in every way a patriot. But the real answer is that naval policy is not finally decided in the Navy Department. When we come to the neutrality patrol, who decides that? It is not the Navy Department that decides it; it is decided by the State Department; it is decided by the President; it is decided by a host of other officials. It is not decided by the men in uniform. When we go to a disarmament conference at Geneva or have a disarmament conference in Washington, it is not the Navy Department which decides the policy that is to be followed. That is a question of foreign policy; it is a question of diplomacy; it is a question involving many other factors.

Of course, the Navy Department wants to have these planes, and that is why they are in sympathy with this amendment. But they do not decide the matter. In answer to the question of the Senator from South Carolina when he asked, "Why include it?", I say there are forces and influences which are superior to the Navy Department which might sometime say, "Well, we will just let the Navy go without its planes this year." This is in no way a reflection on the patriotism of the Navy. It is merely an attempt to make sure that civilian influences and political influences and diplomatic influences will not come in sometime next year and prevent the Navy from getting its quota of 352 airplanes.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Will the able Senator tell us why we are not getting these planes? We voted for some thousands of planes for the Navy last year; 6,000, I believe. What became of them?

Mr. LODGE. I think 40 of those planes went to Finland. My able friend the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY], who is a close student of these matters, and who has traveled all over the United States visiting airplane factories as a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, advises me that in January the total production of airplanes in this country was 351.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LODGE. I will yield to the Senator as soon as the Senator from Minnesota has concluded his questions.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Is it not true that a part of our Army and Navy has been transferred to the Allied Powers in fighting planes? Is there anything to the report we see in the press that these planes are going to the allied nations?

Mr. LODGE. I do not know whether there is or not, but the persistence of the report, and the constant recurrence of authoritative dispatches stating that our aviation industry is going to be devoted to foreign purposes, leads me to believe that my proposal would provide an excellent safeguard.

I now yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, when the statement was made on the floor of the Senate a few days ago that the capacity of our airplane factories was measured by the output of January, I took occasion to call up the Assistant Secretary of War, Mr. Johnson, who probably has given more attention to this matter than anyone else. He advised me that the figure for January was low because at that time the aviation industry was just shifting into mass production of planes, and that it was the judgment of the industry, notwithstanding the fact that the production in the month of January was only 351, that during this year they would have a capacity of 17,000 planes a year, and that if the industry progressed as it is progressing now in another year they would have a capacity of 30,000 or 40,000 planes a year.

Mr. LODGE. I am delighted to hear that, and I am much obliged to the Senator from Indiana for telling me about it. Of course that makes it all the more reasonable for us to insist that with the total production of 30,000 or 40,000 airplanes the Senator speaks of, at least the United States Navy should be guaranteed this modest quota of 350. I am very glad the Senator called that to my attention.

Mr. President, I do not think this is an unnecessary thing to do. I believe that we have a primary duty to the United States of America. I am not nearly so sure as are some other Senators that the wishes of the uniformed men of the Navy are going to constitute the policy of the United States Navy next year. They certainly never have in the past. I make the prediction that if the Senate refuses to earmark 350 planes out of its own appropriation for naval airplanes, there will be many persons throughout the country who will interpret it as a sign on our part that we think foreign needs should come ahead of ours, and I am sure we would not want to have such an impression created.

Therefore, Mr. President, I hope my amendment will be adopted. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I desire to say a word with reference to the remarks of the Senator from Massachusetts. He says that failure of the Senate to adopt an amendment which is entirely unlike the language of the other portions of the bill, and all other appropriation bills, will be construed throughout the country as an intention on the part of the Government of the United States not to purchase these planes. There is no justification for that statement. There is no one in the United States, unless it be the Senator from Massachusetts, who believes that when the Navy Department is given authority to obligate itself for the purchase of planes, it will not purchase them. The Navy Department has said that it will purchase the planes. The Chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics has told the Senator from Massachusetts, as he told the Senator from South Carolina, that the Navy will purchase the planes.

But the Senator from Massachusetts has said that he does not believe that the men in uniform will have anything to do with the policy because they have not had in the past. He says that someone higher up will make the decision. He says that his proposal is not a reflection upon the Navy, because he believes the Navy would do it, but the Navy will be stopped by the Secretary of State or by the President. He says it is not a reflection on the Navy. In his opinion, it is a reflection upon the Secretary of State or the President. That is the purpose of the amendment. That is why I resent the proposal. That is why I object to it.

The Senator from Massachusetts says, "Yes; the Navy will buy the planes when they say they will buy them"; but he intimates the President of the United States will stop the Navy from purchasing the planes. When the President submits an estimate and asks for authority to obligate the Navy to buy the planes, the Senator intimates, he will stop the Navy from ordering them.

Mr. President, is that not strange? The Senator, who is regarded as an important dark-horse candidate for the Republican nomination for President of the United States, believes that when we approach the end of the fiscal year 1941 the President will not obligate the purchase of these planes. Does he mean to admit that a Democrat will be in the White House then? Certainly if the Senator were going to be President he would not want to reflect upon the President of the United States.

Mr. LODGE. And the Senator from Massachusetts would not reflect upon the Senator from South Carolina, either, if he were in the White House.

Mr. BYRNES. No; but the Senator seems to reflect on the man who is now President of the United States. By his amendment he wants to intimate that from January 1, 1941, to June 30, 1941, Mr. Roosevelt will still be President of the United States and that he might not go ahead and obligate for these planes.

Whatever other complaint the Senator from Massachusetts may make of the present President of the United States, no person familiar with his record has ever complained about his interest in the national defense of this Government. No person would ever say that the present President of the United States has no interest in the Navy of the United States.

For my part, much as I think of him, I might say that, in my opinion, he would be willing to spend too much money for the Navy of the United States. But never would I believe, if we were to pass this bill and authorize planes to be purchased, and the Navy wanted them to be purchased, that the President of the United States would say, "No; you cannot buy those planes for the Navy."

Mr. President, there is no such danger. But the purpose of the amendment has been made plain by the Senator from Massachusetts. That is why I object to it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I am not reflecting on anybody. I certainly am not reflecting on the Navy, and I am not reflecting on the administration, unless the Senator from South Carolina wishes to regard it as a reflection. That is entirely a question of the Senator's interpretation.

There are many very respectable people in this country who would say, "Yes; some nations abroad are fighting our battles. We should supply them with airplanes before supplying our own forces." The Senator from South Carolina has heard people say that. There have been prominent men in his party and in my party who have said that. I do not think that reflects on their motives. I happen to disagree with that position. It is perfectly conceivable to me that the situation abroad might develop in such a way that there would be a considerable body of opinion in Washington which would favor giving certain nations all the airplanes they wanted, and letting our Army and Navy go without them for a year.

I do not reflect on the motives of those who think that way. If the President were to think that way, or the Secretary of State were to think that way, I would not reflect on their motives. I would respectfully disagree with the wisdom of their policy. There would be some who would think that way and there would be others who would say, "The invasion of Norway, the invasion of other countries, is proof of what happens when a nation neglects its defense, and, therefore, the more serious the situation in Europe becomes the more important it is for us to build up our own defense and not to give first call to foreign countries."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, nobody can foresee what may happen within a year. The whole world is in a chaotic and uncertain condition. I have no fear at all, if these planes are needed by our Navy, that they will not be available when and as needed.

Mr. LODGE. Does not the Senator think they are needed?

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not passing on that question now.

Mr. LODGE. Has not Congress passed on that question in various authorizations?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; but suppose in all the months prior to 1941 the condition in the world and in Europe should so change that there might be an end of hostilities and a definite effort made to bring about a reduction of armaments in the world and that a disarmament conference should be held; what effect would the requirement that the President may be committed to buy these airplanes, whether they are needed or not, then have? Would it not be easier to make contracts for airplanes as the airplanes are needed? Would it not be better to be governed by our needs, rather than to compel the President to enter into contracts at once for all these planes? If the situation should later be such as to justify a reduction in armaments throughout the world he would have to abide by the contracts anyway, unless they contained a release clause of some kind. Would it not be easier to provide that contracts for planes shall be made as the planes are needed, rather than to compel contracts to be made, when it might turn out that not all the planes were needed?

Mr. LODGE. The answer to the Senator from Kentucky is, in the first place, that it is very unlikely, as I think we will all agree, that there will be a disarmament conference during the next fiscal year. But if there should be, it is entirely inconceivable that the mere fact that the Navy would purchase 350 airplanes would be the straw that would break the camel's back, so far as we are concerned.

Mr. BARKLEY. Nobody contends that that would be the straw or a combination of straws that would break the camel's back, but inasmuch as we are looking upon possibilities we might at least indulge a little optimism as to the possibility before the end of the 1940 fiscal year, which will be July 1, 1941, of a ray of hope being still held out to the nations of the world that desire peace and some form of disarmament.

Mr. LODGE. And if there should be a ray of hope, as I hope there will be, this amendment would not in the least stand in the way, for, of course, Mr. President, the whole matter of national defense, of what we shall have and how much we shall spend, is entirely a judgment of probabilities. That is all it is anyway; and the present Congress and previous Congresses have decided time after time, using their mature judgment, that we ought to have a certain airplane program. This administration, through its Navy Department, and through its Bureau of the Budget, has requested the figure that is in this bill. That is the best judgment of the probabilities that is available to us. All I ask is that we go ahead and act on the strength of our convictions.

I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. McNARY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. The yeas and nays have been demanded. Is there a sufficient second?

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GLASS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. McKELLAR (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND], who, I understand, is absent. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], and will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McNARY (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], who is necessarily absent. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER], and will permit my vote to stand.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES], and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. TYDINGS. My colleague [Mr. RADCLIFFE] has a pair with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE]. I am not advised how the Senator from North Dakota would vote on this question; but I am informed that if my colleague were present he would vote "nay."

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] is absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senators from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS and Mr. PEPPER], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT], the Senators from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN and Mr. PITTMAN], and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] are detained on public business.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES], the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are detained in important committee meetings.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] are detained in various Government departments.

I am advised that, if present and voting, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES], the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] would vote "nay."

So Mr. LODGE's amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still before the Senate and open to further amendment.

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I regret exceedingly that I was necessarily absent from the Chamber yesterday and did not have an opportunity to register my vote in favor of a larger appropriation for new locks at the Panama Canal.

I now wish to place myself on record in full support of Admiral Harold R. Stark's proposal for a 25-percent increase in America's naval strength.

As a member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, I am satisfied that more adequate naval defense of our shores is not only consistent with but necessary to the cause of peace.

I have said before that I will never vote to send a single American soldier to fight on foreign soil. It is just as essential also that we discourage aggression in the only language aggressors understand—armed force.

The program of naval construction outlined by Admiral Stark is a matter of preparedness and should not even be debatable. It has the further advantage that it will expand industry, provide jobs, increase purchasing power, and thereby help recovery.

If there be any doubt as to the amount we should spend for defensive armament, let the error be on the side of safety. Let us take a leaf out of the book of business, which considers it sound policy to carry adequate insurance against catastrophe it hopes and expects will never happen. In this tense world adequate armament is the only insurance against aggression. I would prefer too much than too little of such protection.

Once the oceans assured our isolation. The airplane has broken down that safeguard. Today we need a ring of steel, as well as our thousands of miles of water, to guarantee peace.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 49, line 3, after the colon, it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That $5,000,000 of this sum shall be devoted to the expansion of naval aviation facilities at Cape May, N. J., and that such additional sums as may be necessary shall be used to investigate and report on the advantages of Conaskonk Point, N. J., as a naval aviation base, the facilities of which would be available also for the use of transoceanic commercial planes, and to determine and report on the cost of constructing such a base, to include facilities for both land and sea planes.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, the Cape May Naval Air Station was developed during the World War emergency but has not been in active use since the war. A lighter-than-air hangar already is located on the reservation, as well as a flying field. The Navy Department recently decided to put the station into active use again in connection with the maintenance of the so-called inner patrol being maintained under the Neutrality Act, and 12 Navy planes are to be sent there and based at Cape May as soon as the reservation is put in shape, probably in June.

My amendment would permit the expansion of the station to accommodate a greater number of planes and expand the Navy's flying facilities on the eastern seaboard as a contribution to the protection of the New York and New Jersey metropolitan district and the northern Atlantic seaboard generally. The amount asked, $5,000,000, would not be sufficient to develop this reservation into a major air base. As a matter of fact, there is not sufficient space available for the creation of a major base, and, furthermore, a major base at that point is not contemplated in the Navy's program anyway. My amendment merely proposes that the station be expanded to its maximum dimensions in line with the rapid expansion of the Air Force, both Army and Navy, in the light of increasing international tension.

The proposed survey of Conaskonk Point, which is located on the Raritan Bay near Keyport, N. J., on the south side of the New York Harbor, would result in properly appraising the facilities of one of the finest areas for seaplanes in the eastern United States.

Conaskonk Point projects some 4,000 feet into Raritan Bay, within 6 or 7 minutes' flying time of New York City, and within 3 minutes' flying time of the major land defenses at Sandy Hook, N. J. I understand that Imperial Airways at one time considered the Conaskonk Point area as a possible terminal for its trans-Atlantic operations.

I am making this proposal in order that we may have immediately available all the information which can be obtained with respect to desirable sites for transoceanic air bases, particularly in the vicinity of New York. Aviation is developing so rapidly that we cannot wait until the need becomes acute to provide adequate shore bases for trans-Atlantic planes. Although a base at Conaskonk Point as proposed would be primarily a naval aviation base, it is my own idea that the project should be studied from the viewpoint of its maximum values for auxiliary commercial use as well.

I am informed that the operation of seaplanes both from North Beach and Floyd Bennett Field is hampered at present by the great volume of traffic using the waters in the vicinity of these airports. No such problem would be presented on the south side of the harbor. A base at Conaskonk Point would be within sight of New York City, yet not in it, and planes could be based there in larger numbers and to greater advantage than anywhere else for the protection of the metropolitan area.

To refer again to the Cape May Naval Air Station, may I point out that everyone who is familiar with the North Atlantic seaboard knows of New Jersey's strategic position—vulnerable position as well as strategic—between the great metropolitan areas of New York and Pennsylvania. I do not think I am divulging any information to which I have not a right to refer openly when I say I am quite sure the statement can be confirmed that as far as any attack on the eastern coast of the United States is concerned, nearly all naval and military experts agree that it would be most likely to be directed against the New Jersey coast.

Moreover, Cape May, because of the topography and the physical characteristics of that southernmost point of New Jersey, is of itself a very strategic and important location in the national sense. This naval air base is already being used. I am sure it will be used to a continually greater and larger extent anyway. I feel that even without my suggested amendment its development is inevitable; and I very much hope that in connection with this whole vital defense program—particularly vital at a time such as this—the amount proposed in my amendment will be included for this purpose.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I make the point of order against the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] that it is not authorized; there is no authorization for the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order is well taken, and ought to be sustained. It is, therefore, so ordered.

The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, the able Senator in charge of the bill promised to supply, in a very few minutes, a break-down.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, there has been handed to me by the clerk a statement, which I should like to read and see whether it gives the Senator from Oregon the information he desires.

The break-down of the bill would be as follows:

For shipbuilding, $340,371,979.

For aircraft, $41,083,400.

For modernization of ships, $10,552,000.

For public works, $49,888,475.

The total of those various items is $441,895,854, leaving for maintenance the figure which the Senator has—$521,901,624.

I trust that gives the Senator the information he desires.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, a few moments ago, in reply to an inquiry, I understood the Senator from South Carolina to state that the two battleships, for which appropriations are made but specifications have not yet been drawn, are included in this enlarged appropriation.

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator has estimated their cost at about $90,000,000 a ship. Is the $180,000,000 included in the bill?

Mr. BYRNES. No; I misled the Senator if he derived that impression from my remarks. Those ships will be carried over the 4 years, as deliveries of materials and armament are needed. The total is not covered in the bill.

Mr. McNARY. I think the Senator plainly stated that it was, and I wanted to know. This appropriation does include——

Mr. BYRNES. Sufficient to start the ships.

Mr. McNARY. Yes; but the very strong implication from the Senator's statement was that the appropriation carried by the bill would pay for their construction.

Mr. BYRNES. Not for their completion; no. I want to correct my statement if that inference could be drawn from it.

Mr. McNARY. How much do the two battleships draw upon this fund?

Mr. BYRNES. The estimate submitted by the Navy Department for expenditure for those two ships was $7,800,000. It was reduced, however, and we did not provide that amount of money. We appropriate only about a million and a half dollars in this bill for those ships.

Mr. McNARY. In the item which the Senator has just read he specified a large sum for public works. Does that mean the construction of buildings at the navy yards?

Mr. BYRNES. It means all facilities at the navy yards.

Mr. McNARY. What is the amount?

Mr. BYRNES. Forty-nine million eight hundred and eighty-eight thousand four hundred and seventy-five dollars.

Mr. McNARY. And what is the total amount for the construction of airplanes?

Mr. BYRNES. Forty-one million eighty-three thousand four hundred dollars.

Mr. McNARY. And the appropriation for personnel is in excess of $500,000,000?

Mr. BYRNES. It does not mean that. That sum not only covers personnel but it covers fuel, for instance, as one of the large items.

Mr. McNARY. I do not intend to be at all captious; that is not my purpose; but I want to know, from this break-down which the Senator promised to give me, the total amount for personnel which is carried in the appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1941.

Mr. BYRNES. Unfortunately for the specific request of the Senator, the item includes pay, subsistence, and transportation of naval personnel. The total for those three items—and that is the way it is carried in the bill—is $257,000,000. I do not know what proportion of that is for transportation; but the total for the pay of all enlisted and commissioned personnel, and for the subsistence and transportation of the enlisted personnel, is $257,000,000.

Mr. McNARY. Does that include the salaries of officers of the Navy?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes; officers and men.

Mr. McNARY. And wages for those employed in construction work?

Mr. BYRNES. No; because that comes under the head of public works, separate from the pay and subsistence of naval personnel; and the civilian employees at the yards are not naval personnel.

Mr. McNARY. Is the item of maintenance larger than for the fiscal year 1940?

Mr. BYRNES. For the year 1940 the maintenance item is $521,437,987, and the figure I gave the Senator just now is almost the same. For the fiscal year 1941 it is $521,901,624, which is an increase of almost $500,000. That is what it amounts to.

Mr. McNARY. A final question, probably: In the statement made by the able Senator a while ago, he said that this bill carries an appropriation for seven additional cruisers. Does that mean that the bill carries an amount sufficient to pay for the plans and specifications for them, or that it carries the money for their actual construction?

Mr. BYRNES. For their actual construction, too.

Mr. McNARY. That statement does not apply, however, to battleships?

Mr. BYRNES. Only a million and a half dollars is provided for the battleships.

Mr. McNARY. Then we shall have that obligation provided for in next year's bill?

Mr. BYRNES. The matter will have to be provided for in next year's bill and in the bills for subsequent years.

Mr. McNARY. Then will the appropriation this year of nearly a billion dollars clear up the construction of all the ships now in process of construction?

Mr. BYRNES. No; it will not. During the fiscal year ending in 1941 it is the expectation that the Navy Department can complete four cruisers, four destroyers, and seven submarines, but not that they can complete the battleships. For instance, we shall be appropriating during the next 2, and perhaps 3, years for the two battleships that were authorized last year.

Mr. McNARY. How much is carried in this bill for those ships?

Mr. BYRNES. I have that figure somewhere, but I cannot remember it.

Mr. McNARY. I recall that earlier in the afternoon the able Senator said there were eight ships now in process of construction. What amount in this bill covers the work on those ships for the fiscal year 1941?

Mr. BYRNES. For the two 1942 battleships, the estimate was $22,671,000. For the two 1940 cruisers, the amount was $8,041,000. That is the amount which it is estimated will be spent this year. For the 1941 vessels authorized in this bill, it is anticipated that $2,900,000 will be spent.

Those are the amounts for the battleships and cruisers.

Mr. McNARY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. ELLENDER. The Naval Affairs Committee of the Senate is now considering House bill 8026, which provides for an increase of 11 percent in the amount for our naval requirements; Admiral Stark and some Senators are advocating, in addition to that 11 percent, a further 14 percent increase. As I understand, under the pending bill we are providing for two additional battleships, one aircraft carrier, two light cruisers, eight destroyers, and six submarines, representing a total tonnage of 153,600. I am informed that there has been authorized, in addition to this tonnage, under a bill which was enacted in 1938, almost 200,000 tons, 42,500 tons of which is for battleships, 80,000 tons for light cruisers, 62,000 tons for destroyers, and 13,000 tons for submarines.

The question I should like to ask is whether any effort was made to obtain appropriations for the latter tonnage, or 200,000 tons, and if not, why not?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I am unable to answer the Senator as to why the department did not ask for appropriations for greater tonnage than was requested. Construction under the 1938 program will continue for some years, and the department submits estimates for it as it deems it desirable to proceed. I do not know why they did not ask for more. I am glad to accept their request. I have no information on the subject.

I know that the issue before the Committee on Naval Affairs is as to whether or not additional authorization shall be granted, and when the department officials appear, I know from the questions and answers I have seen submitted that that matter will be thrashed out before the Committee on Naval Affairs, and the naval officials will be called upon to explain why they should ask for additional tonnage when they still have authority for certain tonnage which is not completed. That is really the issue.

The Committee on Appropriations did not go into that matter, because it takes the position that the committee is charged with supplying funds for the program which is agreed upon by the Congress. The Senator is a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and I hope that his committee will go into the question, because when a bill is reported I should like to ask him to give me the information as to how much tonnage is left available, and why they should ask for additional tonnage, and why they did not ask for money for what is authorized. We did not go into those questions.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not know whether the Senator from Louisiana was present when the question was touched upon at great length, but the Navy officials stated that the reason why more was not asked was that they had been given an outside figure by the administration, and asked to keep their recommendations within that compass, and that therefore they had not been able to ask for more with which to build the vessels already authorized, as they had tried to stay within the limitation, as requested by the administration.

Mr. BYRNES. When the emergency supplemental bill was before us I went into that matter, because at that time there was a discussion of which the Senator from Louisiana knows. It is a very complicated question, and it is an issue between the Naval Affairs Committee of the House and the Naval Affairs Committee of the Senate. Statements were issued by the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee of the House and a statement was made by the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee of the Senate on the floor of the Senate.

My inquiry in regard to the matter was with respect to the appropriations asked for at that time. I really dislike to go into the matter, because it is an issue which should be decided in the committee, one which we will have to decide when the matter comes to the floor of the Senate.

When the pending bill was before the Committee on Appropriations Admiral Stark finally stated, in response to my inquiry, as follows:

Admiral STARK. The remaining total available tonnage at present is about 179,000 tons, on which, if the Congress gave us funds tomorrow, we could start.

Senator BYRNES. If they gave you authority to let you build that 179,000 tons of such type as you wanted to, you would have to replace certain types of ships and would not have the various categories that you want; is that right?

Admiral STARK. Statute authority would be necessary to redistribute available authorization of tonnage to other categories of ships than those which it is now available in.

Senator BYRNES. Then, you do not need authorization?

Admiral STARK. No authority for 179,000 tons now available.

If the Senator will read the statement I am satisfied it will give him all the information I was able to obtain at that time, and when Admiral Stark appears before the Committee on Naval Affairs, where the matter will be decided, I suggest that on cross-examination the Senator might be able to ascertain whether the statement I have read is correct.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, the country is wondering why it is necessary to obtain additional authorizations for expanding our Navy when those in authority are not building the naval armaments now authorized. I favor a navy second to none, but I do not think it is a wise policy for us merely to authorize expansion of our naval armaments and not proceed with the actual work.

Mr. BYRNES. That was the inquiry I made at the time, and the answers of Admiral Stark would indicate that it is due to the distribution of the tonnage to different types of vessels. That was his statement, and I am sure the Senator can go into it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I think it is fair that those absent from the Chamber should be notified that the final vote on the passage of the bill is about to be taken. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Ellender	Lodge	Sheppard
Ashurst	George	Lucas	Slattery
Austin	Gerry	Lundeen	Smathers

Mr. BYRNES. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

YOUTH AND EDUCATION

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, because education is so necessary to the continuance of democracy, I deem it appropriate at this time to call to the attention of the Senate a bill for equalizing educational opportunities throughout the Nation. This is known as the Harrison-Thomas-Larrabee bill, which provides Federal aid for equalizing educational opportunities throughout the several States. This bill has been reported favorably by the Senate Committee on Education and Labor and is now on the Senate calendar.

LOCAL RESPONSIBILITY

The responsibility for educating the youth falls upon the local community. Every community in America is responsible for the education of its own boys and girls to the full extent of its financial ability, and the local communities have discharged this obligation in a most patriotic manner.

There are many instances where communities have almost bankrupted themselves in their effort to educate their boys and girls. During the depression, when people could no longer pay ad valorem taxes, upon which the schools were dependent, the communities continued to issue school warrants obligating the property of the community in order to educate their children. There are many stories of the heroic efforts of the local communities to discharge their patriotic duty in this regard.

STATE RESPONSIBILITY

There is such a difference between the financial resources of different communities that the education of the children has been looked upon by some of the most progressive States as not a duty for the communities alone but as a duty to be shared by the States.

Therefore the responsibility for the education of young America falls upon the States, and a number of the States have what is called an equalization fund, which is made up by taxation. This fund is used to equalize educational opportunities throughout the State. It is used to help educate children in the poorer communities. This is a great step forward in education, and the States can equalize and are equalizing educational opportunities within their boundaries, but they are helpless so far as equalizing the educational opportunities as between the States is concerned.

FEDERAL OBLIGATION

Therefore the Federal Government must assume its share of the obligation of educating the youth of the Nation.

A child in a poor community has a right to educational opportunities as well as a child in a wealthier community. They both live in the same Nation and under the same flag. Sometimes only a State line separates them, sometimes only a township line. But the public schools, supported, as they are now, entirely by local and State taxes, are as different in the opportunities they afford as the communities themselves are unequal in financial resources.

UNDER LOCAL CONTROL

Under the Federal program which I have in mind every State and community would carry its fair share of the burden of education in proportion to its financial ability, and the Federal Government would contribute only a fractional part of the cost of education in even the poorest communities. Therefore the control of education would still rest with the local communities, where it rightly belongs.

There is before Congress at the present time a bill known as the Harrison-Thomas-Larrabee bill—formerly the Harrison-Black-Fletcher bill—providing for the appropriation of $75,190,000 for the first year, the appropriations then to be graduated until they reach a maximum of $208,006,000, for the purpose of equalizing educational opportunities throughout the Nation.

The financial ability of the States in proportion to the population of school children is so different and varied that only the Federal Government can equalize the educational opportunities of the several States.

OVERTAXED AND UNDERTAUGHT

A model tax system has been worked out for State taxation. This system was intended to raise money for all the needs of the State, such as roads, running the State and local governments, running the schools; in fact, the entire expense of the State.

Six of the States are so limited in financial resources that if they depended upon this model tax system—that is, if their taxes were no steeper than the tax recommended by this model system—the yield would be so small that if they took the entire amount produced for all purposes and used it for schools alone, there would not be enough to give those States a school system equal to the average school system of the Nation. The result is that these six States are taxing themselves much more heavily than they would be taxed under the model tax system on the one hand, and they have school systems much under average of the Nation on the other hand.

I give these facts because some people believe that the burden of education should be borne entirely by the States and local communities, and I therefore want to show that the States and local communities are already taxing themselves to the limit and yet are unable to provide even average educational facilities for their children. There are many people who will support Federal aid for education when they are convinced that the States and local communities are unable to provide necessary educational opportunities.

CHILD RATIO TO WEALTH

Again, the number of children per family must be considered in relation to the wealth of the different States. In almost direct ratio, the wealthier the State, the fewer the children per family; and the poorer the State, the more children per family. For instance, the per capita wealth per child of school age in the poorest State is $3,000, whereas in the wealthiest State it is $23,000. In other words, if the Senate will pardon me for using the informal language of the day, we seldom find the kids and the cash in the same community. The more kids, the less cash; the more cash, the fewer kids. Therefore it is necessary for the Federal Government to raise the money where the money is and spend the money where the children are. Otherwise the children will grow up and move to wealthier communities either to become useful citizens or gangsters, according to their training and background.

Modern inventions have so increased the mobility of population that one person in every three resides in a different State from the one in which he was born. Therefore it is important to the wealthier States that the children of the less wealthy States receive educational opportunities.

SOURCES OF TAXES NO RULE FOR EXPENDITURE

It is sometimes argued that the Federal Government has no right to collect taxes in one State and spend them in another; but we have been doing that in building highways, canals, harbors, and many other national enterprises. To limit Federal expenditures to the source of taxation is not only out of date but impossible, because no one can trace a tax to its sources. Taxes are collected from manufacturers in the East, but at least a part of those taxes are passed on to the consumers of the West. Simply because the taxes are paid into the Government by the corporations of a certain State does not mean that the people of that State have paid those taxes. Therefore to try to return taxes to their source is like trying to unscramble eggs. It cannot be done.

Often the Federal Government taxes wealth at the most convenient point. That is, wheat produced in the plains country creates wealth in industrial communities. Oil pumped from the oil fields of Texas, Oklahoma, and California creates wealth in the money markets of the East. Cotton produced in the South produces wealth for the cotton mills of the East.

But the Government quite often taxes the wealth, not at the source of production but at the point of processing. The oil companies that draw their wealth from Kansas, Oklahoma, Texas, Louisiana, and California may be operating under the charter of Delaware and pay taxes in the State of Delaware, but the wealth comes from these other States.

Therefore it is fallacious to overlook this flow of wealth in considering the resources of the Nation.

WEALTH CONCENTRATION A PROBLEM

The concentration of wealth in the United States presents a grave problem. This problem can be met by taxation and expenditure. The Federal Government is the logical agency to collect money over the whole Nation and distribute it. The object of such distribution should not be controlled by an effort to return the tax to its source, but by an effort to promote the general welfare. Whenever a problem affects the welfare of the Nation as a whole, as education does, no matter how localized that problem is, the patriotic policy is to declare it a national problem and attack it as such. We should tax the Nation's wealth wherever we find it to help educate the children of the Nation wherever we find them.

The Harrison-Thomas-Larrabee bill, providing Federal aid for equalizing educational opportunities, has been approved by the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, of which I am a member. The bill is now pending on the Senate calendar. In my opinion, now is the time to pass this legislation. I feel that with the proper encouragement we can at this session of Congress pass this measure.

NO DEPARTURE FROM NATIONAL POLICY

This would by no means be a new policy on the part of the Federal Government. The Federal Government has aided education by the passage of a vocational training law. The Federal Government helped education in the several States through the W. P. A. The Federal Government, through the R. F. C., loaned the city of Chicago money to pay the teachers and reopen its schools. The Federal Government, through the national youth movement, is at the present time helping young people to secure an education. The Federal Government has aided education through land grants to colleges and universities.

Therefore the proposed legislation would not be departing from our national policy.

EDUCATION IS GOOD NATIONAL DEFENSE

Congress is being asked this year to vote almost $2,000,000,000 for national defense, but, in my opinion, America's greatest danger will not come from the outside but from the inside. I believe that if we could spend one-tenth of that amount of Federal funds for education of the youth of America it would constitute a greater national defense than the passage of this huge appropriation for armies and navies.

Dictatorships rely upon the ignorance of the people for their strength. Communism depends upon the ability of a few leaders to keep their people in ignorance, but a democracy depends upon the intelligence of the voters. Our form of government places the final residue of power in the hands of the people. With power goes responsibility. With responsibility there should go sufficient enlightenment to know how to use that power.

Our people stood the strain of this depression because they were enlightened. Therefore it is fundamental that our Government maintain its existence by maintaining a sound educational system.

No opportunity is more important than the opportunity for a decent education. No Federal obligation is more vital than that of self-preservation. It is not only the right, but the duty of our Government, to perpetuate its existence, and the proper education of our children is essential to that end.

I thank the Senate.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. HILL. The Senator has made a very able address, as he always does, for the enactment of the Harrison-Thomas-Larrabee bill. I wish to join with him in the hope he has expressed that the Senate may soon take up that bill for consideration and pass it, thus providing real Federal aid for education in this country.

Mr. LEE. I thank the distinguished Senator from Alabama who has long been recognized as a vigorous and effective champion of universal education and broader opportunities for the youth of America.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8438) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass? The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LUNDEEN (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], who is absent on official business. I understand that if he were present he would vote "yea." If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay." I withhold my vote.

THE ARMED FORCES OF AMERICA

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, through some misunderstanding, not the fault of the present occupant of the chair, I missed an opportunity to speak for a few moments before the final roll call. At this time I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD certain tables showing the amount of money we have spent for arms and armament, and where we stand. I ask unanimous consent that the tables be printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the tables were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TABLE SHOWS SPENDING OF AMERICAN PRESIDENTS

This table sets forth the complete financial record of every President of the United States from the adoption of the Constitution in 1789 to date. The figures given up to 1939 show the actual receipts, expenditures, and deficits recorded in the annals of the Treasury Department and certified to Congress in the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury. Figures for 1940 and 1941 are the estimate presented to Congress by President Roosevelt in his Budget message last Thursday.

The totals show that Franklin D. Roosevelt, in 8 years, has spent 58½ percent as much as all of his predecessors put together in 144½ years. He received in taxes in these depression years 44 percent as much as all of his predecessors together have collected, and he has almost exactly doubled the national debt.

HOW LONG AMERICA—HOW LONG?

Mr. LUNDEEN. Perhaps our entry into the World War had something to do with that table. Perhaps our loaning away our shirts to Europe had something to do with these figures—perhaps our world-saving and world-policing policies have added some billions here and just how much longer will the American people stand for all these military and economic ventures into other continents? Let this present administration look over the record of Andrew Jackson; that might be good mental exercise.

MARCH 18, 1940.

HON. ERNEST LUNDEEN,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR LUNDEEN: Receipt is acknowledged of your letter dated March 13, 1940, in which you inquire whether the R. O. T. C. and the C. M. T. C. are considered a part of our armed forces, thus increasing the total estimated strength of the Army furnished you in response to your letter of February 27, 1940.

The strength of 624,200 men furnished you in answer to your letter of February 27 was the total strength of the Army of the United States on January 31, 1940.

The R. O. T. C., established under section 40, National Defense Act, as amended, and the C. M. T. C., established under section 47 (d) of the same act, are agencies to provide military instruction and training to civilians and are not components of the Army of the United States as contemplated under section 1, National Defense Act, as amended.

Sincerely yours,

HARRY H. WOODRING,
Secretary of War.

NAVY URGES $3,600,000,000 FOR FLEET EQUAL TO BRITAIN'S

(By John G. Norris)

Initial funds for building a $277,000,000 bomb-proof set of locks for the Panama Canal were voted by the Senate late yesterday, as the Navy asked $3,600,000,000 to provide a fleet equal to Britain's armada.

Admiral Stark, chief of naval operations, told the Senate Naval Affairs Committee the United States should spend $600,000,000 a year for shipbuilding the next 6 years to restore the 5–5–3 ratio with Great Britain and Japan established 18 years ago. This would provide 125 war vessels—3 aircraft carriers, 18 cruisers, 68 destroyers, and 36 submarines.

Opposition to such a program, however, was voiced by Chairman WALSH, who declared he favored approving only part of the construction at this time.

"I'm impressed with the evidence presented on the need for such a 25-percent increase in the fleet," he said, "but the 11-percent expansion voted by the House is about all that can be laid down during the next 2 years with existing facilities. Next year, if necessary, we can vote the additional ships."

WALSH predicted congressional approval of the 11-percent enlargement, possibly with some moderate increases if the Navy can show a few additional ships can be crowded into the 2-year program. Other members of the committee, led by Senator TYDINGS (Democrat), of Maryland, appeared bent on voting the full 25-percent increase.

Funds for the new Panama Canal locks are carried in a $223,362,517 War Department civil-functions appropriations bill passed by the Senate yesterday. Fifteen millions in cash and $99,000,000 in contract authorizations are provided to carry forward the work expected to take 6 years.

CAN THEY REALLY GANG UP ON US?—A REVIEW OF DEFENSE FOR THE AMERICAS

(By Frank C. Waldrop)

You must be sick and tired of the war by now.
And sicker and tireder of this than any other naggers' query:
But if they beat England and France, won't they gang up on us next?

You're sick of it, but perhaps you never can think of the detailed reasons why they just couldn't attack us successfully if we maintain a sensible defense system.

Herewith, therefore, a review on the Western Hemisphere, worked up after extensive consultation with those mysterious characters, "the highest authorities."

Can that be done?

Invasions of the Western Hemisphere have not paid any nation since the middle of the eighteenth century. The problems of transportation and supply have been too difficult and expensive, not to mention the strength of the Americas in self-defense.

In 1917 we reversed the historic effort and landed an expeditionary force of 2,000,000 soldiers in Europe. But how? With the help of three navies. With the help of five nations' merchant marine. With two friendly shores on which to land, all equipped to protect our troops right up to the battle line. With ample safe harbors on those shores, and all that goes with them. With absolute unity of our own Nation to insure concentration on the expedition only.

To transport those 2,000,000 men consumed 19 months of time and involved the moving of 7,500,000 tons of cargo for their comfort, feeding, and equipment to fight.

If the enemy is going to invade the Western Hemisphere he must do so in greater force than we can assemble to repel him, remember. This means he must control some spot where he can set down, feed, and arm more men on our coast than we can develop from within to drive him away from that spot.

Look again at the map. Where could he do that? Not in Labrador. Insufficient harbors. You can't land a 16-inch railway gun in a rowboat, and we have 16-inch guns, for instance, so the enemy must have them to equalize our strength. Not in Patagonia, for the same reason.

You can see where this leads you. Assembling and delivering to the shores of the Americas an armed force of any serious size is a problem that isn't solved by rhetoric.

To invade this continent the enemy must first destroy the United States Navy, dominate the air above, find harbors he can control, and get enough troops ashore to push ours out of his way as he tramps from Broadway to Main Street.

WORLD-POLICING, WORLD-SAVING NAVIES

Mr. LUNDEEN. I believe the American people feel that we are going a little beyond the limit in building a world-saving, world-policing Navy.

We hear, continually, that our arms are antiquated and out of date; that our arms and armament will not stand comparison with Europe and Japan. Well then, what became of the billions we spent, and now we are rushing madly onward in a new armament race.

WE SANK THEM THEN, BUT WE ARE BUILDING THEM NOW

Yet, a few years ago, we sank 31 ships under the terms of the Washington Disarmament Treaty. The total value of these ships plus the cost of scrapping was $277,695,994.34. One modern up-to-date battleship, the George Washington, alone cost $40,000,000. What became of the great patriots who scuttled our fleet in the presence of one of our enemies, and now you want other billions, more billions—perhaps to scuttle or give away—but what of our starving unemployed, what of labor, and the farmer—where do they figure in our national economy?

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, APRIL 18, 1940

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. RAYBURN].

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Lord God of our fathers, we thank Thee that Thou art the same God who hath ruled through the confusion of the nations. Thou art still seeking in countless ways to work out Thy holy purpose in such a world with its rage, tears, and needs; do Thou increase the power of our faith; may we soon behold the twilight of a new day. We pray that our Nation may be so upright that it may stand before the whole earth with such self-restraint, with such patience toward all those who are weak and wicked, and with such conceptions of understanding that all men may love that liberty with which Christ makes His people free. Do Thou preserve us from a baffled and a betrayed will. Lead our steps in the power and pride of life with work to do for men, with minds and hearts to love and serve Thee, and Thine shall be the praise forever. Through Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 8668. An act making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, for civil functions administered by the War Department, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate ordered that the Secretary be directed to return to the House of Representatives, in compliance with its request, the bill (S. 2661) entitled "An act to create a board of inspectors, Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation, at Miami, Fla."

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, today's New York Times informs us of a conference at the White House, yesterday, between the President and the Democratic members of a House appropriations subcommittee. This conference was in connection with a proposed message that the President is expected to send to the Congress, asking that $985,000,000 be appropriated for 1941 relief purposes, but under terms that would allow this sum to be spent during the first 8 months of the fiscal year.

The following timely statement of the Department of Social Welfare of the State of New York under date of April 10 sets forth in detail the problems for which solutions must be found if we are to properly discharge our responsibilities to people in need of assistance:

The Federal Budget now before Congress provides $1,000,000,000 for financing the W. P. A. program during the coming fiscal year. This figure is one-third less than the appropriation for the current fiscal year, and consequently would necessitate a sharp reduction of W. P. A. employment quotas throughout the Nation. It becomes necessary, therefore, to advise you of the probable effect of such a curtailment of the Federal works program on the volume and cost of general relief in New York State.

Our past experience in this State has shown that when mass lay-offs from W. P. A. occur, at least one-half of those dismissed return to the relief rolls within 1 to 3 months. This was true, for example, of the situation arising in New York City in the summer of 1937. During July and August of that year, about 40,000 workers were separated from W. P. A. employment in that city. During this same period, accessions to the general relief rolls because of loss of W. P. A. employment amounted to 50 percent of the separations from W. P. A. While the summer of 1937 was a period of comparative prosperity, for the recession did not get under way until later in the fall, half of the displaced W. P. A. workers were forced to seek relief almost immediately.

A still more recent illustration of the repercussion of W. P. A. dismissals on the general relief load is found in the lay-offs in the latter half of 1939. The records show that approximately 100,000 W. P. A. workers in this State were discharged between July 1 and December 31 because of the 18-month limitation on continuous employment and that about 34,000 more were dismissed for other reasons—a total of 134,000 workers dismissed during the 6 months. During these same months 70,000 dismissed W. P. A. workers were accepted for general relief, representing 52 percent of the total number discharged from W. P. A. Here again we have shown only the proportion of workers returning to relief within a comparatively short period after dismissal.

As an indicator of the total number of dismissed workers returning to relief rolls in the last half of 1939, the figure of 70,000 is all too conservative. It does not include those workers who after separation from W. P. A. obtained private employment which proved to be of very brief duration and, having lost such private employment, were then forced to apply for relief. This group of workers, believed to be considerable, would be reported to the State department of social welfare as having lost private employment rather than having been dismissed by W. P. A.

Further evidence corroborating the testimony of our department's records is found in a survey recently made by the Work Projects Administration, covering 23 large cities throughout the United States. This survey relates to W. P. A. workers dismissed during July and August 1939 and shows the status of these same workers in the following November. The figures for the two New York State cities included in the survey indicate that by November 54.7 percent of the dismissed workers in New York City and 63.8 percent in Buffalo had already been certified as in need and returned to the relief rolls.

In New York City only 13.3 percent and in Buffalo only 16.2 percent of the dismissed workers had secured employment in private industry. Thus a very small proportion of those separated from W. P. A. had been able to secure nonrelief employment in spite of the unusually rapid improvement in business and industry in the latter part of 1939. The survey shows further that the experience of New York State was by no means unique but that all through the country the discharge of large numbers of W. P. A. employees was quickly reflected in general relief rolls.

In measuring the bearing of our past experience upon the problem posed by the possibility of a further sharp reduction in W. P. A. employment during the next fiscal year, we may reasonably anticipate a serious situation.

If the appropriation is reduced by one-third as proposed in the Federal Budget, it is logical to assume that average W. P. A. employment in the Nation as a whole will also have to be cut one-third. This is in line with recent reports estimating that the $1,000,000,000 appropriation will make it possible to employ an average of between 1,325,000 and 1,350,000 workers during the next year—approximately one-third less than the average of 2,000,000 workers employed during the first half of the current fiscal year, that is, July–December 1939.

In New York State W. P. A. employment during July–December 1939 averaged 153,700 workers. Assuming that the slash in New York is proportionate to that in the country at large, one-third of 153,700, or 51,200 workers, would be dismissed from W. P. A. jobs in this State. (It may be said in passing that the curtailment in 1939 was somewhat more drastic in New York State than elsewhere, the number of workers falling 38.6 percent from December 1938 to December 1939 in this State as compared with 32.7 percent in the rest of the country.)

Since at least half of the 51,200 dismissed W. P. A. workers would return to relief rolls, a minimum of 25,600 general relief cases would result from a one-third reduction of W. P. A. employment in this State. Inasmuch as the great majority of W. P. A. workers are in urban centers and represent families rather than single persons, each discharged worker accepted for relief would require at least $45 per month to meet budgetary needs. General relief costs to the State and its localities would therefore increase by not less than $1,152,000 per month, or $13,824,000 on an annual basis.

We believe, however, that the actual increase in general relief costs would be much greater than this amount, based as it is on the minimum assumption of one-half of the dismissed workers returning to relief. The last 6 months of 1939 was a period of substantial gains in business and industry with production, employment, and pay rolls all making sharp advances. Without a similar background of rapidly improving economic conditions to absorb the shock of a further cut, it is altogether probable that two-thirds or even more of those dismissed would have to be cared for through general relief. If the reduction in employment is 51,200, and two-thirds return to relief, the increase in New York State's relief costs would be $1,536,000 per month or $18,432,000 for the fiscal year as a whole. Local communities raise and pay 100 percent of general relief costs on which they receive 40-percent reimbursement from the State.

In this State all persons employed by W. P. A. must have been in receipt of general relief and must remain continuously eligible for relief, otherwise they are removed from W. P. A. W. P. A. investigators conduct a year-round check to determine continued eligibility. This process of weeding out ineligibles has resulted in a situation wherein practically every person on W. P. A. is currently eligible for general relief. Therefore, with each succeeding contraction of W. P. A. due to reduction in funds or quotas, the percentage of dismissed employees returning immediately to general relief is higher. In fact we have good reason to believe that the proposed reduction in funds will result in a minimum of two-thirds of those dismissed being in need of and accepted for general relief.

The failure of the Federal Government to participate with States and localities in financing general relief coupled with constant shifting of the responsibility which it takes for W. P. A., creates a serious financial problem for the States. In our opinion, the lack of stability in volume of W. P. A. employment further indicates the need for Federal financial participation in general relief through the medium of grants-in-aid to the States. Thus, when Congress feels it necessary to economize in work-relief expenditures, the full impact of resulting expenditures in general relief will not fall solely on the States.

Mere maintenance of the present level of economic activity would do nothing to cushion the impact of a new curtailment of W. P. A. A rapidly expanding economy, with greatly increased opportunities for employment, would be needed to counterbalance a new mass lay-off. It is unreasonable to suppose that new gains in business and industry comparable to those of the latter part of 1939 can be expected in the near future. Indeed, the indications are all to the contrary, for already, within the past 3 months, a slowing down in many important lines of production has been manifest.

It must be remembered that in projecting relief costs for the next fiscal year the State department of social welfare assumed that there would be no further cutting of the W. P. A. program within that period, in view of the extensive slash made within the past year. There is no prospect that the State and local governments can do more than meet the minimum needs for home relief entirely, aside from the question of a new curtailment of the W. P. A. program. If, therefore, the Federal Government should cut the appropriation for W. P. A., it is strongly urged that the increased home relief cost resulting from such action be met from Federal grants-in-aid.

It has been shown that the proposed reduction in W. P. A. would cause home-relief costs in New York State to increase by $13,800,000 to $18,400,000 for the year. While this Board is wholly in sympathy with reducing assistance expenditures whenever feasible, and without undue suffering, it is inclined to point out that shifting costs from a Federal to a local State basis is not only undesirable but can be avoided through the medium of a grant-in-aid program. That is, in the proposed readjustment of W. P. A., rather than reduce Federal and simultaneously increase State and local costs, we recommend that of the net Federal reduction of $50,000,000, the State be granted from this fund sufficient to cover the increased cost to the State.

This phase of Federal expenditure has so vital an effect on State and local financial planning that we feel the Federal Government should be continuously aware of the consequences of the changes which it makes, and if it feels that in considering all factors of the situation those changes must still be made, we urge upon the Federal Government the necessity of making some provision for lessening the effect of that change.

At this time I would like to ask the entire membership of this body to carefully study the data contained in the above statement from the department of social welfare of my State.

I sincerely hope that the Committee on Appropriations will heed the appeal of the President and report without further delay the bill providing the necessary funds for relief purposes.

I strongly favor the request of the President for funds, and I personally shall do everything in my power to bring about the passage of this legislation. I intend to cooperate in every possible way with the President and the department of social welfare of New York in their efforts to secure the required funds from Congress so that every needy person will receive adequate aid. [Applause.]

PURCHASE OF GREENLAND FROM DENMARK

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I have today filed a resolution providing for the purchase of Greenland, which reads as follows:

Joint resolution providing for negotiations by the President with a view to the acquisition by purchase of Greenland

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is authorized and requested to enter into negotiations in such manner as he may deem appropriate with the Government of His Majesty the King of Denmark and Iceland for the purchase and acquisition of Greenland by the United States.

The invasion of Denmark by the German armed forces has raised a question over the sovereignty of Greenland, that huge island almost one-third the size of the United States and only 900 miles from our northern border in Maine. Greenland is 6 hours flying time from New York, and would be a valuable base for airplanes, submarines, and for naval operations. In addition, it may have enormous mineral resources if adequately developed.

For over a hundred years little Denmark has done practically nothing with her vast colony. It is still undeveloped and its population is less than 20,000.

I do not believe in any policy of imperialism or territorial expansion by threats or force. In the case of Greenland we might well offer to pay Denmark a substantial sum of money to acquire it, as we did the Virgin Islands.

Iceland, another Danish possession, presents a different problem for us, as it is much nearer to Europe than to the United States. I am not in favor of extending American influence into European areas or establishing naval bases in those waters any more than I want European nations to encroach on American spheres of influence.

It should be the definite policy of the United States to acquire by purchase or as offsets to foreign debts owed to us all islands or other possessions of European nations, excepting Canada, within 1,000 miles of our coast. It should also be the policy of the United States to oppose the transfer or further acquisition of any islands or possessions within the American sphere of influence by any European or Asiatic power.

I believe we could purchase Greenland for the price of half a modern battleship, or for $40,000,000, or less. I am no imperialist and do not favor extending our possessions either into the Far East, Europe, or Africa, but only in our own hemisphere.

I voted for the independence of the Philippines and want to get out of there at the earliest possible moment. The Philippines are 6,000 miles from our coast and are the Achilles' heel of the United States. The sooner we relinquish these possessions the better it will be for us.

I am likewise in favor of giving up voluntarily our extraterritorial rights in China and withdrawing our troops and river gunboats from a nation with which we are at peace.

I feel sure that I express the point of view of most of the American people, irrespective of party affiliations, that we do not want Germany to acquire Greenland, nor would we like to have Great Britain add to her already vast possessions within the American continent. We would prefer to enter into some equitable agreement to take over Bermuda and the West Indies and her other possessions in the Western Hemisphere. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include in some remarks I propose to make today copy of a letter written by the Comptroller General to the Attorney General.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. IZAC asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. HARTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an address delivered by Director John Edgar Hoover, of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, before the convention of the Daughters of the American Revolution this morning.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HARTLEY]?

There was no objection.

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS IN THE UNITED STATES

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, when I hear Members on my right get up and say that they are not satisfied with the amount of money that will be requested for relief during the next 8 months or a year, it seems to me that that is an admission of defeat—an admission of inability to run this Government and restore confidence to our people. It does not help their cause to ask for a hand-out for the people of this country after 7 years of trying to give jobs to 9,000,000 people. That certainly means defeat—getting a hand-out. Great guns; we want jobs and a pay roll. What we want to do is change some of these damnable laws that have been passed during the last four or five years and let industry of this country get to work. If you do that, industry will put the people back to work and produce, and we will give jobs and work to our people and then they will be happy. You will not have to put our people on relief. It seems to me that is what we ought to do. Wait until after November, and we get a Republican Congress and President, and we will give these people something to do. They will earn money and will not want a dole. [Applause.]

AMERICA'S SUPPLY OF SUGAR THREATENED

Mr. CANNON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CANNON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, a committee of this House is considering sugar legislation, and I believe it timely to bring to the attention of my colleagues recently reported threats to our import supply of sugar.

The authoritive New York Journal of Commerce reports as follows on April 17:

BUSINESS OUTLOOK—RAW MATERIAL IMPORT THREATS

While stocks of imported raw materials are now substantially larger than they were in September, apprehension exists among consumers that spot supplies of some commodities might become insufficient if Scandinavian ships are withdrawn from the Far East trade. Involvement of Holland in the war would increase this danger considerably. * * *

Commodities chiefly affected, besides rubber, include tin, raw silk, sugar, and coconut oil.

The same issue of the Journal of Commerce carried this report:

SPOT RAW SUGAR 2.90 CENTS, YEAR'S HIGH

Apprehensive over the freight situation and the possible further spreading of the war area, the sugar market yesterday continued its forward modest movement. Spot raw sugar moved up to 2.90 cents, equaling the high for the year; domestic futures were 1 to 3 points higher. * * *

The freight position was the major concern. Reports were that practically all of the boats—estimated at 80 to 85 percent of the number in service—from Cuba to the United States were withdrawn from the market, temporarily at least, awaiting orders. Meanwhile, operators of American and foreign neutral vessels were reported generally to be out of the market pending developments. * * *

At the same time, it is understood that some manufacturers who use large quantities of sugar were opening negotiations to cover their requirements for all of 1941. With a war on and fears prevailing that it will continue to spread, the trade regards prices attractive for accumulation.

It is evident to me, Mr. Speaker, that we are rapidly approaching the situation which we had last fall when the American housewife was required to pay 7, 8, and 9 cents per pound for sugar, and that if we do not watch our step we will again be gouged by Cuban interests and required to pay 25 and 30 cents per pound for sugar as was the case following the first World War period.

The Sugar Act of 1937, under which we are required to receive over 70 percent of our sugar from foreign and offshore areas, creates a perfect set-up for those things to happen again.

And so, Mr. Speaker, I say to my colleagues that the time has now come for us to put a stop to that iniquitous Sugar Act, and I can assure those who have asked for its continuance, or for any legislation which carries similar provisions, that they have yet to see the biggest fight of the year. [Applause.]

STATEMENT OF HON. PAT CANNON OF FLORIDA BEFORE COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, APRIL 12, 1940, ON SUGAR LEGISLATION

Mr. Chairman, I have listened with considerable interest to the testimony which has been adduced at this hearing for the past 3 days, and I am impressed with the widespread and intelligent interest which has been displayed here regarding all types of proposed sugar legislation. Processors, farmers, refiners, and consumers have appeared here and stated their respective views concerning various and sundry bills which this committee might adopt. Some have expressed the hope and intelligently urged that no legislation be adopted. The committee has been most attentive and considerate of all views expressed, and under that benign policy it is hoped that you will indulge a colleague who has the honor of representing an area within the continental confines of these United States which has proven its ability to produce sugar for the American housewife at a very low cost of production, and at the same time pay its labor the highest agriculture wage of any area which furnishes sugar to the American market.

THE PRESENT ACT

The present act, insofar as taxing powers, expires June 30, 1941. The powers of the Secretary of Agriculture under the act expire December 31, 1940. The act allows domestic producers to fill only 55.59 percent of the American market; this includes quotas to the mainland cane, mainland beet, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and Virgin Islands areas. The quota for mainland cane is 11.31 percent of the domestic quota, or 6.287 percent of the American market.

This 6.287 percent is for Louisiana and Florida, and under the so-called historical basis, this gives Florida only 0.94 percent, or less than 1 percent of the American market.

In comparison Cuba is granted 28.60 percent of the American market; the mainland beet area, 23.19 percent; the Philippines, 15.41 percent, and Hawaii and Puerto Rico, respectively, 14.04 percent and 11.94 percent.

FLORIDA'S COST OF PRODUCTION

Notwithstanding the fact that Florida pays the highest wages of any area furnishing sugar for the American market, last year we produced 96-degree raw sugar at a cost of $40.69 per ton, which is the lowest in the history of the industry and which is in line with the lowest cost of production in the world. Reduced to cents per pound, this cost of production is about 2 1/30 cents per pound.

CUBA'S COST OF PRODUCTION

It has long been an accepted fact that of all areas furnishing sugar to the American market, Cuba has the lowest cost of production. However, under reliable testimony adduced at this hearing it has been shown that Cuba's present cost of production is in excess of 2.25 cents per pound. Cuba said last year that they were only receiving 2.25 cents per pound for their sugar and that this was in excess of their cost of production. This committee should give serious consideration to the fact that Cuba's cost of production is nearly 0.20 cent per pound higher than Florida's cost of production, and to the further fact that while Cuba and areas with a much higher cost of production are allowed under present law a monopoly on over 99 percent of the American market, Florida, by the same law, is restricted to less than 1 percent of the American market.

FLORIDA AS A MARKET FOR THE AMERICAN MANUFACTURER

This committee should be interested in whether or not the grant of the American sugar market to Cuba, other foreign countries, and off-shore areas creates a market for the American manufacturer.

In Florida there is an automobile for every 5 persons. In Cuba there is only 1 car for every 230 persons; in Puerto Rico only 1 for every 130 persons; and in the Philippines only 1 for every 490 persons.

In Florida there is a radio for every 7 persons. In Cuba there is only 1 for every 48 persons; in Puerto Rico only 1 for every 100 persons; and in the Philippines only 1 for every 608 persons.

A comparison of Florida's consumption of agriculture products such as cotton, wheat, beef, pork, vegetables, and so forth., with the consumption of the foreign and offshore areas which control our sugar market would be further enlightening.

I was glad to hear one of the members of your committee assert that, in his opinion, a dollar spent in this country for sugar created a far greater market for American products than the dollar spent in Cuba, of which only about 30 cents returns to this country.

THE EXPLOITATION OF PEON LABOR IN CUBA BY AMERICAN CAPITAL

It has been asserted with force that the present act, and any such quota system which gives Cuba a monopoly of nearly 30 percent of the American sugar market, allows American capital to go into Cuba, in preference to other areas which have high wage standards, and at the expense of Cuban peon labor, to take an unholy profit. I have been interested in facts to sustain this suspicion, and I am glad to inform the committee that they are now available and can be found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 22, 1940. The source is from reliable figures published by the Cubans themselves. It is shown that of the 174 sugar mills in Cuba, 67 mills are owned by American capital, and that these American-owned mills produce 55.75 percent of all of the sugar produced in Cuba. These figures further show that only about 22.2 percent of Cuba's sugar is produced by Cuban-owned mills. They show that about 55 percent of the benefits that accrue to Cuba find their way back to New York.

We know that of every American dollar which goes to Cuba only about 30 cents is used to purchase American goods. We know that our balance of trade is steadily increasing in Cuba's favor, which means that our dollars, when received in Cuba, are diverted either to foreign markets or to the nonconsuming public. Therefore, when I hear people advocating a continuation of the Sugar Act of 1937 and a continuation of Cuba's monopoly on the American sugar market, it is only natural that I view their arguments with suspicion, when I know that the things that they advocate are not for the best interest of the people of these United States. The best answer that I know to their pleas is to give Florida its constitutional and inherent right to the American market, and then, this American capital which is in Cuba will come to Florida and ask to produce sugar, and they can produce it there cheaper than in Cuba, but they will have to pay a much higher wage and maintain the American standard of living for their workers. If that is done, we will be assured that Florida will give to the American manufacturer a real market, and that every dollar spent there will be used 100 percent for the purchase of American goods. That's the real market for America.

It might also be noted that such action by this Congress would leave sugar production in Cuba to the Cubans, and would necessarily have a beneficial effect on their economy.

So much for the Cuban situation, except to say this: Even American capital in Cuba expects this Congress to wake up and find out the real facts this time, for in recent months these self-same interests have been buying land in Florida, anticipating that this Congress will throw the iniquitous Sugar Act of 1937 in the ashcan where it belongs.

THE AMERICAN CONSUMER

Some time ago on the floor of the House I pointed out that under the Sugar Act of 1937 the American consumer was paying a grossly unfair price for sugar. I pointed out that in January of this year the American housewife in the Southeast around Savannah, Ga., where Florida sugar is refined, was paying the reasonable price of 5 cents per pound for sugar, and that in other areas where sugar is received from other sources the American housewife was paying as high as 6.2 cents per pound.

It is not my purpose to talk about the "unholy alliance" so often referred to by the President and other high officials in speaking of conditions which exist under and by virtue of the Sugar Act of 1937, but I do think that it is advisable to remind this committee once again that high officials in this Government have repeatedly had the following to say about the Sugar Act of 1937:

1. "American consumers are obliged to pay more than $350,000,000 per annum in excess of the value, at world prices, of their annual sugar supply (without allowance for net revenues under the act of about $47,000,000). This is equivalent to a tax of approximately $2.70 per capita on the population of 129,000,000 people. It means on the average a levy of more than $10 per family, including that one-third of the Nation which is ill-nourished, and it represents an amount of purchasing power equal to more than 50 quarts of milk and 50 loaves of bread for each family in the United States." (Secretary Wallace.)

2. "In the first place, the domestic sugar-producing industry receives an effective protection, in the form of prices in excess of the world level, of 90 cents per hundred pounds, raw value, from the prevailing tariff on Cuban sugar. In the second place, on the basis of current prices, the effect of the quota system, provided for in title II of the Sugar Act of 1937, is to raise domestic sugar prices an additional $1.15 per hundred pounds, raw value. In the third place, the conditional payments to be made to sugar-beet and sugarcane growers by the Government, under the provisions of title III of the Sugar Act of 1937, are equal to another addition in protection of 60 cents per hundred pounds, raw value. The sum of these protective devices is equivalent of a specific tariff duty of $2.65 per hundred pounds of sugar, raw value, or on the basis of the current world price of 96 degree raw sugar, New York basis, namely $1.10 per hundred pounds, the equivalent of an ad valorem tariff rate of 240 percent." (Secretary Wallace.)

3. "In fact, the total public subsidy per hundred pounds of sugar, raw value, now being received by the domestic sugar industry as a result of direct governmental action is equal, in terms of the amount of sugar derived from average sugar beets, to approximately $8.40 per ton of sugar beets. This is considerably greater than the entire amount received by growers for the sugar beets they produce, so that it might be said that in effect the public is providing sugar-beet processors with free raw material and a substantial price subsidy in addition." (Secretary Wallace.)

The committee might inquire into the first point for the reason why the American consumer is vitally interested in sugar legislation. Ten dollars in taxes now being paid by the American family could be used to bolster the market for other American products such as cotton, wheat, milk, etc. If the committee is interested in the reasons why representatives of the beet processors are urging the Cummings bill, inquiry might be made into the second and third points of the foregoing. In this connection, I might say that it is human nature for any processor to protect his source of supply of raw materials, especially when that source of supply, according to Mr. Wallace, is given to him free of all costs, with the addition of a subsidy, the bill being paid by the American public in general.

SUGAR AN ESSENTIAL FOOD AND RAW MATERIAL

All agree that sugar, once a luxury, is now an essential food. It is vitally necessary to the health and well-being of this Nation. In addition, it is an important raw material in time of war. This is a time of war. Sources of world sugar supplies are being cut off daily from European countries. The strength of nations which do not have their own supply of sugar is being adversely affected. Sugar prices on the world market are rising. I quote from an Associated Press dispatch dated April 13, 1940, from New York:

"A bullishly inclined sugar futures market appeared still under the influence of war news today. Both domestic and world contracts advanced. Dealers and speculative buying was influenced by threats to European sugar supplies inherent in the broadening war, together with the high place sugar holds as a war and peacetime necessity * * *."

Just as important sugar sources are being cut off from European countries, so can they be cut off from this country so long as we continue our present policy of depending upon foreign countries and offshore areas which are vulnerable to enemy attack for 70 percent of our sugar needs.

We are with wisdom spending billions of dollars on national defense, and yet we are overlooking the fact that we have not provided any means whatsoever for the protection of our sources of an essential peace and wartime commodity. We can protect our source of sugar supply by doing away with the Sugar Act of 1937 and thus allow domestic producers to supply the American market. This action will be the taking of an important step in national defense. It will not cost this Government one cent by way of appropriation or otherwise, and, in fact, as previously shown, will actually save the American people millions of dollars. What greater contribution in one single stroke could be made in the interest of national defense and in the interest of the American people generally?

SUMMARY OF FLORIDA'S POSITION

Representatives of other sugar-producing areas will no doubt think thus far that my purpose is to attack the position that each has taken. Far be my purpose from that. I can say to those from the beet area that Florida is not interested in doing away with normal protection for them. We are willing to see them continue to have adequate tariff protection. Florida stands for this, and if anyone doubts it, let them take a look at our vote on the reciprocal-trade program. I would point out in this connection that with the abandonment of the Sugar Act of 1937, domestic areas would be automatically protected with a $1.50 per hundredweight tariff.

And, so, we of Florida say to the representatives from the beet areas, and from the other sugar-producing areas, and to all persons and parties generally, that so long as they recognize Florida's right to produce sugar for the American market, Florida, and we of Florida, will get along with them perfectly. On the other hand, for those who want to continue to stiffle an industry that these United States need and refuse to recognize that right by concrete actions, then Florida, and we of Florida, will fight to the end. Our position may thus be summarized as follows:

First. We will vigorously oppose the reenactment of the Sugar Act of 1937, or any legislation of similar nature, which curtails domestic production and Florida's production.

Second. We will vigorously oppose any legislation which provides three different and cumulative means of protection and are against, such cumulative means of protection which are quotas, tariff, and benefit payments.

Third. As to tariff, we contend that we do not need any protection whatsoever on sugar, nor benefit payments, but say that if the beet producers need protection we are perfectly willing to see the $1.50 tariff be reinstated and continued.

The reasons for our position have been heretofore stated.

WHAT SHALL THIS CONGRESS DO?

You ask me, Mr. Chairman, what shall this Congress do? The answer is simple. Take no action, and the situation is solved; quotas, benefit payments, and all other injustices under the present act will be ended. The beet growers will have their protection with a $1.50 tariff.

In this connection, several things have happened during these hearings which bear out my contentions.

First. The President did not express satisfaction when he signed the Sugar Act of 1937. In fact, he expressed considerable dissatisfaction upon signing that act. It is well to note that he has not asked for sugar legislation at this time. I have already given you some of Secretary Wallace's views of this act. Secretary Ickes views on this point are well known. He said in 1937:

"It will be recalled that during the administration of President Wilson, the Congress decided after careful consideration of the basic question of continuing to subsidize domestic sugar production, that the whole matter was indefensible and forthwith provided for the elimination of all subsidies.

"But there probably would be some improvement in efficiency in the continental areas, if restraints were removed, through the tendency of production to move to the lower cost and better adapted locations."

Nothing has happened which would show us that the considered opinion of Congress under President Wilson was not correct, and in fact, the chain of events convince us that its action was better advised that the action of Congress in 1937 in enacting the present law.

Second. Only one correct and sure conclusion can be drawn from these hearings and the various hearings which have taken place all over Washington in various hotel rooms and other places during the past 3 days. That conclusion is that there is a great deal of confusion among all sugar interests as to the kind and type of legislation which, if any is adopted, would satisfy all interests.

Therefore I say that if various and sundry sugar interests are at loggerheads over what legislation to adopt and it is impossible for them to get together, why should this committee endeavor to settle the controversy. This committee certainly cannot ask Congress to agree to legislation which sugar interests themselves cannot and have not agreed to. The wisdom of this argument is more particularly true when we know that the refusal of this committee to act will be to the betterment and benefit of the people of these United States.

In conclusion, I can assure you in no uncertain terms that Congress is yet to see its biggest fight of the year in the event it is asked to reenact the Sugar Act of 1937 or any legislation which smacks of provisions similar to that act.

THE LATE CLARENCE DARROW

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SMITH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one minute, and I ask unanimous consent also to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, this is the birthday of Clarence Darrow, one of Illinois' latest and greatest sons. The biography of every man, even of the most heroic, is but this trinity of sadness: "Born, troubled, died."

Darrow was born 83 years ago; he was troubled all his life by man's inhumanity to man; he died 2 years ago at his home in Chicago.

Darrow hated to die. Defender of the defenseless, he died to prove, as he lived to argue, that life is accidental and death its slow sure doom. Born in Kinsman, Ohio, Darrow lived in kinship universal and died an undisputed king of human kindliness. Others he saved from the Grim Reaper; himself he could not save. Let the muffled heartbeats of humanity be his fitting elegy as we bethink ourselves of his gallant ashes on this and every birthday. Let his continuing epitaph be the adapted lines of his beloved poet Housman:

They say my words are sad; no wonder;
Their narrow measures span
Tears of eternity and sorrow—
Not mine, but man's.

My words are for ill-treated fellows,
Unborn and unbegot,
For them to read when they're in trouble,
And I am not.

Darrow is dead. But he outlived gossip; envy he outlived. He lived down the perverse malice, so his friends hope, of such twisted piety as made death a poisoned dagger to Tom Paine and Thomas Jefferson, our earlier heroes of a mind too free to enslave itself with a faith more weak than honest doubt. Legend, which writes many a name in water and not a few in blood—let legend spread Darrow's name in sympathy upon the vastly skies of memory and echo his tenderness across the limitless gulf of future years.

Whoever through courage and high emprise has earned the right to live can never wholly die. Let Darrow become our Paul Bunyan of pity. Let him be our Robin Hood of courage against the heartless strong. Let this dead immortal mount to joint the immortal dead whom merciful memory has promoted to Olympus. Though defenseless here against death, Darrow there defies oblivion. Darrow is dead. Long live Darrow.

Solacing as is such simulation of immortality, it leaves affection empty and stabs anew our yet sorrowing hearts. Infinitely better, however, for Darrow to have lived and died than never to have lived at all. Now and ever will memory of him strengthen the hands of those who in his spirit work to soften the blows of fate and to even the score for the weak against cruel injustice and high-placed wrong. His friendly smile, his reassuring word, his gentle hand will linger long to strengthen our will to dare for the sake of a larger right.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix, and include therein an address by Clarence Darrow upon another great Illinoisan, John P. Altgeld, a former distinguished Governor of my State and in immortal death the Lone Eagle of America.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

FIVE PROPHETIC YEARS

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, when the world is trembling beneath the sword of Damocles from the threat of war it seems to me to be proper to call attention to some history of the genesis of our part in the World War and how we became involved.

Too proud to fight.—Woodrow Wilson.

1914

The people must even think neutral.—Woodrow Wilson.

1916

When pictures of the war in Europe are shown on the screen the people will refrain from applause lest some belligerent conclude that the United States is not neutral.—Woodrow Wilson.

You are working, not fighting.
You are living, not cannon fodder.
Wilson kept you out of war.—George Creel.

1917

Up to our necks in war.

LEST WE FORGET

1940

If in 1917 with Woodrow Wilson, saturated with a consuming passion for peace, we were catapulted into the greatest war in human history, where will we land when led by a blustering, bellicose, and brutally frank assailant of nations with whom we sustain relations of profound peace with threats of "quarantine" and "steps short of war?" If in 1917 with William J. Bryan, Secretary of State, one of the most eloquent and vociferous advocates of peace, we plunged into a blood bath on another continent to make the "world safe for democracy," whither are we going with a Secretary of State who irritates a jittery world with querulous warnings and a sensitive, potential rival with peevish admonitions and caustic insinuations? One thing we must admit is that if we get into this war we cannot blame this administration with its usual duplicity. The direction in which we are steadily moving is certainly obvious.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CANNON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made this morning and include therein a statement previously made by me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

PRESERVATION OF OUR FORESTS

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, the State of Oregon has the largest stand of merchantable saw timber of any State in the Union. It is cutting more timber today than any other State in the Union. It has great possibilities. This situation can continue for all time if we are able to adopt selective logging in the various operations that are now going on, so that only the ripe trees are cut and the young growth is preserved.

The sentiment in the State of Oregon has changed very much indeed in regard to the preservation of the forests since I left the Governor's office, and all now agree forests must be made permanent. I frequently stated, years ago, that to cut an unripe tree even on your own land is a wrong against society, which has a vested interest in the trees.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include therein a report made by our regional forester, Lyle F. Watts, of Portland, Oreg.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

CIVIL AERONAUTICS AUTHORITY

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I have been studying, as we all have, the fourth reorganization plan, and I wish to give my present views to you by reading you my reply to a very moving telegram we all received from David L. Behncke, president of the Air Line Pilots Association. My letter reads as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 17, 1940.

Mr. DAVID L. BEHNCKE,
President, Air Line Pilots Association,
708 Fourteenth Street NW., Washington, D. C.

DEAR Mr. BEHNCKE: I have received your telegram of April 16, pleading that I do everything possible to prevent approval of the President's fourth reorganization plan. This order destroys the independence of the Civil Aeronautics Authority, liquidates the independent Air Safety Board, and turns commercial aviation back into the hands of Commerce Department politics under Harry Hopkins.

I am a quiet birdman. I started to fly in 1916; was a pilot in the Naval Air Service during the war, and Ohio's first director of aeronautics. I have been studying the background of this astounding Executive order affecting the C. A. A., and from all the information I can obtain, it appears completely undeserved and indefensible.

We have just celebrated a year of perfect safety with no air-line fatalities or injuries to passengers or pilots, and during that same year the air lines operated for the first time in the black. The separation of the industrial regulations from safety investigation, and the quarantining of both from politics, has produced results unsurpassed in aviation history. The C. A. A. and Air Safety Board deserved commendation instead of annihilation.

Since there is no apparent explanation for his executive action, I am wondering whether there may not be some secret sinister explanation?

For the second time the President has delivered a blitzkrieg blow to commercial aviation. The 1934 air-mail cancelation appeared merely incredibly stupid at the time. After 12 gallant Army pilots had lost their lives flying the mail, and after the indefensible cancelations had cost the taxpayers millions of dollars, we learned that the cancelation coincided precisely with efforts of relatives and friends of the President to "reorganize" the aviation industry on a "satisfactory" basis.

We know the difficulties which Congress faced at the hands of the Executive in reconstructing out of the chaos which followed cancelation, the independent C. A. A. and Air Safety Board Administration. Just as this new arrangement had produced the most successful year in aviation history, the President delivered this second devastating blow, without warning to, and apparently without consultation with, the pilots, the industry, or even the C. A. A. administrative officials themselves. This, on its face, is at worst sinister and at best, senseless.

I am ready to do everything I can to defeat Reorganization Plan No. IV and also plan No. III, which is apparently part of the same plot against independent air regulation and safety investigation. This is once more a fight to save an industry and to save human life. American air commerce simply cannot stand even 6 months of the Hopkins brand of W. P. A. administration.

Sincerely,

JOHN M. VORYS, M. C.

The CAPITOL, April 17, 1940.

REPEAL OF LAWS

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I take this time to suggest to my friend the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] that he would render a great service to this House if he would stipulate what laws the Republicans are going to repeal when and if they get into power. I challenge him to do that on the floor of this House and put it into the RECORD.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to place that material in the RECORD right after these remarks of the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will go in the Appendix of the RECORD.

Mr. RICH. I should like to put it in the RECORD right after this speech, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

Mr. RICH. They do not want to know what these things are, what laws I would change that would give jobs to 8,000,000 people and restore confidence.

COMPENSATION FOR CERTAIN DEPENDENTS OF WORLD WAR VETERANS

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include a report from the Veterans' Administration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, the Washington Post of Tuesday quoted the chairman of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation as saying that the annual cost of H. R. 9000 would be between six and eight million dollars. I have in my hand a report on H. R. 9000, received from the Veterans' Administration, stating that the estimated maximum first-year cost of H. R. 9000 will be approximately $48,386,000, plus a sum impossible to estimate, which will provide for widows married between 1921 and 1938 who had children born during those years and whose children are not over 18 years of age. What this bill will cost after the first year no one has yet computed.

This is the bill we were asked to pass by unanimous consent last Monday. Now we are being asked to sign a discharge petition to discharge the Rules Committee from consideration of H. R. 9000, a petition placed on the Clerk's desk a few minutes after the bill was struck from the Consent Calendar and before the Rules Committee had a chance to act.

I do not believe the average World War veteran approves of such tactics. It will be a sorry day to veterans and all citizens when the orderly procedure of this House and of committee action is broken down. Let us not slam the door in the face of the widows and children whose men gave their lives in battle, many of whom lie buried in France. I hope to have time to discuss H. R. 9000 at length tomorrow afternoon.

Mr. Speaker, the report to which I have referred is as follows:

The Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation, to whom was referred H. R. 9000, entitled "A bill to provide more adequate compensation for certain dependents of World War veterans, and for other purposes," having considered the same report favorably thereon with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

For several years bills have been referred to the committee providing compensation benefits for the widows, children, and dependent parents of World War veterans without regard to the cause of the veteran's death or the requirement of the existence of a service-connected disability at the time of death. H. R. 9000 provides such a grant at the following rates:

Widow but no child, $20; widow and one child, $28; widow and two children, $34 (with $4 for each additional child); no widow but one child, $12; no widow but two children, $18 (equally divided); no widow but three children, $24 (equally divided) (with $3 for each additional child; total amount to be equally divided); dependent mother or father, $20; or both, $15 (each). As to the widow, child, or children, the total compensation payable cannot exceed $56.

As is customary with legislation of this character, the veteran must have served honorably for a period of 90 days or more during the World War, or, if less than 90 days, was discharged for disability incurred in the service in line of duty. It is also required that the veteran must have been in the active service before the cessation of hostilities (November 11, 1918), but as to those persons who served with the United States military forces in Russia prior to April 2, 1920.

The provisions of the bill are more restrictive than similar existing legislation applicable to widows and children of prior wars in that it requires a widow to prove dependency under regulations to be prescribed by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, while under the provisions of existing law it is not required that the widow show dependency. Under existing law (Public, No. 484, 73d Cong., as amended), as to compensation for World War veterans where the veteran at time of death had a service-connected disability, an income limitation is for application as follows:

"Payment of compensation under the provisions of this act shall not be made to any widow without a child, or a child, whose annual income exceeds $1,000, or to a widow with a child or children whose annual income exceeds $2,500. In determining annual income, payments of war-risk term insurance, United States Government life (converted) insurance, and payments under the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, as amended (U. S. C., title 38, ch. 11), and the Adjusted Compensation Payment Act, 1936, as amended, shall not be considered * * *."

The bill provides such an income limitation but from a practical standpoint will affect solely the rights of children.

A further restriction in the bill would require that the widow must have been married to the veteran prior to July 3, 1921 (prior to or during the World War), unless a child was born of the marriage to the veteran, in which event the marriage delimiting date is extended to include widows married to the veteran prior to May 13, 1938. The following provisions of section 3 of the act of May 13, 1938, Public, No. 514, Seventy-fifth Congress, would also govern the determination of eligibility of a widow for benefits under the bill:

"* * * all marriages shall be proven as valid marriages according to the law of the place where the parties resided at the time of marriage or the law of the place where the parties resided when the right to compensation accrued. Compensation shall not be allowed a widow who has remarried either once or more than once, and where compensation is properly discontinued by reason of remarriage it shall not thereafter be recommenced. No compensation shall be paid to a widow unless there was continuous cohabitation with the person who served from the date of marriage to date of death, except where there was a separation which was due to the misconduct of or procured by the person who served, without the fault of the widow."

The Veterans' Administration estimates that the bill would make eligible for compensation during the first year 30,500 widows alone, 66,700 widows with children, and 23,500 children alone. The estimated maximum first-year cost for the foregoing dependents is approximately $39,914,000. However, if it can be assumed that only one-half of these cases would file claim and be paid the first year the actual cost for the first year would approximate $19,957,000, bringing on the rolls the dependents of approximately 60,300 deceased World War veterans. There would be an additional cost to include widows who were married between July 3, 1921, and May 13, 1938, and where a child was born of the marriage but where the child is now over 18 years of age and not in school. However, no estimate of cost can be made for this group as there are no available figures on which to base an estimate. No deduction has been made for the dependency provision for widows as there has been no experience on which to base an estimate. However, it can be stated that there would be a greater number of cases disallowed because of the dependency requirement than would be disallowed under the income limitation hereinbefore quoted.

It is estimated that the parents of approximately 32,800 deceased veterans would be entitled to compensation at a cost of approximately $8,472,000 the first year. However, if it can be assumed that one-half of those that apply will be paid the first year, the cost for this group would approximate $4,236,000, bringing on the rolls the parents of approximately 16,400 deceased veterans.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute in order to answer the statement of the gentleman from Connecticut.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Connecticut is excited over the cost of the widows and orphans bill. The maximum that was presented to me by the Veterans' Bureau, if I remember correctly, was $24,000,000. My estimate is that it will be between $6,000,000 and $8,000,000. The Veterans' Administration invariably overestimates the costs of veterans' bills. Besides, this measure will take many of these widows and orphans off the relief rolls, and many widows off the W. P. A. rolls. I submit to the House that the widow of a veteran who served his country honorably in time of war ought not to drag his orphan children through the bread line to get something to live on after he has passed away, when probably the disease from which he died or the trouble from which he died was incurred in line of duty.

The gentleman from Connecticut had a right to object to this bill and he did object to it, as did the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] and the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO].

But we who favor the measure are going to do what we can to get a vote on it. We have not asked him to sign the petition; we will get enough signers to bring the bill to a vote without him.

CIVIL AERONAUTICS AUTHORITY

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, a great many of us in the House and in the Senate in order better to serve this Nation and our constituents find it necessary, yea, imperative, to fly the air lines of this country. When we get in those beautiful silver ships and see two able and capable pilots walking to the forward end we know we are traveling in safety. We remember the cry and the furor that went up in this Nation when Senator Cutting lost his life in that accident back in 1935. Think of the change that has come about in the air lines of this Nation under the Civil Aeronautics Authority and the Air Safety Board. I want every Member of this House to read carefully the letter I received this morning and which I shall place in the RECORD at this point from David L. Behncke, president of the Air Line Pilots Association, composed of those boys who carry us through fog, through snow, and through ice and sleet, day and night, that we may better serve the people of this Nation. [Applause.]

AIR LINE PILOTS ASSOCIATION,
Chicago, April 16, 1940.

Hon. FRED BRADLEY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. BRADLEY: Several days ago the pilots that fly America's air liners received news that was so abrupt, so far reaching, and so shocking that it left them stunned. President Roosevelt had announced his fourth reorganization plan to Congress, containing a proposal to abolish the new Civil Aeronautics Authority and the Air Safety Board and place the entire air regulatory and independent air-accident investigation duties that they have been performing so commendably back under the Department of Commerce, which made such an amazingly deplorable and costly failure of the same duties prior to the time that the new act was passed. The "why" of this is indefinable. The history of civil air regulation and air-accident investigation is a matter of record.

From the late twenties to the time that the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 was passed were black pages in the history of the country's air-transportation development. It is not a matter of suppositions, assumptions, or the preponderance of vaguely defined ideas, but what this amounts to is cold, hard, indisputable facts—facts established by stark realities, facts established by the loss of score upon score of human lives and the loss of millions upon millions of dollars.

On May 6, 1935, Senator Bronson Cutting lost his life in an airliner crash. In sheer desperation, the pilots, with the backing of a friendly, public-spirited press, started to lead the fight to free America's air transportation from the entwining tentacles of death in the air which was strangling it to ruin.

During the period that the Department of Commerce regulated the country's air-transportation network 473 persons lost their lives in air crashes, of whom over 146 were air-line pilots. The ranks of the air-line pilots were being thinned at the startling rate averaging one every 28 days; their passengers were meeting death averaging one every 15 days. The crash-scared public was afraid to ride, which resulted in unestimably large losses of revenue to the industry, and progress was stymied.

Air-minded Congressmen and Senators became interested. A Senatorial Air Investigating Committee was appointed namely: Senators Clark (Missouri), White (Maine), Donahey (Ohio), and the late Royal S. Copeland (New York). They did a good job. They listened patiently to everything that anyone had to suggest that might be the solution. The congressional record built up by this committee is truly a bible on air safety. The politically involved and obviously faulty regulatory and air accident investigating procedure of the Department of Commerce is all written in the record of this Senatorial Air Safety Investigating Committee.

Congress, the line pilots, and everyone else that was really interested in doing something about increasing air safety, worked tirelessly and relentlessly until in 1938 the new Civil Aeronautics Act was passed. The pilots had repeatedly pointed out through these dark years that the solution to the problem was to remove the control of civil aeronautics from the Department of Commerce and not only that, but to separate the functions of regulating civil aeronautics from the functions of investigating accidents and making recommendations as to what should be done to prevent reoccurrences. The pilots pointed out simply that no one agency could reasonably be expected to handle both functions efficiently and effectively because no one agency can be expected to decide against itself when something happens.

The line pilots recommended the creation of an air-safety board which was to be completely independent of the regulation making divisions of the Authority. The sole duty of this board being, without influence of any kind, to investigate accidents with the view of preventing reoccurrences and to make recommendations to the Authority which would, in the opinion of this board, tend to prevent accidents.

Congress listened and the Air Safety Board and the new Air Authority was created.

Now let's look at the record since the Air Safety Board took over. Accidents have been cut to a minimum and there has not been a pilot death on our country's air lines in the past 16 months, nor a passenger fatality in more than 12 months. A world air-safety record. During this 12-month period the pilots that are making this appeal to you now, not to permit the abolishment of the Air Safety Board, flew 87,325,145 miles and carried 2,028,817 passengers without a fatality. Contrast this to one pilot being killed every 28 days and one passenger every 15 days for the entire period that the Department of Commerce regulated civil aeronautics and investigated accidents, numbering a total of 473 pilots and passengers killed.

Certainly no one wishes to go back to that. The pilots are not quarreling with anybody. All they are trying to do is a good job so that American air transportation may continue to be No. 1 in world flying.

When Congress created the Civil Aeronautics Act, bringing into being the Air Safety Board, it won with one stroke the confidence of the American people and they took to the air. Real air safety has been established by the Air Safety Board, with the cooperation of the new Authority. This combination is paying dividends in lives saved and thousands upon thousands of dollars saved because of not having to pay the cost of crashes, and millions earned due to increased patronage resulting from the no-fatality safety record that has just been established, and we have only just started. It is only plain common sense to want to leave well enough alone. Your support to set aside the President's proposal to abolish the Air Safety Board and to strip the new air Authority of its identity and independence is earnestly and respectfully solicited by the country's air-line pilots who fly our air liners on the most extensive civil air network in the world.

Respectfully yours,

AIR LINE PILOTS ASSOCIATION,

Mr. Speaker, these men know far better how your life, how my life, how the lives of all of us in this House—in this Nation—who travel the air lines can best be protected—by keeping the Civil Aeronautics Authority and the Air Safety Board in its present state of existence, free from politics, free from the spoils of patronage. I hope every Member of this House will ponder this letter carefully before voting to permit this proposed reorganization. It is your life and mine. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the report of our forester may be inserted at the point in the RECORD where I made the speech.

Mr. RANKIN. Not at that point; put it in the Appendix.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair wants to call the attention of the Members to the fact that it is embarrassing to the present occupant of the chair to make objections when Members want to insert matters "at this point in the RECORD," but from now on, when the Chair states, "There is objection," you may understand that the present occupant of the chair is making the objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on two subjects: First, the subject of foreign trade zones; and, second, on the McNary sugar bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 73]

Allen, Ill.	Faddis	Massingale	Steagall
Barton	Fenton	Merritt	Sullivan
Bell	Flannagan	Mitchell	Sweeney

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this roll call, 377 have answered to their names, a quorum.

Further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including therein a statement prepared by Mr. L. G. Caldwell, an attorney of this city, analyzing the bill now under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in two instances.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including therein a report from the advisory board of the Committee on Patents.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and at the same time to place in the RECORD a couple of pages from the agricultural appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday the House granted me permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an article by Leland Stowe. It exceeded the limit by one-half page, and for that reason I want to now resubmit my request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Let the Chair state that the Chair will now recognize anyone to extend his remarks in the RECORD, but not for any time to address the House.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] spoke about the purchase of Greenland a few moments ago. Greenland technically is a possession of Denmark; however, since the occupation of Denmark by Nazi Germany Denmark at present is not a sovereign state. Since this is the case, I fail to see how any purchase agreement could be negotiated. Greenland is a territory without ownership at the moment. Because of this fact I believe the United States should establish a protectorate over this territory immediately before it is too late. Mr. Speaker, I would like to revise and extend my remarks at this point, and include therein a brief summary of Colonel Lindbergh's survey in 1934 for a trans-Atlantic air route to Europe via Greenland and Iceland, showing the various possibilities in Greenland for air bases and landing fields.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have no objection to this material going into the RECORD, but the Speaker just now declined to recognize the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE] to insert certain material at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not understand that to be the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts. Objection is heard to inserting the matter in the RECORD at this point.

Mr. RANKIN. I have no objection to having the matter put in the Appendix.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my request and ask unanimous consent that I may have 2 minutes within which to address the House after the legislative program of the day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I have been requested by my colleague the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SHAFER] to ask unanimous consent that he may have the privilege of extending his remarks in the RECORD, and I may say that he is now at his home in Battle Creek, Mich., convalescing from a very serious illness due to an accident.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

WAR DEPARTMENT CIVIL FUNCTIONS APPROPRIATION BILL, 1941

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 8668) making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, for civil functions administered by the War Department, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 8668, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether the moneys for the beginning of the third set of locks at the Panama Canal are in this bill?

Mr. SNYDER. As it comes from the Senate?

Mr. POWERS. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

RELIEF AND WORK RELIEF FUNDS, 1941

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair lays before the House the following letter from the President of the United States, addressed to the Speaker of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, April 18, 1940.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: In submitting to the Congress my Budget for the fiscal year 1941 I included an item for relief and work relief which provided the amount of approximately $975,000,000 for administrative expenses and the cost of project operation of the Work Projects Administration. This represented a reduction of approximately one-third from the amount which was made available for these purposes in the current fiscal year, and if used for the 12 months of the fiscal year 1941 will provide an average employment of only about 1,330,000.

In the message transmitting this Budget I commented upon the item for relief and work relief by saying:

> If conditions fail to meet our hopes, additional funds may be necessary.

The preparation of the Budget was completed in December 1939, at which time industrial activity in the United States was at a very high level. I regret to inform you that the hopes which I entertained at that time and which were based on the industrial outlook then prevailing, have not been sufficiently realized, and that it is therefore, in my judgment, now necessary to adopt measures for dealing with the situation which exists today and which may be quite confidently predicted for the next few months.

The industrial production index of the Federal Reserve Board for December stood at 128, an all-time high. In January it declined to 119 and in February to 109. The preliminary index for the month of March is 105. It is hoped that it will not go lower than this.

It is extremely difficult to predict at this time the volume of employment in private industry that will be provided throughout the whole fiscal year 1941. The present indications are that leaving out any violent fluctuations which may occur due to events abroad, private employment in the fiscal year 1941 will be as high as in the fiscal year 1940.

There is certainly at the present time no information available to justify a reduction in the program of the Work Projects Administration below that which has been carried on in the current fiscal year with an appropriation of approximately one and one-half billion dollars.

In my judgment the most logical action that the Congress could take at this time would be to appropriate the Budget item for the Work Projects Administration but to lodge discretionary authority in me or in the Commissioner of Work Projects to expend this amount in the first 8 months of the fiscal year, on condition that unemployment conditions in the country are such as to require such expenditure within that period. I can assure you that if this discretionary authority is provided in the Appropriation Act, the appropriation will not be expended within the 8 months unless it is absolutely necessary to avoid suffering and hardship.

If the appropriation is made with the provision which I have just described, the incoming Congress will have the period from January 3 to March 1, 1941, to deal with the question of the need of providing funds for the last 4 months of the fiscal year, if such need is then apparent. It may also be necessary, in connection with the consideration of this question, at that time to give attention to the related question as to whether taxation will be necessary in order to provide the needed funds.

I would like to make it clear that I am asking only for authority to exercise a limited discretion in the expenditure of the appropriation, and that I am not asking that the principle of apportionment which is written into the current Appropriation Act be abandoned. I believe it is entirely proper and advisable for the Congress to include the apportionment principle in the act, but this principle can just as logically be extended over the 8 months' period as over the entire fiscal year.

Very truly yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

HON. WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD,
Speaker, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

The communication was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered printed.

THE LOGAN-WALTER BILL

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 6324, to provide for the more expeditious settlement of disputes with the United States, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 6324, with Mr. KERR in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COCHRAN. I make the point of order that the committee amendment has not been voted on, and it should be voted on before we proceed with any further amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee amendment is subject to amendment if any amendments are offered.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DIRKSEN. May the committee be advised by the Chair what is pending before the Committee at the present time?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendment now pending.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: On page 15, after line 9, insert "all Federal lending agencies, the Federal Trade Commission."

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, there was an amendment to the committee amendment, on page 15, line 10, strike out "all Federal lending agencies" and insert "Federal Loaning Agency and all agencies and independent agencies grouped thereunder."

I ask unanimous consent that that amendment to the amendment be withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is granted.

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to prefer a unanimous-consent request.

I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this last section close in 40 minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. RANKIN. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. CELLER. I ask unanimous consent that all debate close in 1 hour.

Mr. RANKIN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, we are going to object to all such requests. We have a great many amendments to offer. This section is the gist of the bill. Various Members have amendments to offer and we do not want to be shut off without time to explain those amendments. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his request, because I expect to object to it.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it an amendment to the committee amendment?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. The committee amendment has been withdrawn by unanimous consent, as I understand it.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee amendment is still pending. Is there any amendment to the committee amendment?

Mr. WALTER. There is no amendment to the committee amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman just explain what this amendment does?

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, it was the intention of the committee to except from the operation of the bill all of the Federal lending activities. That includes the activities grouped under the President's Reorganization Plans I and II, under the Federal Loaning Agency, together with the Farm Credit Administration, the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation, the Commodity Credit Corporation, and the Rural Electrification Administration. The committee felt that there ought not be any right to appeal to the courts in the event there is refusal to grant a loan. Certainly the Federal Housing Administration and the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation, and these other independent agencies that are not lending agencies, ought to be excepted, together with all of the Federal lending activities.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. Does the gentleman include the Rural Electrification Administration in his amendment?

Mr. WALTER. Oh, yes. That is included as a lending agency.

Mr. RANKIN. You exempt it from the provisions of the bill?

Mr. WALTER. Yes. That is included in the language.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. WALTER. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. The Home Owners Loan Corporation, I take it, would not be included, because they no longer make any loans?

Mr. WALTER. That is correct.

Mr. CELLER. But they would be called a lending agency. They did make loans, of course, and now they are liquidating them. I am asking for information.

Mr. WALTER. Of course, that is purely academic. I am sure they would not be affected, because they are no longer making loans.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. The gentleman made the statement that the Home Owners' Loan Corporation is not making any loans. Is it not a fact that in the resale of these properties which they have taken over, about $500,000,000 worth, they expect to resell, and is not that Corporation making loans?

Mr. WALTER. No. They are taking mortgages on the properties that they now own—purchase-money mortgages when the property is sold—as I understand it. There is a small down payment, and then the Corporation takes a purchase-money mortgage for the balance.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Is it not a fact that some of those mortgages are actually foreclosed and become the property of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation?

Mr. WALTER. That is correct.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Then when it sells this property it must make a loan?

Mr. WALTER. Oh, no; they do not make a loan. They accept, as part of the purchase price, a purchase-money mortgage. They do not make any loan whatsoever.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Let me ask another thing: On the question of repairs to the property on which the mortgage is held, they are making loans now for necessary repairs on those houses?

Mr. WALTER. That is right; certainly that is included.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. They are included in the exceptions.

Mr. WALTER. They are included in the exceptions.

Mr. GWYNNE and Mr. CASE of South Dakota rose.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield first to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GWYNNE. I think there is a little confusion about the exact wording of the amendment. Would the gentleman state the amendment again.

Mr. WALTER. The committee amendment is that all Federal lending agencies are excluded. The amendment is printed in the bill.

Mr. GWYNNE. It carries out the intention of the committee.

Mr. WALTER. That is right.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment to get some definite information. As I understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania a while ago, in answer to my question he stated that if this amendment were adopted it would exclude the Rural Electrification Administration from the provisions of this bill. Is that correct?

Mr. WALTER. Yes; the Rural Electrification Administration, the Commodity Credit Corporation, the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation, and the Farm Credit Administration are all lending agencies that have been grouped in the Department of Agriculture under this reorganization plan.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I should like to have the gentleman state, too, that the Farm Security Administration is also a lending agency in the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. WALTER. Yes; and that is included.

Mr. RANKIN. Let me further interrogate the gentleman from Pennsylvania in order that there may not be any misunderstanding. Does not the gentleman believe that the names of these lending agencies the committee has in mind ought to be enumerated in the bill? I mean the ones that are excepted from the provisions of the bill.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. May I suggest to my friend this danger: If, as a matter of fact, the group that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has read is not all-inclusive there would be the danger possibly of excluding a lending agency that does not happen to be mentioned. Does not my friend from Mississippi hold to the notion that if the general policy is to exempt all lending agencies it would be better to have a comprehensive, all-embracing statement rather than an enumeration?

Mr. RANKIN. All right, but here is what you are likely to run into. Turn over to page 13. There you will find a provision that if a court finds that one of these rulings was erroneous they may set it aside. They might come to the conclusion that the Rural Electrification Administration was not an exclusive lending agency because in addition to lending it promotes rural electrification.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. For a question.

Mr. MAY. Is it not a fact that the broad term "lending agency" will include any agency of the Government that actually lends money, whereas if you undertook to specify, the specific statement might leave out something.

Mr. RANKIN. Let me ask the chairman of the committee a question, because we do not want any misunderstanding.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. May I make this statement—and we will ask that the gentleman be given some more time——

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not want to be understood in my statement that I have aided in drafting this bill. The gentleman understands, I am sure, I was not in the position of responsibility when this bill was worked out.

Mr. RANKIN. I understand.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I would not like to be responsible for creating the impression that merely because some agency lends some money the agency under the language of the bill would be excluded, insofar as its nonlending activities are concerned. I do not want to assume that responsibility or to create that impression. Do I make myself clear?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; and dangerously clear, I would say.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I want to be candid with my friend.

Mr. RANKIN. I think the gentleman from Texas expressed my views on the subject and my fears on the subject. Now, if you are going to subject the Rural Electrification Administration to the provisions of this bill for all purposes except lending money, then the bill ought to be amended to exclude the Rural Electrification Administration specifically.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield for a question.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Does not the gentleman believe that the committee should insert in the section on definitions what is meant by the term "lending agency"?

Mr. RANKIN. I think the names of every agency they have in mind should be inserted in the amendment.

Mr. BULWINKLE. They should know in advance what a lending agency is.

Mr. WALTER and Mr. JONES of Texas rose.

Mr. RANKIN. I yield, first, to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. WALTER. The gentleman from Mississippi, of course, recognizes the danger of attempting to enumerate all of the lending agencies, because should we miss one or more then by construction it would be presumed that that agency would not come within the purview of the act. For that reason we used the language "all Federal-lending agencies" with the idea of covering every Federal-lending activity.

Mr. RANKIN. Would the gentleman object to an amendment inserting the words "Rural Electrification Administration" in the committee amendment?

Mr. WALTER. The gentleman may offer that amendment at the proper time.

Mr. RANKIN. How about offering it now and letting it go in the committee amendment?

Mr. WALTER. No.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. Was not the gentleman impressed with the statement of the chairman of the subcommittee when he referred to the rule of construction?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; I was very nervously impressed with that statement.

Mr. COX. Does not the gentleman understand it would be better to cover these agencies by the general language of the bill?

Mr. RANKIN. No.

Mr. COX. I hope the gentleman will offer his amendment then and let the House have an opportunity to express itself.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. Before the word "all" in line 10, add the words "Rural Electrification Administration."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RANKIN to the committee amendment: Page 15, line 10, at the beginning of the line insert "The Rural Electrification Administration."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] to the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RANKIN) there were—ayes 44, noes 115.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. RANKIN and Mr. GWYNNE to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported there were—ayes 60, noes 124.

So the amendment to the committee amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, may I suggest to the committee that it make clear and specific what we are driving at?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, in connection with the committee amendment, if they used the words "in all their activities" would that not clear up the situation? Would the committee accept that?

Mr. WALTER. Oh, no.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 15, line 17, at the beginning of the line strike out the words "was denied a loan, or."

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I wonder if in the maze of law with its ramifications and its subtleties which has enveloped this bill since it came before us there is just a little room left for the introduction of a nonlegal statement about the situation. Surrounded as we are here by those who are gifted in that great profession, one who is not so gifted or trained may well hesitate to enter the discussion. But as one often cannot see the forest for the trees so it may be that a lay opinion, hoping to apply common sense to the problem, may bring out the facts more clearly, or perhaps divest them of "a priori," "expressio unius," substantial and preponderating evidence and other lesser breeds, in order that all of us may enjoy the sight in the glaring light of simplicity. You know that is the method which the profession of medicine tries to follow. When we see a patient and tell him to stick his tongue out we do not hear an objection from a colleague who pulls a "stare decisis," or a precedent, or a decision handed down by the Supreme Court of the United States. We take a look at that tongue, stuck out to the limit, in order that we can see it in its unobscured nakedness, and then study it to draw conclusions from what it may reveal. Following this, after other bodily testimony is in, we start to cure the patient. Let us get a look at the tongue of this bill and "objections are overruled."

It would appear that this Congress from time to time has set up different agencies or bureaus in order to expedite the business of government. They, by the creative body, were vested with certain authorities and a certain latitude of action and decision, but nowhere does it appear that the part should become greater than the whole, or that these agencies should assume to themselves the legislative function possessed by Congress. But now it would also appear that the Congresses in the last few years—very few in fact, the number being about seven—have been working overtime and the total now of parents and offspring is in the neighborhood of about one hundred and thirty. Nor have these agencies been content to confine themselves to the purposes for which they were created but have wandered far afield in search of new laws to conquer or more victims to subdue. They are apparently overwhelmed with the idea that they are all sufficient in themselves, acknowledge no master, and proceed on the theory that they were in reality created to take over this Government and promote it to a bureaucracy from the more humble plane of a republic in which the people control instead of being controlled. So far in the debate I have heard nothing worth while to contravert this statement, which is, I am frank to admit, perhaps a slight bit overdrawn. But not even do they cease their efforts with the assumption of bureaucratic control and legislative functions, for they also invade the field of the judicial where they act as prosecutor, judge, and jury. There is no doubt that in all too many cases they infringe upon the rights of the individual citizen, constitutional and other. These charges here made are broad and inclusive, more so than they should be perhaps, for it has been brought out that some of the agencies are proceeding in an orderly and justifiable manner with no ambitions of aggression and should be excepted. But what has been said can safely be applied to a very large number.

There appear to be no fixed rules and regulations under which these bodies function but are rapidly drawn as the time and occasion demand. If they have them, what are they and where are they? Complaint is made that if at all in existence there is no codification of them, no fundamental order, and certainly no publication. In all this there is a strange resemblance to methods which have recently been employed in governments which are now in considerable disrepute among other governments the citizens of which enjoy liberty and freedom. But the worst charge I have so far heard is that the findings made by these bodies are final. In the case of the small-business man whose existence is so vital in our system, in the case of the individual not possessed of ample means, the findings are certainly final, for neither can afford expensive litigation, especially when he does not know the rules and will not be told the rules until the decision is handed down based upon an unpublished and nonpublicized code or one made up for the particular case that very morning. The individual, the small business man, the big business man, the poor and the rich, all who come within the jurisdiction of these agencies pay the penalty. Let us put it differently. Because of the methods of procedure assumed and adopted business and industry on the one hand suffer, and on the other so does labor, so close is, or should be, the attachment between them.

There ought to be unanimous appreciation on the part of every Member of the existing situation. There can be no denial that these abuses do prevail and will continue to prevail unless something is done about it. Whence springs the opposition to any movement to change this scheme of things? I imagine much of it comes from the agencies themselves, for they may foresee curtailment or even annihilation; they certainly can count on review and regulation. Some of it must come from the advocates or creators of the system, for these would not cheerfully admit that their brain children had developed into agents of frustration or even destruction. Some of this opposition may come from those who planned it this way and hesitate to admit that the plan is a threat or a menace and therefore a failure. Some oppose because they subscribe to the theory that "whatever is, is right," particularly if the thing that is had its inception in the era which began in 1933. All of these must realize that sowing the wind has produced a whirlwind.

What is the remedy? Well, the bill before us, the Walter-Logan bill, is offered with that intent. I am not a lawyer and cannot discuss its legal phases, but I will say that someone has yet to show me that the retention in the bill of the provisions that the "decision of any agency or independent agency shall be set aside if it is made to appear to the satisfaction of the court that the findings of fact are clearly erroneous" is a justifiable or even justicial cause for opposing the bill. Yet an amendment was urged to strike out this provision. I know enough about the grounds for taking an appeal in civil cases from a lower to a higher court to realize that such criticism is unfounded, and every lawyer in this body and out knows it. Seems to me I have heard somewhere about attempts to emasculate bills. I shall vote for this bill because I believe it to be a step in the right direction. It may not accomplish at one fell swoop all that is intended. It is possible to amend in order to improve its applicability; it is possible to repeal if it be found unworkable. Many times I have heard some of those who most vociferously oppose this bill make the same statement about other bills the passage of which they were advocating. I have no patience with those who demand that not any action be taken until a complete report comes from the special committee appointed by the Attorney General. In the meantime the house is on fire. As I said, I shall vote for this bill and I hope this House will pass it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VORYS of Ohio: On page 15, at the end of line 14, strike out the comma and insert the following: "which is subject to review by the Board of Tax Appeals or concerning or relating to."

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, if you will refer to line 14, this amendment would cause the internal-revenue exemption to read as follows:

Or any matter concerning or relating to the internal revenue which is subject to review by the Board of Tax Appeals.

The Board of Tax Appeals reviews only income, estate, and gift taxes. Social-security taxes are collected by law by the Internal Revenue Bureau as internal revenue. There is no provision for review by the Board of Tax Appeals of social-security tax questions. As a result, we have this situation:

The Ohio share of a taxpayer's unemployment-compensation tax, under a law which the Federal agency has found is in conformity with the State law, has been enjoined by an Ohio court, but the taxpayer comes to the Internal Revenue Bureau, and they say he has to pay, and there is no way he can go to a Federal court to secure an injunction against the payment of that part of the tax.

We have considered making all of these subject to review by the Board of Tax Appeals, but that Board now has 6,000 cases pending and thus such a review would not afford the taxpayer a speedy remedy.

Similar situations have arisen in Connecticut where the State court has enjoined the State's share of exactly the same sort of tax and the Internal Revenue Bureau demands payment.

It is a very hollow remedy to say to a taxpayer that he can pay his tax and sue the collector or bring an action in the district court as in a court of claims, and, if he wins, some day he may get an appropriation through the Congress to reimburse him. The relief that is needed is to permit him access to the courts, which would be provided by this bill for those taxes that are not covered for review by the Board of Tax Appeals.

Remember, there is no need to have the social-security money to run the Government. At least, we are told that this money is to build up a fund against future eventualities, not for present expenses. Therefore it is no justification to say that the Federal Government has to have this money without delay, whether or not it is entitled to it.

There is no reason for extending the internal-revenue exemption to matters that are not covered by independent review. This little amendment will provide the salutary independent review which is granted by this bill to social-security and other Federal taxes when the taxpayer has no means of securing an independent review before he pays his money. Under this bill the courts will have the power in proper cases to grant injunctions and to require a stay of payment of the tax under ordinary court procedure.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman would bring them under the provisions of this bill. Then would they not have to go to the circuit court of appeals to start their suit instead of the district courts, as is now the case? Is not the gentleman penalizing the little fellow by bringing him under the provisions of this bill?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. No. If the Bureau turns him down after a hearing such as is provided in this bill, he could go to the circuit court of appeals of his own district or here in the District of Columbia in order to secure an injunction to prevent the payment of the tax. I know of one instance where the amount is over $12,000, and that amount has been enjoined by a State court on exactly the same principles that would apply to the Federal tax. He would prevent payment by injunction, or he would have the remedy still extant of bringing suit in the district court after he had paid the tax. In many of these instances, however, where a social-security tax is assessed, if the tax has to be paid before relief is granted it will wipe out the taxpayer, so that he can no longer seek relief.

Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will be agreed to. [Applause.]

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio to the fact that under the present law there are three methods for judicial review in matters such as he has in mind. The first is to pay the tax and bring suit against the United States. The second is to pay the tax and bring suit against the collector. The third is to refuse to pay the tax and then go before the Board of Tax Appeals. From the decision of the Board of Tax Appeals an appeal lies to the circuit court of appeals. Therefore there is today ample remedy in a situation such as the gentleman has described. I hope the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that social-security taxes are not reviewable in the Board of Tax Appeals, and that the only taxes that are so reviewable and which have this procedure, whereby the payment of the tax can be stayed while the question of liability is being argued and litigated, are income, inheritance, and gift taxes? Those are the big taxes, and it seems to me that if the big taxpayers can hold their money while their appeals are being heard, we can certainly extend this right to the taxpayers whose cases are often for small amounts, but whose taxes are just as important to them as the other specific classes.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield further to the gentleman; but I wish to point out that the other two remedies under the law as to judicial review still exist, and in the case which the gentleman has in mind those remedies are ample.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORYS].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. VORYS of Ohio) there were—ayes 52, noes 86.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which is on the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALTER: On page 15, line 4, at the end of the line, insert the word "the", and on lines 5, 6, and 7, strike out that part of line 5 after the word "naval", all of line 6, and the first syllable in line 7, inserting in lieu of the stricken portion the word "establishments."

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask a question of the Chairman of the Military Affairs Committee, who is present, as well as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER], with reference to that change, and that is whether or not the work of the Munitions Board in the purchase of munitions, the work of those having to do with the improvement of rivers and harbors, by the Division of Rivers and Harbors, both of which are under the War Department, and whether certain matters having to do with international and short-wave radio which are in the control of the Navy Department, are in or out of the provisions of this proposed statute as amended. I am confused myself and I would like to have enlightenment on that point.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment has to do with the strictly military and naval activities of the War and Navy Departments. It was the opinion of the committee at the time the bill was first considered that "military or naval operations" met the situation. However, it was represented to the committee by the War Department after the bill was reported, that "establishments" should be substituted for "operations", because the word "establishments" has a well-known technical meaning. So really the only change is the word "establishments" for operations, and that change being made it is no longer necessary to indicate that no attempt is being made to interfere with courts martial which certainly the courts ought not to review.

Mr. BULWINKLE. How about rivers and harbors?

Mr. WALTER. The civil operations are included and, as I understand it, the departments are entirely satisfied with this.

Mr. BULWINKLE. So all civil operations, both in the Navy Department and in the War Department, are included within the purview of this bill.

Mr. WALTER. Precisely.

Mr. CELLER. May I ask the gentleman this question? As I understand it, when the river and harbor work was to be put in a certain department, the War Department was selected and that those operations were deemed purely a civil operation and not a military operation, and the War Department was selected because it had the personnel, the engineers, and the technicians to take care of work of that character. Now, your interpretation of the amendment confines it strictly to military operations or establishments. Rivers and harbors would not be strictly a military operation. It might impinge upon that which is military, but I wonder if it actually does. I think a great deal of that work, especially in time of peace, especially in the interior of the country, is purely civil and not military. I would say, generally, work on rivers and harbors like dredging and damming is or should be excluded from operation of the statute. It is not military work.

Mr. WALTER. Oh, no.

Mr. BULWINKLE. The gentleman stated it was not included, but then you run into this question: Suppose in some flood-control work the War Department engineers decide that a levee should be of a certain height and width over a certain territory, that case can go up to the court.

Mr. WALTER. Unless an emergency exists, and then it does not apply.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me inasmuch as he has asked me a question?

Mr. CELLER. I will be pleased to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MAY. I have no doubt in the world of the absolute good faith and intention of the chairman of the subcommittee to provide proper protection of our national defense establishments in this matter, and the gentleman has already offered an amendment which strikes out the word "operations" in line 5, and inserts the word "establishments."

I think the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE] has raised a vital question here in the matter of river and harbor activities, and with the word "operations" stricken out, and "establishments" inserted, I suggest that after the word "establishments" we add the words "including the War and Navy Departments." I do not think that could hurt the bill any.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. Yes. I firmly believe the operations, all of them, of the War and Navy Departments should be excluded from the act's operation.

Mr. WALTER. The amendment changing the word "operations" to "establishments" was handed to me by the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] from the gentleman's committee, and he informed me that he got it from the War Department.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. Yes.

Mr. MAY. I have just talked to the Legislative Counsel of the War Department, within the last 10 minutes, and they advise me that this wording would be a decided improvement and much more desirable to the War Department, and for that reason, and in view of the situation abroad, I think the gentleman ought to accept the amendment.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I say to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] that the last word upon the interpretation of statutes is not with the War Department, but is with the courts, and when the expression "military establishments," is used, I take it that river and harbor activities, or work, for example, of the debris commissions, like the California Debris Commission, which is in the War Department, would be absolutely excluded from the operations of the act. I would prefer to say, and I think that view will be consistent with the gentleman's view, that the War Department should now be within the operations of the act. Even with suggested amendments you cannot tell when these civil operations become military operations, and vice versa. It is a dangerous operation to tie up the War Department with any such possible limitation as that contained in this bill, and likewise with the Navy Department. Take the Coast Guard, for example: The Coast Guard has as much to do with national defense on occasions as does the War Department, and yet the Coast Guard is included in this bill. Certainly there should be some provision protecting the Coast Guard. Take the Department of Agriculture: In the Department of Agriculture we have passed through the years 40 separate statutes conferring upon the Secretary of Agriculture the power to issue different types of orders and regulations and to make various decisions, some of them police orders, affecting the public safety and health.

For instance, we grant power to the Radio Commission to issue orders affecting public morals and the public safety. Some of those police orders certainly should not be within the realm of the limitations of this act. They should be outside the act.

While it is true that an attempt is made, for example, to take care of emergencies in section 4 of the act, I do not think section 4 is properly worded so as to embrace safety enough to those administrative officials in issuing police orders. Take, for example, the Secretary of Agriculture, who feels that he should quarantine some animals immediately in the stockyards, or that he should issue an order destroying certain types of fruit. He must act quickly, there can be no delay. Subdivision (d) of section 4, to my mind is highly inadequate and might stay his hand, might give him pause, might cause great hesitancy in the issuance of orders of that character. For example, how can the Secretary of Agriculture tell at times whether or not there is or is not an emergency with reference to crops? There are many factors that enter into a determination of whether there is or is not an emergency, such as knowing what the quantity of the crop will be, and the weather conditions. He does not know what the weather will be tomorrow or next week or next month. Then there are credit conditions, operating in the rural areas, which may affect the amount of plantings, so that a tremendous burden is placed on the Secretary of Agriculture in this regard. The Secretary in those activities should not be hamstrung, yet he is under this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. For that reason I ask that we pause sufficiently to examine each one of the statutes that cover various heads of bureaus and departments and create separate appeal conditions for each one of these different departments instead of blanketing them all in under this bill.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. Yes.

Mr. BULWINKLE. There is only one thing to do, and that is, if they are going to do it, if we want to exempt somebody, to strike out all of that and exclude all activities of the War and Navy Departments.

Mr. CELLER. I would be agreeable to that.

Mr. KEEFE. May I ask this question in line with what the gentleman has just stated with reference to the Department of Agriculture: Does the gentleman contend that this act would cover orders issued by the Department of Agriculture, for instance the Biological Survey, in limiting the bag limit on ducks, or any of the things the gentleman has referred to?

Mr. CELLER. It would cover them.

Mr. KEEFE. How does the gentleman understand that when you read the definitions of administrative rules, and they are defined as including rules, regulations, orders, and amendments by officers in the executive branch of the United States Government, interpreting the statutes they are respectively charged with administering?

Mr. CELLER. That is interpreting the rules. I am talking about strictly administrative orders of a police character. They can issue those rules, and they would be subject to all the limitations and provisions of this act.

Mr. FLANNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. FLANNERY. May I ask how many new boards this act would set up in the Government?

Mr. CELLER. I am informed by the book issued by the Brookings Institution that some 60 new boards would be created within the various agencies. Sixty interagency boards.

Now, see how inconsistent we are if we pass this bill. Take the Treasury Department. One bureau in the Treasury Department, the Federal Alcohol Administration, is in the act. The Comptroller of the Currency is out of the act. The Bureau of Narcotics is in the act. The Federal Deposit Insurance is out of the act. It is an independent agency, yet other agencies of the Treasury Department having duties not dissimilar are in.

In the War Department it may be that rivers and harbors work is in the act. The Munitions Board may be out of the act. I am not sure about that.

Take the Department of Commerce. The Bureau of Marine Inspection is in the act. The Patent Office is out of the act. Quick action is often required under the Bureau of Marine Inspection Act, just as quickly as under the Longshoremen's Act, which is out of the act.

Take the various independent regulatory boards and commissions: The United States Tariff Commission may be in for some purposes and out of the act for other purposes. With reference to the Tariff Commission, it is exempted under the last section of the act, concerning customs, but in respect to uniform methods in foreign trade it may be in the act. I am not certain.

The Federal Power Commission, which passes on rates and competitive trade conditions, just as well as the Federal Trade Commission and other commissions, is in the act. The Bituminous Coal Commission is in; the Interstate Commerce Commission is out. And so on and so forth. There is utter inconsistency, showing that you cannot blanket all of these agencies in under one bill.

Today quasi-judicial orders are subject to review under special statutory provisions like (1) granting a license, (2) fixing a rate, and (3) a cease and desist order. Under this bill, however, all Executive orders, all administrative actions, even on minor matters—on personnel matters, no matter how insignificant—are subject to review. The transfer of an employee, the promotion or demotion of an employee, are matters subject to review by the courts.

In the Employees' Compensation Commission alone there are more than 4,000 cases pending. If appeals were to be had on these cases, the courts would be swamped. There would be necessary the appointment of scores of additional circuit court judges. Such matters as the award of a contract, the exclusion of an alien, the deportation of an alien, the hospitalization of a veteran, the granting of a license for a boat, benefits under the Security Act—all would be subject to court review. No distinction is made.

And what about the President's constitutional power of appointment and removal? How does that right of his square with placing action affecting individuals in the civil service under judicial control? It is questionable whether the courts can pass upon constitutional Executive discretion. [Applause.]

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. The committee is entirely agreeable to any language which the War and Navy Departments desire in this exemption.

An officer representing the Secretary of War presented this amendment which has been offered by the committee, and at that time I asked if it would not be better to put into the amendment the words which have been suggested by the distinguished chairman of the Military Affairs Committee of the House. He told me that they did not like the word "operations"; nor did they wish the scope of the exemption limited by the use of the word "departments"; that they felt it would be more all inclusive if the words exempting the various War and Navy departmental activities read "War or Naval Establishments."

I will say to the distinguished chairman of the Military Affairs Committee that if the gentleman of the drafting service will consult with his superiors or with his conferees and they decide upon the language he suggests, I am perfectly sure that an amendment can be adopted in the Senate, or if the information comes before the Committee of the Whole House rises, I am sure we will be glad to do whatever they desire. The intent and purpose of the committee amendment is to exempt from this bill the complete functioning of all parts of the Military and Naval Establishments of Uncle Sam.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I am happy to yield to the distinguished chairman of the Military Affairs Committee.

Mr. MAY. I certainly appreciate the attitude of the committee. I am not trying to raise any scrap with them, but since the matter has been under discussion I have about concluded that the word "establishments," if it is in the plural, substituted for the word "operations" will be all-inclusive and will cover the question. But, at any rate, the gentleman's very lucid remarks on the subject would leave no question as to what the intention of the Congress was with respect to the enactment of it.

Mr. HOBBS. The very question of your suggestion was raised by me and answered by the distinguished Army officer with whom I conferred.

Mr. MAY. My reason for raising the point was that I have talked to the legislative counsel in the last 10 minutes.

Mr. HOBBS. We appreciate the gentleman's contribution to the debate, and we are happy at any time for him to make any suggestion.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I am delighted to yield to the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. BULWINKLE. The reason I brought this up was because the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER] said that the word "establishments" would not cover nonmilitary activities.

Mr. HOBBS. The distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER] certainly did not intend to give the impression that the word "establishments" was not all-inclusive of the present activities of the War and Navy Departments, nor even of those that are not primarily and wholly military or naval functions. I will say to the gentleman that in the event any reorganization which may be authorized in the future would take one of the existing establishments out from under the military or naval authorities of the United States this exemption would go with it in its new home, wherever it might be.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Will the gentleman tell me why the Coast Guard was not exempted from the provisions of this bill?

Mr. HOBBS. I think it is clearly exempted by the pending amendment during any period of hostilities.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Where and how?

Mr. HOBBS. In the words of this amendment. It is part of the Establishment of the Navy.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Is that a part of the Naval Establishment?

Mr. HOBBS. I think so. That is my opinion, though I am "saddle bagging" and willing to be corrected if in error.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Is it under the Naval Establishment, strictly speaking? The gentleman does not know whether it is covered or not?

Mr. HOBBS. I will say that I am absolutely sure that the Coast Guard is a part of the Naval Establishment during war, and, therefore, would be exempted from the operation of this bill by the pending amendment during any period of hostilities.

I know that the Army and the Navy, the War and Navy Departments asked for this particular language, and that this is the amendment they desire and consider all inclusive.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HEALEY. The gentleman definitely states, then, that the amendment offered includes the activities of the War Department on rivers and harbors.

Mr. HOBBS. Yes, sir.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. It is always a pleasure to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. THOMASON. Does that include the Air Corps?

Mr. HOBBS. Yes, sir.

Mr. THOMASON. The Coast Guard is now in the Treasury Department. Does the gentleman feel sure it includes the Coast Guard?

Mr. HOBBS. The assurance has been given to me, in person, and to other Members, including our distinguished chairman of the subcommittee in charge of this bill, that the pending amendment is satisfactory to both the War and Navy Departments. It may not cover the Coast Guard in times of peace; in fact, it does not, in my opinion.

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last four words.

Mr. Chairman, yesterday I called attention of the House to the fact that this bill did not receive the consideration it should have received from the Judiciary Committee of this House. The Committee, as you recall, last evening rose, with no little embarrassment to themselves, with a view to getting straightened out on the interpretation of various sections of this act. They did not understand them then, they do not understand them now. There seems to be further confusion in the midst of the Committee itself as to what language should be used in so vital a section as one concerning our Army and Navy, particularly at this time. Again, the Committee does not seem to know whether or not the Coast Guard is exempt, whether they are in or whether they are out, or whether they are under the Navy now or under the Treasury Department. These are things that should have been considered most carefully in the committee itself before bringing this bill to the floor.

Mr. Chairman, I call particular attention to the following language which appears on page 9 of the bill:

(d) When the matter in controversy is such that the delay incident to the hearing and decision of the case would create an emergency contrary to the public interest and there is administrative action or inaction, prior to or without such hearing and determination, resulting in the destruction of the property or damage to the aggrieved person involved in such controversy, the findings of fact and decision when made by the board shall state the amount of pecuniary damage suffered by the aggrieved person, and upon approval thereof by the head of the agency concerned the amount of damages so approved, if acceptable to the aggrieved person, shall be certified to the Congress for an appropriation with which to pay the same.

Then, after all this happens, we have the appeal pending in the circuit court of appeals, we have a reversal of that decision in the circuit court of appeals. This Congress is in the position of having authorized payment to parties who are not yet on final appeal.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGRANERY. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the gentleman overlook, possibly, the language at the end of line 15, which reads: "If acceptable to the aggrieved person"?

Mr. McGRANERY. That is all that need be necessary, because the only party to the appeal here would be perhaps the United States who would pay it out if the aggrieved person liked the amount of money he would get, notwithstanding it is not on final appeal. I say to my friend that I understand that language very clearly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does it not further hold quite plainly that if the Board and the aggrieved person are in agreement there is no appeal?

Mr. McGRANERY. It leaves but one thing, I may say to my good friend, if the aggrieved person is satisfied.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGRANERY. I yield.

Mr. WALTER. Can the gentleman conceive a case where a man felt that he was satisfied and aggrieved at one and the same time?

Mr. McGRANERY. He starts out with a grievance, he is the aggrieved person; and he remains the aggrieved person until that grievance has been satisfied to his liking; yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will not the gentleman once more look at the language in lines 15 and 16 which clearly state——

Mr. McGRANERY. "Upon approval thereof by the head of the agency concerned." I read that very clearly to the House.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It clearly states: "The amount of damages so approved, if acceptable to the aggrieved person."

Mr. McGRANERY. That is right; exactly so.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is not that an agreement between the two parties?

Mr. McGRANERY. Absolutely it is an agreement. But without guarantee that it will be carried out.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Where is the appeal as to that?

Mr. McGRANERY. The appeal is right here in the Congress if, for instance, the head of the department runs into disagreement. Sometimes these boards around here are not operated by one man, many of them are not I would say.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania may proceed for 1 additional minute in order that I may ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. McGRANERY. I think I know what the gentleman is going to ask. I yield.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The language of the paragraph goes on to say that the amount shall be certified to the Congress. My friend knows that the Congress would not have to appropriate the money unless it felt the claim was just.

Mr. McGRANERY. Congress would not have to appropriate the money, and the Congress perhaps might not do it. But I say again that the language of this act shows the ill-considered manner in which this bill was drafted and handled by the gentleman's committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CROSSER: On page 15, line 9, insert: "Railroad Retirement Board, National Mediation Board, National Railroad Adjustment Board."

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Chairman, the three agencies mentioned in my amendment, namely, the Mediation Board, the Railroad Adjustment Board, and the Retirement Board, were exempted from the operations of the reorganization bill for the reasons in harmony with those which I now advance for their exclusion from the terms of the pending bill. The Mediation Board obviously cannot do anything that would require review because it cannot make any cumpulsory order. Its only duty is to try to have people in the railroad industry settle their disputes. That is all the Mediation Board can do. The same is true of the Railroad Adjustment Board. It brings together and tries to settle disputes between employee and employer in the railroad industry. How, then, could there be any occasion for review in such cases? So far as the Retirement Board is concerned, we must not forget that the money administered by the Retirement Board is contributed one half by the employees and the other half by the railroads. There has been practically no complaint about the decisions of this Board. On the contrary, practically everyone in Congress who has had any experience with the administration of the Retirement Act has been satisfied with its decisions. To interfere with it in any way, in my opinion, would not only result in confusion but would cause dissatisfaction in the rank and file of railroad workers who are satisfied with the work of the Board.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROSSER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CELLER. I am in sympathy with what the gentleman states, particularly with reference to the Mediation Board; but let us carry it a step farther, for the purpose of argument only. There is a National Labor Relations Board that has a function, and the Wage and Hour Division.

Mr. CROSSER. Now, I do not desire to discuss that subject at this juncture.

Mr. WALTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROSSER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALTER. May I remind the gentleman of the fact that the Mediation Board consists of five representatives of the employees and five representatives of the employers, none of whom are Federal employees.

Mr. CROSSER. It seems to me that it ought to be excepted from the operations of this act.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROSSER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Is it not true that the three boards exempted by the gentleman's amendment are paid for by the employees and the employers, and the Government administers only?

Mr. CROSSER. Certainly that is true of the Retirement Board.

Mr. GWYNNE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROSSER. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GWYNNE. May I suggest that the Mediation Board is in the same class as certain other Government services. The Government simply furnishes arbitrators. In connection with the Retirement Act, does not the gentleman think the appeal provided in this bill is more favorable to the employee than the appeal provided in the Retirement Act itself? In the Retirement Act you must appeal to the District Court of the District of Columbia or to a district court in the district where the Board has an office.

Mr. CROSSER. No. The Retirement Board has offices in a number of places other than in Washington.

Mr. GWYNNE. It is my understanding that the only place the Board has an office is in Washington. In other words, if a railway man in my district wishes to appeal from a decision he must come to Washington and make a complete record. We set up in this bill what seems to me to be a better appeal for the employee than the one in the act. Of course, I realize the gentleman is much better informed in the matter than I can be.

Mr. CROSSER. I do not think that the provisions of this bill are more advantageous to the railway men than are the terms of the Retirement Act.

Mr. HEALEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROSSER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HEALEY. The purpose the gentleman offers the amendment is to protect the beneficiaries of that legislation from interminable delays that are caused by going through the courts?

Mr. CROSSER. Yes; that would be the effect of my amendment.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Is it not true that the 21 brotherhoods of the United States are favorable to the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. CROSSER. I believe that is right.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I am wondering if we cannot reach some agreement as to the time needed for the consideration of this section.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I have a couple of amendments I want to discuss.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Let us see if we cannot agree on time.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto end in 1 hour.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER]?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto end in 1 hour.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the motion to change 1 hour to 1½ hours.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, may I ask that the gentlemen suspend with their motions and let us see how much time will be required?

The CHAIRMAN. It appears that there are 13 Members who want to be heard on this section.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my motion, if the gentleman from Mississippi is agreeable, and I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto end in 1½ hours.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER]?

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, may I ask a question? As the bill has been amended, I wonder whether it includes agencies making loans and grants? You have a provision in here that states "all Federal lending agencies." I wonder whether that includes agencies making loans and grants?

Mr. WALTER. Yes; it includes every agency grouped under what is technically known as the Federal lending agencies.

Mr. SABATH. That includes jurisdiction as well?

Mr. WALTER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER]?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, do I understand that the gentleman's unanimous-consent request is that all debate on the section and all amendments thereto close in an hour and a half?

Mr. WALTER. Yes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. May we have some information as to what the amendments may be? I am here to protect certain phases of this section. I am not sure that amendments will be offered in which I am interested, but if such amendments are offered, then I and several others over here are surely going to want time. Without some knowledge of what the amendments are going to be, I do not see how we can agree on a time limitation.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. KEEFE. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COCHRAN: Page 15, line 7, after the comma following "Board", insert "General Accounting Office."

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, if notice will be taken of the last sentence in this bill, one office is singled out—the General Accounting Office—which is exempted from the provisions of sections 2 and 3. This language does not, however, exempt the General Accounting Office from the provisions of section 4.

The General Accounting Office is an independent agency, but no independent agency is more closely related to the Congress itself than is the General Accounting Office.

Aside from all its postaudits and its preaudits, nearly 450,000 claims were considered by the General Accounting Office last year. There is no law limiting the time when a claim can be filed in the General Accounting Office, but there is a law which provides that an appeal from their decision to the Court of Claims must be filed within 6 years. The result of applying section 4 to this agency is that there will be no limitation on when a claim can be appealed from a decision of the General Accounting Office. No matter how old a claim may be that is now barred by the statute of limitations, insofar as appeal is concerned, under the provisions of this section it can be taken to the Court of Claims. In other words, claims 100 years or older barred by the statute of limitations can, under the provisions of this bill, be taken to the Court of Claims.

I have a memorandum from the General Accounting Office, prepared at my request, which states that if this bill becomes a law in its present form it will be absolutely necessary to set up at least 30 boards.

The work of the General Accounting Office is confined usually to the application of statutes, regulations, and so forth, and established legal principles to the facts as found and reported by the Government agencies involved which facts are usually not in dispute.

Present laws make sufficient provision for review of the decisions of the General Accounting Office. Section 236 of the Revised Statutes, as amended and carried into section 305 of the Budget and Accounting Act, 1921, Forty-second Statutes at Large, page 24, provides that all claims and demands whatever by the Government of the United States, or against it, are to be settled and adjusted in the General Accounting Office. Under present laws claimants who are dissatisfied with the decisions of the General Accounting Office in such claims can, almost without exception, have their claims considered on the merits by the Court of Claims, or the United States District Courts, unless they have delayed filing their claims until the statute of limitation applicable to claims in such courts has run against them.

Even if it be considered that the work of the General Accounting Office is such as properly to come within the scope and spirit of the bill, it is not believed, from a practical and economical standpoint, that the bill should be made applicable to that agency, for the following reasons:

The additional expense to the Government and to claimants would far exceed any possible benefits which might be realized. Considering the tremendous volume of vouchers audited, and claims considered by the General Accounting Office, it requires little elaboration to indicate the great expense which would be involved through the application to its work of the procedures contemplated by sections 4 and 5 of the bill. Considering that such claims involve doubtful matters, it may reasonably be assumed that a considerable percentage of them were decided adversely to the claimants. If the liberal assumption be indulged that the settlements of no more than 20 percent of those claims involved disallowances, the result would be that approximately 89,000 of those claims were settled adversely to claimants. Assuming that hearings were requested in connection with but 10 percent of such disallowed claims, there would be involved the consideration, under the provisions of the bill, of some 8,900 claims, or approximately 30 claims per working day. While the bill provides that a board composed of 3 employees shall hold hearings, and so forth, in connection with such claims, it is obvious that such a board could not follow the procedures specified in the bill and handle this volume of work. In the hearing of an average of 30 such claims per day it would not be exaggeration to state that probably 30 such boards—90 employees—would be continuously considering such matters. The result is obvious. It has been estimated that the additional work which would be imposed upon the General Accounting Office by the application of this bill to it would require an increased expenditure, for personal services alone, of between $500,000 and $1,000,000 annually.

In addition to the foregoing general objections to the bill, as applied to the General Accounting Office, there appear certain special objections to specific provisions of the bill, as follows:

Section 4 (b) of the bill requires that decisions, acts, or failures to act, or notice thereof, be mailed to persons by registered letter. This apparently would require that interested parties be notified by registered letter of adverse action taken in the preaudit and postaudit of all vouchers, and in the settlement of all claims. The volume and nature of the work performed by the General Accounting Office are such as to make this requirement in itself a delaying and uneconomical one.

The procedures prescribed by section 4 (b) of the bill, relating to the hearing to be granted claimants and the introduction into the record of testimony, and so forth, would practically require that claimants employ legal counsel. While many claims are of considerable proportion, in most cases the amount of the claim involved would not justify a claimant either in appearing for a hearing or in employing counsel, particularly where, as in the average case, the facts are not in dispute. And the many small claimants may under present procedure have their claims reviewed without the necessity of employing counsel.

The requirement for stenographic reporting of the hearings would involve considerable additional expense, and in this connection it should be remembered that in most of the claims and accounts, the amounts involved are small, the facts are not in dispute, and with respect to claims, they could in most cases be filed, under existing law, in the Court of Claims or the United States District Courts.

Section 4 (c) of the bill relates to the attendance and testimony of witnesses, the production of documents, and so forth, and provides for the payment of fees and mileage to witnesses subpenaed or whose deposition is taken. Bearing in mind that most claims considered by the General Accounting Office could be filed in the appropriate courts; that but a small proportion of the claims would justify the expense entailed by this provision, either to the Government or to the claimants; and that generally the facts are not in dispute; this provision would seriously interfere with the present simple and economical procedure for handling claims in the General Accounting Office and throw upon it large additional costs for both claimants and the Government.

Section 4 (f) of the bill apparently would establish a limitation of 1 year from the date on which a controversy arose within which a request for a hearing could be filed although under the present law there is no statute of limitations generally upon the filing of claims or requests for review in the General Accounting Office. A claimant could not obtain a hearing before the General Accounting Office unless request therefor was filed within 1 year from the date the controversy arose, although it would, in most cases, be entitled to file suit in the Court of Claims or the United States District Court within 6 years from the date the cause of action arose. This subsection would be applicable only to claims arising from controversies and the intended meaning of the word "controversies" would be a subject for interpretation. It is probable, however, that it would have to be interpreted to cover a large percentage of all claims filed in the General Accounting Office.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. I have no disposition to criticize the General Accounting Office, but I do happen to know that the attitude they take toward a claimant is not fair. When a claim goes into the General Accounting Office their attorneys are put to work to find some way whereby it can be rejected. Their business is to defeat honest claims of the taxpayers of this country rather than to strive to ascertain what is fair and just, and do that.

Mr. COCHRAN. I may say to my good friend from Georgia that the only criticism I have heard of the General Accounting Office prior to this time has come from the executive branch of the Government, because they hold the General Accounting Office has been too strict in its interpretation of laws.

Mr. COX. If the gentleman wants the truth, and he has some friend in the Legal Division of the General Accounting Office and will call him in and consult with him, he will find that what I have said is true.

Mr. COCHRAN. I may say to the gentleman that he evidently has been talking to the gentleman in whose mind this bill was conceived.

Mr. COX. No.

Mr. COCHRAN. A former employee of the General Accounting Office is responsible for this legislation, and I care not what any member of the Committee on the Judiciary says to the contrary.

Mr. COX. I do not know who that man is.

Mr. COCHRAN. His name is McGuire.

Mr. COX. The people I have talked to are now in the employ of the General Accounting office. If, however, a discharged employee is responsible for this bill and it becomes a law, the people of this country ought to erect a monument to him.

Mr. COCHRAN. I do not think so. I do not agree with the gentleman.

I am going to appeal to my distinguished friend from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] who set himself up yesterday as the head of the liberals in this Congress to get his group together and support this worthy amendment. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I, for one, want to see the results of the investigation of the Attorney General's committee on administrative procedure before voting on the question of administrative law reform, but I do feel even those opposed to the bill should try to improve its provisions.

I should like to answer the attack upon the director of the committee, Mr. Walter Gellhorn, in no uncertain terms. It was suggested on the floor of this House that he was interested in delaying the report of the committee because he was getting a salary of $7,500 a year. This is rubbish. I have been informed that Mr. Gellhorn is a full professor at Columbia Law School, where he receives approximately this salary. Furthermore, the committee could not have found a man better qualified than Mr. Gellhorn to conduct this study. He has a brilliant record. He graduated from Columbia Law School at the top of his class. He has been Secretary to Mr. Justice Stone, and a member of the office of the Solicitor General under a Republican administration. He has been a regional attorney to the Social Security Board—and I point out that this was at a salary of $7,500—and he is now a full professor of law at Columbia. He is recognized throughout the teaching profession and the bar, generally, as one of the foremost authorities in the country on administrative law.

There was another statement about this committee that I should like to answer. It was suggested yesterday that Mr. Arthur T. Vanderbilt, former president of the American Bar Association, and a member of the Attorney General's committee on administrative procedure, did not subscribe to the committee's letter to the Attorney General which set forth certain propositions entirely inconsistent with the Logan-Walter bill. If you will take a look at that letter, you will find that Mr. Vanderbilt did sign it, and there can be little doubt that he no longer subscribes to the principles in the bill.

The only possible reason for not waiting for the Attorney General's committee on administrative procedure would be that the investigation will clearly reveal that this bill is fatally defective.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I was responsible for the nonsubmission of a unanimous-consent request that the debate be limited to an hour and a half. I understand now that it is agreeable generally that an hour and a half be the limit on the debate on this section and all amendments thereto. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in one hour and a half.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. DOXEY). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. GWYNNE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, as indicated yesterday, I have had an opportunity to examine the statement recently made by the General Accounting Office setting out the reasons why they believe they should not be covered by this act. They have two reasons for this, Mr. Chairman. First, they say the amount of work involved will be so great that they cannot comply with this law which we now propose to apply to many other agencies. They point out that last year they considered over 400,000 claims. That is correct. However, most of these claims were claims about which there was no dispute. The claims about which there would be dispute would first be argued and debated and litigated, in a sense, in some other department of the Government. I have been advised that the number of actually controversial claims would be, perhaps, not in excess of five or six hundred in the course of the entire year.

Many important claims against the Government are filed and handled by the General Accounting Office. As suggested by the gentleman from Georgia, why should not a man who has a claim against the Government have a right to present his case—a right which he does not now have in the General Accounting Office?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE. Not just now.

With regard to the number of cases that come into the courts from the General Accounting Office, let me point this out to you.

Appeals may now be taken on these claims to the Court of Claims, and there they make a complete record at considerable expense to the claimant and to the Government. Furthermore, it takes a lot of time of the attorneys for the General Accounting Office and the Government. Last year there were filed in the Court of Claims 497 new cases. Even all of these cases did not come through the General Accounting Office.

The next argument they make is that this bill will make it possible to bring before the General Accounting Office and before the courts old claims 50 or 60 years old. Let me call your attention to page 10 of the bill:

> No hearing shall be permitted before any agency or independent agency seeking affirmative relief against the United States concerning any controversy which arose more than 1 year prior to the date on which there was filed with such agency or independent agency a written request for such hearing as provided in this section.

A complete answer, I think, to the argument made by the General Accounting Office in this respect. I trust that this amendment will be voted down.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE. I yield.

Mr. KELLER. Is it not true that the very same thing you are talking about, the tremendous number of cases that would be involved, applies to every other single department or agency involved in this bill?

Mr. GWYNNE. They say that; but here is the truth about the whole thing: Every little transaction between a citizen and his Government is not a controversy. With regard to all these 400,000 claims they talk about, all they had to do in a great number of them was simply to write the check. The number of actual controversies was limited, as shown by the fact that less than 500 actually appealed to the Court of Claims.

Mr. KELLER. Either I do not understand the answer or the gentleman did not understand my question. I understood the gentleman to say that this would permit a lot of lawsuits where there ought to be lawsuits; and if that is true, would there not be a multiplicity of lawsuits everywhere or in every agency that is included in this bill?

Mr. GWYNNE. No; the real effect of this bill would be that it would allow a person who had a real controversy with the General Accounting Office with respect to a claim against the Government to try it there before an intra-agency board of three members. He does not have that opportunity now. He can now go into the Court of Claims and try his case after he has had it up with the General Accounting Office. He can go into the Court of Claims and litigate it and make a new and complete record at great expense to him and at great expense to the Government.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. DOXEY). The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COCHRAN) there were—ayes 26, noes 59.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I send to the clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOBBS: On page 15, line 12, after the word "Justice", insert a colon and "the conduct of the Department of Agriculture except under the Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921, Commodity Exchange Act and Perishable Agricultural Commodities Act, 1930."

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, it is highly significant that this amendment comes immediately after the word "justice." It not only follows justice but flows from a sense of justice. Take the A. A. A., for instance, in its operation. I care not where you go, the measurement of land is done by a committee of farmers, elected by farmers. If a party feels himself aggrieved from that measurement or that decision, he can take an appeal to the county committee, which is also elected by the farmers themselves. If he is dissatisfied with that determination, he can appeal to the State committee, and from there to the Secretary of Agriculture. There are countless decisions made in this program. I have been living in the Cotton Belt and a farming area—and 72 percent of all the people in the district I have the honor to represent are farmers—and I have yet to see a single person exhaust the remedies provided by law under the present set-up.

So I beg of you—especially on the side of the distinguished gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GUYER], the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER], the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE], the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SPRINGER], all of you gentlemen, I am talking primarily to you—do not vote against this amendment simply because you have not thought it through.

This amendment seems to be wise and right. Six million farmers in the United States may have petty differences with the Department of Agriculture, or with some committee or official in its administration of their affairs, but the appeals already provided for under the acts under which they are operating will amply take care of the situation.

Giving new rights may, in many cases, prove an invitation to use them without due cause. This amendment excepts the conduct of the affairs of the Department of Agriculture from the operation of this bill, save as to the functioning under the three acts which I specifically name, the Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921, the Perishable Products Exchange Act, and the Farm Commodities Exchange Act. Those acts relate to matters involving large interests, large volume of business, and they ought to be under the terms of this bill; but I submit that soil conservation ought not to require litigation, that farm-flood control which is embraced in the scope of the A. A. A. should not present litigable questions, that the A. A. A. in its administration and its measurement of allotted acreage and the checking of wheat, corn, or cotton produced, are not such litigable matters as need to be supervised and submitted for the determination of the courts; and therefore I beg of you to vote for this amendment, which exempts the conduct of the Department of Agriculture from the operation of this act, except in the administration of the Packers and Stockyards Act, and the acts relating to commodity exchanges. The functions performed under these three acts are, really, the only three sources of litigable issues.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I will be happy to yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. If remedies already exist giving the individual the right of review, then why should the gentleman think that if we gave him this additional right to litigate it would ever be used?

Mr. HOBBS. I have said to the distinguished——

Mr. COX. In other words, may I put it in this way: The adoption of this bill as written would not vacate these methods of adjudication that have already been set up and to which the gentleman has referred, would it?

Mr. HOBBS. No, sir. But provision of additional remedies might be accepted as an invitation to use them, and they are not needed as far as the Department of Agriculture is concerned.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HOBBS) there were—ayes 34, noes 53.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. THOMAS F. FORD: Page 15, line 9, after the word "commission" insert "the National Labor Relations Board, the Wage and Hour Division of the Labor Department, and."

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Chairman, most of the debate here today has dwelt on the amount of confusion that this measure will occasion if it is ever adopted. I am satisfied that this is a correct statement of the fact. I would like to have the National Labor Relations Board and the Wage and Hour Division of the Labor Department exempted and thus freed from the terrific amount of confusion that will result from the multitudinous actions that will be instituted to check the enforcement of rules and regulations designed to render the Labor Relations Act effective. This bill will affect not only 6,000,000 farmers but practically every man and woman in the United States who works for a living, because these two acts affect millions of laboring people, and I ask that this exemption be allowed to free them from the operations of this most vicious measure. If this bill is enacted into law, every lawyer in the United States who is on relief will get off immediately, because there will be work for nobody but lawyers to administer it. Its effective administration will paralyze the regulatory functions of over 60 departments of Government, and will again permit labor to be exploited and investors to be hoodwinked. In fact, it will throw us back into the good old days when billions of securities, based for the most part on wind and water, will once more flood the market to the profit of unscrupulous promoters and reckless speculators.

And, my friends, this is not one-tenth of the evils that will flow from this measure. It is a Pandora's box of confusion; the extent of its potentialities for trouble is beyond comprehension or computation.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I rise to say for the benefit of the gentleman from California [Mr. THOMAS F. FORD] that these are the two agencies which are most responsible for the pending bill.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. And for which this bill was framed to cripple.

Mr. COX. And ought to get.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. THOMAS F. FORD) there were—ayes 24, noes 73.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOBBS: Page 15, line 22, after the period, insert "No right of review hereunder shall be exercised during the construction of any public building or public works project as to any decision, ruling, or order made with reference to the prosecution of the work."

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the committee is in accord with me, and will accept this amendment. The purpose of it is simply and solely to obviate any possibility of embarrassment or cost by tying up a public-works project or the erection of a public building during the construction period.

Mr. GWYNNE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. My distinguished colleague of the Committee on the Judiciary may always count upon me to yield to him.

Mr. GWYNNE. Does the gentleman not think that the bill already covers such a possibility?

Mr. HOBBS. If it does, then no harm can come of the adoption of this amendment. But, if, as I fear, the judgment of the gentleman from Iowa be not as sound in this regard as it is usually, why not clarify the bill by this amendment so that the intent to rule out such a possibility may be manifest?

Mr. GWYNNE. I think the thought the gentleman has in mind is entirely taken care of in the present bill.

Mr. HOBBS. The gentleman may be right and I am not saying that he is not. All I wish to do is to protect against, possibly, a remote fear. We certainly ought not to leave even the possibility of "tying up" the construction of a public building, or a public-works project, by proceedings for review of some decision or order, when the same remedy may be resorted to after the work is done.

Mr. COX. I agree entirely with the gentleman, but the gentleman knows that we do have these tie-ups during the course of construction of these public buildings. The matter ought to be in some way regulated.

Mr. HOBBS. The gentleman may be right, but that is another matter. We are talking about a danger growing out of this bill. It may be remote, but it is certainly apparent. If we provide new rights of review, we should safeguard their employment to insure that the correction of one evil may not breed another.

Mr. COX. I do hope that the Committee will accept the amendment. I think it improves the bill.

Mr. HOBBS. Thank you, sir.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. Gladly.

Mr. DONDERO. I recognize the wisdom of the gentleman's amendment. If it is detrimental to the public interest to prevent the tying up of a public building that belongs to the Government, why is it not equally detrimental to the public welfare and the people to tie up any private enterprise?

Mr. HOBBS. The gentleman may be perfectly right, but we are not operating upon anything in this bill except governmental activities.

Mr. DONDERO. I appreciate that; but the same rule ought to apply to the rights of a citizen engaged in private enterprise.

Mr. HOBBS. But the gentleman is entirely too well versed in the law to believe that such an amendment would be germane to this bill, even if it were offered.

Mr. DONDERO. I am not arguing that point, but I am simply calling attention to that fact.

Mr. HOBBS. I thank the gentleman; and since we are evidently in perfect accord, I thank him in advance for his support of my amendment. [Laughter and applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, a moment ago the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] stated that this legislation was directed against the National Labor Relations Board. Now, certainly nothing could be further from the truth. The recommendation for this legislation came long before the National Labor Relations Board was ever set up and is not aimed at any particular agency.

Let me call your attention to the names of the distinguished gentlemen who contributed in the drafting of the original recommendation:

Louis Caldwell, formerly General Counsel for the Radio Commission;

Walter F. Dodd, professor, constitutional law, Yale University, and labor legislation adviser to several Secretaries of Labor, including Secretary Perkins;

Robert Maguire, attorney in the Land Office. At present he is president of the Oregon State Bar Association;

Justice Felix Frankfurter;

John Dickinson, a former Assistant Attorney General of the United States, and a former Assistant Secretary of Commerce, who conducted the trials in the Supreme Court, and made the arguments in support of much of the New Deal legislation.

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. No; not now.

Julius Smith, who was twice president of the North Carolina State Bar Association;

Robert Rugg, former Assistant Attorney General of the United States and son of one of the former chief justices of the State of Massachusetts;

Monte Appell, former Assistant Attorney General of the United States;

Roscoe Pound, dean emeritus of Harvard;

O. R. McGuire, former counsel for the General Accounting Office;

Ralph Hoyt, of Wisconsin.

The men who recommended this legislation certainly did not have in mind the things that have occurred in recent years that have aggravated the situation and demonstrated beyond peradventure of doubt the need for this legislation.

Mr. KELLER, Mr. McGRANERY, and Mr. HEALEY arose.

Mr. WALTER. I will yield in just a moment. I wonder whether any of you Members had an opportunity to hear the testimony of some of the witnesses who appeared before the Smith committee?

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. I did.

Mr. WALTER. Let me say I am not in favor of any amendment of the National Labor Relations Act. [Applause.] I do not think amendments to the act are going to cure the situation. The situation that needs remedy there is the elimination of about 90 percent of the personnel in that agency. [Applause.] I was literally shocked at what I heard, and, I might add, what I saw at that hearing. Particularly when I saw one little girl after another take the witness stand and announce that they had made the decisions that were passed on the Board.

Members of this House, the administration of that act has brought about widespread dissatisfaction with a law that was designed to mean much for the workers of America. [Applause.]

If other agencies such as the C. A. A. have found it possible to secure the kind of personnel that has made it possible to administer that act so entirely satisfactory certainly the N. L. R. B. should be able to secure the same kind of personnel.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike cut the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 5 minutes. The Chair wishes to call attention to the fact that there are a half a dozen amendments on the desk and the time for debate has been fixed.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, it is very unfortunate that this bill in its present form is before the House. Admitting, for the sake of argument, the purposes for which the bill is designed, I respectfully submit that no one in the Chamber knows what is contained in this bill, nor can anyone satisfactorily explain its provisions.

To give you an illustration: A few minutes ago the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS], when I asked him a question about the Coast Guard, said, "Why, that is in the Navy Department and, therefore, is taken out of the bill."

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Yes; I yield.

Mr. HOBBS. Of course, I did not mean——

Mr. BULWINKLE. Now, I want to tell you this: I only have 5 minutes, but that is not in the Navy Department and it is not exempted under the provisions of this act.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order. The gentleman yielded to me.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Well, ask the question.

Mr. HOBBS. I am going to. I did not mean it was in the Navy Department in peacetime, but it certainly is in wartime, and the Navy and the Army, both departments, are perfectly satisfied with the amendment that I spoke on.

Mr. BULWINKLE. The Coast Guard, under the reorganization plan, is in the Navy Department in case of emergency, but under ordinary conditions and at the present time it is not. That is what I am talking about now.

Then, again, I asked the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER], the author of the bill, if the nonmilitary activities of the War Department, even under the amendment "establishments," would be considered as exempt from this bill, and the gentleman said, "No." Another gentleman, member of the committee, says it is. Where is the certainty as to which agencies are under it or not?

Now, speaking to you in all sincerity, here we are about to pass upon a bill of this import and of this character, involving the administration of the agencies of this Government, as, for instance, the Veterans' Administration. Under the law as it always has been, these are the words in the Veterans' Administration Act:

All decisions of Administrators of Veterans' Affairs under the provisions * * * of this title, or regulations issued pursuant thereto, shall be final and conclusive on all questions of law and fact, and no other official or court of the United States shall have jurisdiction to review, by mandamus or otherwise, any such decisions.

And yet the Veterans' Administration is put under this act. In the case of the Procurement Division, a bid is made on a post office, we will say, and the low bidder gets the contract. The next man to the low bidder goes into court because of the decision of the court on account of Division regulations which have been adopted by the Procurement Division. And so on ad infinitum. This bill if it becomes law will cause all kinds of trouble in the departments, delay, and unnecessary expense, it will add 60 new boards of 3 members each to the departments besides the extra judges that will be needed to handle it.

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I yield.

Mr. McGRANERY. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the Federal Employees' Compensation Board, of course, would come under the provisions of the pending bill. Last year they had more than 420,000 cases. Under this Act there would be a right of appeal in each of them.

Mr. BULWINKLE. The gentleman is correct; 400,000 cases would come under this act in that one agency alone. You may say that is farfetched, that that is the maximum, but you must assume to take care of everything that could possibly arise under the legislation which is enacted.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HOBBS) there were—ayes 49, noes 44.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RANKIN: Page 15, line 8, after the word "Currency", insert "the Securities and Exchange Commission."

SECURITIES AND EXCHANGE COMMISSION

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, in my opinion, the influences on the outside of Congress that are supporting this bill and demanding its passage are directing their efforts at the destruction of the Federal Power Commission, the Securities and Exchange Commission, the Rural Electrification Administration, the Tennessee Valley Authority, the Bonneville Administration, and the other similar agencies of this Government.

The Securities and Exchange Commission is in a position to render one of the greatest services this Nation has ever had in breaking up or demanding the dissolution or integration of those gigantic holding companies that serve no useful purpose, but which, as I said the other day, sprawl over the Nation like a huge octopus and wring the economic lifeblood from every constituent you represent who uses electricity for lighting or power purposes. I know there is a great hue and cry on the part of those holding companies now when the Securities and Exchange Commission demands that they come in and comply with the law. They prefer to carry on their present practices of wringing from the helpless power consumers of America $1,000,000,000 a year in overcharges. They want to carry on their speculation and manipulations in watered stocks. If an honest investigation were made, it would show that, of the $13,000,000,000 they claim to have invested in these utilities, at least $7,000,000,000 or $8,000,000,000 is nothing in the world but wind, water, or inflated valuations. The Power Commission of Ontario, including the municipalities, have only $400,000,000 invested. They produce and distribute one-twelfth of the power distributed in the United States. Twelve times $400,000,000 is only $4,800,000,000, yet this outfit in America that is today trying to run every State government and is running many of them, trying to dominate and control the utilities commissions in every State and is controlling many of them—they claim an investment of $13,000,000,000. If you squeeze the water out of their inflated valuations, you will bring it down to anywhere from $5,000,000,000 to $7,000,000,000. In other words, you would squeeze out from $6,000,000,000 to $8,000,000,000 of water or inflated valuations, on which the electric consumers of this country have to pay dividends in exorbitant rates.

Another thing, the Securities and Exchange Commission is now beginning to enforce that provision of the law—the Hatch bill of the Power Trust if you please—that prevents them from corrupting legislatures, that prevents them from spending money in elections, that prevents them from spending money to try to dominate utilities commissions. Now, when the Securities and Exchange Commission begins to make itself felt as a lawful agency of this Government we have here a bill that would paralyze them, because you would have more suits brought by the Power Trust in the next few months than the Supreme Court of the United States could pass on in the next 4 years.

I sincerely hope that the gentleman in charge of this measure will accept this amendment and also accept one I propose to offer to exempt the Federal Power Commission from the provisions of this bill.

As I said the other day, the Federal Power Commission is rendering the most valuable service in its history and should be protected from such interferences as this measure would produce. [Applause.]

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I want to read an editorial, which is one of many that has come to my attention recently. This appeared in one of the leading newspapers in San Francisco.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to make a point of order against the gentleman's reading the editorial out of order but I would like to have him tell us the name of the paper in which it appears.

Mr. WALTER. It is from the Leader.

Mr. RANKIN. In San Francisco?

Mr. WALTER. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. All right.

Mr. WALTER. It is a good paper.

Mr. RANKIN. I know what paper it is. I hope the gentleman will read it.

Mr. WALTER. I read an editorial from the Leader, of San Francisco. The editorial is entitled "Star Chamber Proceedings":

An example of the new return to tyranny is the current proceedings of the Securities and Exchange Commission versus Walston & Co., in San Francisco.

There you will find a trial examiner, employed by the Securities and Exchange Commission, functioning as a judge. You will find the counsel for the Securities and Exchange Commission acting as accuser and prosecutor. If you listen to the proceedings you will hear the trial examiner overrule the objections of counsel for the defense, regardless of the propriety of the objections; you will find the strict rules of evidence ignored by the Commission while its counsel submits its case, but adhered to when the defendants present theirs. You will find the defense has the right of subpena only with the permission of the plaintiff granted on written application telling what each witness is expected to testify.

You will find confidential documents, in the form of income-tax reports, handed about indiscriminately. * * * You will find that the defendants have no recourse so far as this hearing is concerned.

Need I say more about the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. RANKIN. No; not if you are going to read that kind of stuff, that is enough, such as it is. Is that not the paper that has been fighting the Hetch-Hetchy proposition?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the amendments now pending to eliminate or exempt the Securities and Exchange Commission from the operations of this act indicate only too well that the ghost of the reorganization bill is once more stalking through the Well of this Congress. Last year when we considered the reorganization bill we first laid down a principle and then wrote in 21 exceptions covering 21 agencies of Government.

I rather decry the idea, and I shall vote against every exception put in this bill unless they are exceptions as to specific functions. I cannot understand why the Federal Reserve Board, for instance, should be exempted when only one or two functions perhaps might be exempted. I am not willing to exempt them, for instance, in connection with their authority to determine the admissibility of a bank into the Federal Reserve System. I am not willing to exempt the Interstate Commerce Commission except insofar as locomotive inspection, safety devices, and possibly rate-making are concerned. I am not willing to support lots of those exemptions because I think they hamstring the bill. I am going to vote for this bill even though it is not in the form in which I would like to have it.

It is always a matter of hazard, and I entertain a sense of insecurity, when I consider amendments to a particular bill. Last night I labored over an amendment to be offered as a substitute for paragraph (b), on page 15 of the bill, but I shall not offer it, because the matter is too important for haphazard action. However, I shall read the amendment for information:

This act shall not apply to any matter touching employment in or by the Federal Government or any agency thereof nor to remuneration for such employment—

That is for the purpose of stopping congestion of action because of small cases—or to the granting or denial of any promotion or demotion—

Those matters should not be brought within the purview of this act—or to any case involving the denial of any loan, grant, or subsidy to any person, State, or political subdivision thereof—

Those are rather expedient matters on which it is hard to apply the provisions of this bill—or the open-market operations or the interest-making function of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System—

That is all the further I would go in exempting the Federal Reserve System—or the functions of the Interstate Commerce Commission relating to safety devices, locomotive inspection or rate making; or to the functions of the Civil Aeronautics Authority relating to safety requirements; or the conduct or functions of the State Department; or to the conduct or operations of the Federal Bureau of Investigation in the Department of Justice—

That is the only exemption I would permit there—or to any matter relating to the internal revenue, or to the laws relating to longshoremen or harbor workers—

I recognize the necessity for this because when a ship must leave for a destination it must start on time and should not be held up in port through legal delay—or to any case relating to the grading services performed by the Department of Agriculture in connection with the sale or purchase of any agricultural commodity, or to the conduct of the military or naval establishments, or to trial by courts martial of any person otherwise within the jurisdiction of such courts martial.

Mr. Chairman, if I were to write the bill, based on my observations of the hearings, the report, and the discussions during the several days of this week, I would prefer the language I have just read. Frankly, I shall not set up my knowledge as against the expert knowledge of the members of the subcommittee. I do point out, however, that in the future when this sort of thing comes along, instead of eliminating or exempting a whole agency because of one involved function, why not pick out the function and say that that shall be excepted. Take, for instance, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] regarding the Securities and Exchange Commission. I have no doubt that perhaps one or two functions might be excepted, but I am not willing to exempt the whole agency and all the activities of that agency because that would indeed be an emasculation of the very objectives of this bill.

It has been interesting indeed to listen to the fulsome speeches on this measure; from the debate and from an examination of the hearings, the report, and other opinions, it would seem that the general theme of discussion by those who oppose this measure is based in a large degree upon an apprehension as to what it might do to the procedure and action of the various agencies of government. I apprehend there is an infinitely larger consideration involved, and that is as to what this measure, if enacted into law, would do for the people of this Nation. I am more concerned about protecting and preserving their rights than in the question of momentary and inconsequential delays in governmental action.

How intriguing it has been to hear the defenders of the bill who take their inspiration from Thomas Jefferson inveigh the provisions of this measure. How this debate would warm the cockles of Jefferson's heart if he could be here. Perhaps he would recall the action of the country in 1790, with the people insisting on the addition of a Bill of Rights to the Constitution the more securely to defend their rights. It is interesting to compare their action of that day with some of the speeches of today. It is interesting also to refresh one's self on the general nature of the amendments added to the Constitution which with but few exceptions were chiefly concerned with putting up a "stop" light against encroachment of government. Yet today ardent disciples of Jefferson are engaged in seeking to preserve the broad administrative powers of Federal agencies with which the basic rights of the people might be curtailed or entirely denied.

Examine for a moment the general tenure of the amendments to the Constitution. The basic theme was pitched in the very first amendment. In effect it says that Congress shall make no law abridging freedom of conscience and speech. The second amendment states that the right of people to bear arms shall not be infringed. The third amendment prohibits the boarding of soldiers except by law. The fourth amendment guarantees security of persons and houses and papers and effects. One might go on and enumerate how, in each case, the greatest care was exercised to prevent Government from infringing the privileges and immunities of the citizens. In a very real sense only once was there a departure from this broad principle and that occurred in the eighteenth amendment which placed an intervention upon the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating liquor. To be sure it required more than 14 years to remove this amendment from the Constitution but it was finally achieved.

The notable thing is that always the people were concerned with keeping Government from encroaching too closely upon their basic rights.

The measure before us today is but a continuation of that thoroughgoing American spirit. It seeks only to preserve for the people certain rights of procedure under which they may be properly protected.

As one examines the first provision of this measure relating to rules affecting personal and property rights and the requirements for the giving of a notice, the holding of hearings, and the publication of such a rule or order, it finds its parallel in the very first amendment to the Constitution which preserves for the people the right to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

There can be small quarrel with the second provision in the bill relating with a special provision of rules to ascertain whether such rules are in conflict with the second section of the bill or with the Constitution or with the statutes under which such a rule or order has been issued.

Nor can there be serious opposition to the third provision requiring a further departmental review of a rule by a board. The seventh amendment to the Constitution makes it impossible to divest a citizen of so much as $20 by a civil action, the common law sets a trial by jury unless that right should be waived. Who then will contend that an equal amount of care should not be exercised in the making and application of an administrative rule under which the whole of a citizen's property might conceivably be taken from him.

In this connection there comes to mind the argument that the broad preservations of this bill would require many boards and many courts in its administration. I can readily imagine that back in 1790 when it was proposed to guarantee a jury trial on civil actions, at common law where $20 or more was involved that some of the good people in that day probably raised their voices in protest and shouted in subsistence that every court in the land would be congested with jury trials. Yet the experience of 150 years is most persuasive that there has neither been abuses nor undue delay nor congestion as a result of this personal guarantee.

The fourth provision, relating to judiciary review of decisions and orders to determine whether the findings are in error or supported by the facts or by substantial evidence, is certainly no radical conception, nor is it going too far to preserve for the people who are affected by administrative rulings and decisions, the requirement that there has been an opportunity for notice and hearings or that the agency issuing the decision have jurisdiction, or that it be made clear as to whether a constitutional right has been infringed.

It may be, perchance, that if this bill is enacted into law, there may be a slight slowing down in the tempo of administrative processes. If so, it is no cause for alarm. Some may contend that it will add to governmental red tape, but I am not at all certain but what red tape has been a great instrumentality in preserving the essentials of democracy.

A noted sage once observed that democracy is like an old scow. It does not move very fast nor very far at one time, but it never sinks. I prefer these attributes of an old scow with the security which it tends to give to democratic processes as against the totalitarian superfluous liners of the Old World with an impetuous captain giving orders for full speed ahead, no matter what happens. May it be said, therefore, in behalf of this measure that it catches some of the spirit of 150 years ago, when people were setting the stop light against government so that there might be no infringement of the immunities and privileges of the people as between the people and agencies affected, I prefer in these rather unstable and uncertain times to stand on the side of the people.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that debate has been exhausted on the pending amendment. We have a limitation of time here and if we are going to have pro forma amendments, Members who have legitimate amendments will not be recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, may I call the attention of the Members of the House to the work that was referred to yesterday put out by the Brookings Institution. Considerable emphasis was placed on the importance of this work, which was written by Frederick F. Blachly and Miriam E. Oatman. The chapter dealing with the act now pending before us is very critical. It condemns the Logan-Walter bill in no uncertain terms.

I call the attention of the Members of the House to the fact that the authors of this work availed themselves of information derived largely from the bureaus themselves. For instance, Mr. Thomas B. Billig, of the Federal Security Agency; Mr. Robert M. Cooper, special assistant to the Attorney General of the United States; Mr. Robert E. Freer, Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission; Walter Gellhorn, director of the Attorney General's Committee on Administrative Procedure; Mr. Gregory Hankin, with the Federal Power Commission; Mr. I. J. Lowe, of the Department of Agriculture; and Mr. J. Emmett Sebree, of the Board of Tax Appeals.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CELLER. I think it might be well to call attention to the other names of men consulted, such as Professor Cushman, of Cornell University; Professor Field, of Indiana State University; Professor Fuchs, of Washington University; and Professor Gellhorn.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I decline to yield any further. I yielded for a question, not for an extended statement.

Mr. Chairman, I have read the chapter which deals with the pending measure. Its very title shows that the authors missed completely the fundamental purpose of this bill.

The title is "Doctrine of Judicial Formula." This the authors regard as the modus operandi which the Walter-Logan bill would set up to keep political agencies within the bounds of law. The inescapable implication of this title is that this bill, if enacted into law, would, ipso facto, vest in the courts power to formulize bureaucratic administration and control. As I understand the background and genesis of the bill before us, this is not any part of its purpose. It is my understanding that ever since Justice Chase, in Turner against Bank of North America, declared—

> That the Federal courts do not derive their judicial power immediately from the Constitution; but the political truth is that the disposal of the judicial power (except in a few specific instances) belongs to Congress—

There has been no question or doubt that the powers of the Federal courts are not inherent but derived solely from Congress. Only the Supreme Court derives its powers from the Constitution.

This being true, instead of designating the Walter-Logan bill as the "doctrine of judicial formula," it would have been more accurate if they had stated it to be the doctrine of congressional formula.

It is not judicial formulization this bill aims at but congressional formulization.

The primary purpose of this measure is to wrest from the bureaucracy the power to interpret the law and place it back in the hands of the courts, the only instrument the Congress and the people have for interpreting their laws. While the authors of this work point out some weaknesses in this measure, on the whole their criticism is destructive, not constructive. Indeed, in my opinion, it shows the grossest bias and in reality is little else but a defense of unrestrained bureaucratic domination.

They even categorically deny that there is any such thing in this country as administrative absolutism. This, of course, is ignoring the completely established historical truth, namely, that a society loses control over its lives and property para passu with the growth of political bureaucracy.

Of course, since Blachly and Oatman deny the existence of bureaucratic absolutism, they of necessity disregard the background that gave rise to the purposes of the Walter-Logan bill. Throughout their entire discussion of this measure, nowhere do they evidence any concern for individual rights or liberty. Only in theory do they recognize them.

The fact that the political bureaucracy has grown enormously within the last few years, that a great multitude of new bureaus have been created and about 500,000 new political jobs added, at an additional cost to the taxpayers of about a billion dollars a year—this apparently does not interest them. One gleans from their discussion that all this is not only necessary but good. Indeed, they attempt to justify bureaucratic absolutism on the ground of necessity. Underneath their philosophy is the same as that of the bureaucrats, namely, that something has happened to our country and perhaps to the world that requires a new order of things, which bureaucracy alone can handle.

The possibility of their ideas being atavistic never enters their minds. Could they but divest themselves sufficiently of bias, they might be able to see that the new conditions which they talk about are the very disease which afflicts humanity and society, and that the essential cause of this disease is political and bureaucratic absolutism.

To cure a patient suffering from strychnine poisoning, Blachly and Oatman say, "give him more strychnine."

There is no question that they argue for a sphere of uncontrolled bureaucratic administration, this on the euphemistic ground of complexity and increased functions of government. Very well, if that is what they want. But they should not try to justify this upon any constitutional grounds. If they want a new kind of government, they should come out and say so.

Justice Chase, in the above cited case, clearly set forth the controlling principle in the Constitution that covers this important point. He said:

If, then, it is the duty of Congress to vest the judicial power of the United States, it is a duty to vest the whole judicial power.

Here is the real answer to the whole criticism of the Walter-Logan bill: "The whole judicial power," not a part of it, the Congress must vest in the courts. That is the mandate of the Constitution; that is what the Walter-Logan bill seeks to accomplish. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RANKIN) there were—ayes 15, noes 65.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I have two amendments at the desk. I ask unanimous consent that they be considered together.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendments offered by Mr. RAMSPECK: On page 15, in line 9, after "Commission',, insert a comma and the following: "the Civil Service Commission"; and on page 15, in line 20, before the period, insert a comma and the following: "or to any decision by any officer or employee of any agency or independent agency affecting the pay, hours, annual or sick leave, or other matter relative to the status of any employee of the United States."

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I was delighted to hear the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] say that he did not believe the status of the employees of the Government should be covered by this bill.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALTER. The committee felt that the language in line 19 met the situation. If it does not, of course, we want to carry out the idea expressed by the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I am pleased to have that statement from the gentleman. I was just about to say that the chairman of the subcommittee, the distinguished and able gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER] had assured me that it was not the intention of the bill to cover these matters, and since it is agreeable to the committee and in line with the able address delivered by my friend from Illinois, I hope the committee may see fit to adopt these amendments, which deal with nothing except the Federal employees themselves and their relationship to the Government. I do not believe it is necessary or wise to subject the grievances of employees of the Government to a court proceeding; as a matter of fact, I have some doubt about the constitutionality of any court proceeding with regard to such matters in the executive branch of the Government.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CELLER. Did I correctly understand that the gentleman's amendment inserts the words "Civil Service Commission" in line 9, after "Interstate Commerce Commission"?

Mr. RAMSPECK. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. COX. I thought the purpose of the gentleman's amendment was simply to exclude this particular function of the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. RAMSPECK. No. It does both.

Mr. COX. I trust the Committee will vote down the gentleman's amendment, unless he is prepared to divide it.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Will the gentleman tell me any reason why the Civil Service Commission, which deals only with the question of the status of Federal employees, should be included in a bill of this sort, which is intended to protect the public? I do not know of any reason.

Mr. COX. If the amendment is adopted, then there is no need for the language in line 19, "or has failed to receive appointment or employment by any agency or independent agency."

Mr. RAMSPECK. I believe it ought to remain in the bill, because I did not deal with the word "employment" in my amendment since it was already in the bill.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the Committee will adopt the amendment.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. There are agencies that are not under the civil service. Would the language the gentleman speaks of refer to employees who are not in the civil service?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes; the exemption of the Civil Service Commission would not exempt the application of this bill even to civil-service employees in operating agencies, therefore the necessity for both amendments.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RAMSPECK) there were—ayes 26, noes 70.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KELLER: On page 15, line 11, after "State", insert "the Federal Works Agency."

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call attention to the fact that the Federal Works Agency includes about 3,000,000 men and women. It ought certainly to be excepted from the action of this bill. If it is not, you open the way to at least 3,000,000 additional lawsuits, because under this bill as written and as reported here, if this exception is not made, you will open the entire doorway to every single, solitary person in the Government employ, including the civil service and everything else, and altogether it is much more than 3,000,000. It does seem to me that if we are trying to pass a law here that will limit and lessen and shorten the period of time to be consumed we ought to make the conditions possible for that. Instead we are adding to, and adding to, and adding to. The statement of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK] on yesterday was not too strong when he pointed out to you what that would mean as applied only to the civil service. When I call your attention to the fact that the W. P. A. and the P. W. A. and all the other agencies of this Government are included in this bill at the present time, it simply multiplies the difficulties that anyone ought to see are included in the bill. The bill ought never, of course, to have been brought out, because your attention has been called to the fact many times over that it is an ill-digested bill.

Before I sit down I wish to call attention to the fact that the chairman of the subcommittee quoted the names of a number of noted persons here, but he failed to answer when I tried to get his attention and ask him whether a single one of those people have ever seen this bill. I will guarantee not a single one of them, especially Miss Perkins, is for the bill in its present form by any possible stretch of the imagination.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALTER. These gentlemen, and every one of them is a distinguished student of the law, debated this bill at three meetings of the American Bar Association.

Mr. KELLER. Oh, the gentleman quoted names of the American Bar Association? Then I want to take it back with apologies, because that is the only bar association in America I know of that is for this bill. I repeat that when the American Bar Association alone sponsors a bill, it ought to arouse some suspicion at once.

Mr. COX. Whose sponsorship would excite the enthusiasm of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. KELLER. I am sure that of the gentleman from Georgia would, naturally, of course.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. I yield.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. I am informed that the National Association of Women Lawyers favors this bill.

Mr. KELLER. Where are they at? [Laughter.]

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Unlike the gentleman, they are not in deep water. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I had intended to offer an amendment at page 15, line 10, to strike out "all Federal lending agencies" and insert "the Federal Loan Agency and independent agencies grouped thereunder and all other Federal lending agencies, including agencies making loans and grants," but after I had propounded a question to the Chairman, who assured me that these agencies are included in the bill as now drafted and are therefore exempted, I shall not offer the amendment. All I wish to say now is that like many others I have received many communications about the bill before us. The last one I have received is in favor of the bill. It is from Mr. Ralph M. Shaw, of Winston, Strawn & Shaw, of Chicago, a firm of outstanding corporation lawyers, and men of standing known to my Republican friends on the left, I am sure. They represent a larger number of corporations than any other firm in the Middle West.

In the letter Mr. Shaw states:

> As you doubtless know, its passage is recommended by the American Bar Association and other organizations who are devoting their services to the public good.

Well, personally, I never heard where the American Bar Association was specially interested in any civic activities or the public good.

Mr. WALTER and Mr. COX rose.

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALTER. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the American Federation of Labor, at its annual convention last year, endorsed unanimously this bill, and not only has the American Bar Association, but every bar association in America, except one, and that is the Lawyers' Guild, has endorsed it.

Mr. SABATH. I will say this to the gentleman: I understand they took such action last year, but that they later rescinded their action, the same as the Senate rescinded its action when it first agreed to the bill and then recalled it. Mr. Chairman, I think this is time lost because I feel sure that in view of the action taken by the other body this bill will never pass again and therefore we have wasted here several days. In view of the fact it is the aim of all of us to get out of here as soon as possible, I think it is unfortunate that the time has been lost. Personally, I am opposed to the bill.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that not every labor organization, by far, is for this bill, because we had evidence here today of the attitude of the brotherhoods of trainmen and engineers through the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER].

Mr. SABATH. I understand a large majority of the labor organizations are against the bill and most of the unions belonging to the American Federation of Labor are against it now. They did not understand the bill originally; in fact, most of the Members here have been unable to understand the bill and even some of the members of the Committee have been unable to explain it.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to my colleage from Illinois.

Mr. KELLER. May I not call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the chairman of this subcommittee has made a great mistake when he states that other bar associations are for it at the present time when it was just called to his attention yesterday that the New York Bar Association is distinctly and strongly against this bill?

Mr. SABATH. I will say to the gentleman that I have confidence in the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. COX. Has the gentleman completed his statement in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois? If he has, let us vote.

Mr. SABATH. I will let the gentleman from Georgia know when I am ready to conclude.

Knowing the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER] as I do, I fear that he has been imposed upon by the proponents of this bill, the gentlemen of the American Bar Association. I appreciate the haste of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX] to vote for the bill, because, unfortunately, should it become a law, it will deprive the American wage earners of any benefits under the laws which we have passed against the gentleman's wishes in the past. I concede that the gentleman from Georgia is a great lawyer, and I will go further in saying that I believe he is sincere, but unfortunately he has not a full view of conditions affecting all of our country. I feel that if he did he would not be opposed to legislation that would prove of benefit to the people of some sections of the country. For his benefit and those who are for this legislation, I desire to insert a résumé on this bill prepared by men of outstanding character and ability and trust that they will read it in the hope that in the near future they will not come to a hasty conclusion in advocating everything that certain interests through their lobbyists are trying to force upon the country. I submit the report of the Brookings Institution on this legislation, which has been referred to several times during the course of debate. Not knowing whether any other Member will insert it in the RECORD, I shall include it in its entirety at this point:

RE LOGAN-WALTER BILL (H. R. 6324, S. 915)

The Logan-Walter bill, which is entitled, "A bill to provide for the more expeditious settlement of disputes with the United States, and for other purposes," is an attempt to deal in a single piece of legislation with the entire field of administrative procedure and judicial review of administrative decisions. It proposes to place in a single groove, and subject to the same procedure, the operations of all executive departments of the Government, both in respect to matters of a quasi-judicial character and matters of a purely administrative nature.

The bill deals with four distinct subjects: (1) procedure for the adoption and promulgation of rules of administrative agencies; (2) judicial review of the validity of rules of administrative agencies; (3) internal procedure to be followed by all administrative agencies in determining matters with which they deal; and (4) judicial review of decisions of administrative agencies.

Each of these topics will be separately discussed.

(1) ADOPTION AND PROMULGATION OF RULES

Section 2 (a) provides that thereafter all administrative rules shall be issued by each agency only after notice and public hearings, and that such rules shall not become effective until published in the Federal Register, except when the President declares that a public emergency exists.

To insist on a public hearing before any rule can be adopted and promulgated, or even amended or modified, no matter of how minor a character such a rule or amendment may be, is a requirement that would seriously retard and hamper the processes of government and place a heavy unnecessary burden on executive departments, and other agencies charged with administrative duties. In addition, it would probably enhance the cost of administration, as at times it would be necessary to hire additional personnel for the purpose of complying with such a requirement. Moreover, it would leave the administration of a statute open to obstructive and dilatory tactics on the part of interests who are opposed to its effective enforcement and who might intentionally prolong hearings inordinately by multiplying the number of persons desiring to be heard orally.

It is frequently necessary to adopt regulations or amendments thereto very promptly, so that it would not be practicable to comply with the requirement of public hearings. It may be physically impossible to comply with the requirement that a notice of the regulations about to be promulgated shall be published and that public hearings be held thereon, and at the same time efficiently and expeditiously administer a statute.

Many types of rules and regulations are not suitable for public hearings. For example, it would be manifestly inappropriate to require the War Department to conduct hearings on Army regulations. This is likewise true of the Navy Department. Many, in fact, probably most, postal regulations relate to the internal operation of the Postal Service. Surely matters of this type should not be subjected to public hearings, with the consequent delays that are bound to ensue. Other examples of this nature may be readily envisaged.

Section 2 (c) would permit any person substantially interested in the effects of an administrative rule in force on the date of the approval of the act to petition the head of the agency concerned for a reconsideration of such rule. It would then become mandatory for the head of the agency to grant a hearing on the petition. No matter how frivolous the application may be, and irrespective of whether it is presented in good faith or for the purpose of embarrassing or obstructing the administration of the statute, the head of the agency must accord a public hearing if requested. Moreover, there is nothing to prevent the same person from filing repeated petitions for the same purpose and thus harassing and embarrassing the agency.

The Supreme Court is authorized by statute to adopt and promulgate rules of civil procedure for the district courts of the United States. There is no provision, however, that any litigant or prospective litigant who thinks that some rule should be changed, may petition the Supreme Court for a modification of the rule and insist on a public hearing on his application. It does not appear why such a privilege should be extended in respect to rules of administrative bodies, when it does not exist in respect to court rules. It is conceivable that persons hostile and antagonistic to the successful enforcement of some regulatory statute, such as, for instance, some of the laws enforced by the Department of Agriculture for the protection of health, or some of the statutes administered by the Securities and Exchange Commission, may so flood the administrative department or agency with applications for changes in the rules as to swamp its limited staff, whose time would have to be devoted to holding hearings and passing on applications for changes in the rules, although their primary duty is to administer the act of Congress with the enforcement of which they are charged.

(2) JUDICIAL REVIEW OF THE VALIDITY OF RULES OF ADMINISTRATIVE AGENCIES

Section 3 of the bill contains a novel and unprecedented provision conferring upon the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia jurisdiction, on the petition of any person, to hear and determine whether any rule of any administrative agency is unconstitutional or violative of a statute. The basic fallacy of this provision is that it contemplates a judicial review of the validity of any rule abstractly and not in connection with a specific case. Such a proposal is contrary to our basic concepts of the judicial process. The judicial process operates only in connection with the determination of a specific case or controversy. The courts pass on the validity of statutes, rules, or acts, only as needed in the determination of such case or controversy.

The idea of advisory opinions on abstract questions disassociated with a specific state of facts is contrary to the fundamental principles on which the American judicial system is based. Not only is it theoretically fallacious to permit the judicial review of the validity of regulations disassociated from any specific case, but it is also undesirable from a practical standpoint, since frequently it is not feasible to determine and decide such a question except when it is presented in connection with a specific state of facts in an adversary proceeding involving an actual controversy.

The undesirable character of this provision is aggravated by the fact that there is no provision for a review of any decision of the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia in such an anomalous proceeding by the Supreme Court on writ of certiorari. Thus, a regulation might be stricken down by a court decree at its very inception, without a presentation of any actual case, and without an opportunity to secure a review of such a decree.

From the standpoint of the court of appeals, the provision would seem to be highly undesirable, for it would permit any person whatsoever, irrespective of whether or not he has any interest in the matter, to present a petition to the court for a review of the validity of any regulation of any administrative agency. It is easily conceivable that this important court may become flooded with frivolous or obstructive petitions under this provision, to the detriment of its other business.

Moreover, some of the Government services would be in danger of demoralization as a result of such a privilege. Should every member of the military or naval personnel be accorded the right to bring court proceedings to challenge the validity of Army and Navy regulations? Should civilian employees be permitted to secure a court review of regulations relating to the internal discipline of personnel? Should prisoners in Federal penal institutions be accorded the right to institute suit to question the validity of a prison regulation? And yet the sweeping provisions of the bill might have just such effect.

(3) INTERNAL PROCEDURE OF AGENCIES

Section 4 of the bill would prescribe a uniform procedure to be followed by all executive departments and administrative agencies of the Government in dealing with matters which come before them. At the outset, a very vital and difficult question arises. Many of the statutes conferring specific regulatory authority on the various Government officers and agencies, as, for instance, the Department of Agriculture, the Civil Aeronautics Authority, etc., provide a procedure to be followed by such agency. Is it intended that the bill should repeal with a stroke of the pen all such statutory provisions? There is no repeal clause in the bill. We are confronted with the principle of statutory construction, that repeals by implication are not favored. On the other hand, if a subsequent statute is clearly inconsistent with an earlier one, and the two cannot be reconciled, a repeal results.

An inquiry may well be propounded as to whether the draftsmen of this bill have studied every statute regulating administrative proceedings, and have reached the conclusion that all such statutes should be abrogated. If not, a further inquiry might be propounded as to whether such a repeal should be permitted to take effect without an intensive study of the kind indicated. If it should be answered that no such repeal is intended, what is an agency to do when it finds one type of procedure prescribed by the bill under consideration and another contained in one of the statutes which it is charged with administering?

Another fundamental difficulty created by these provisions of the legislation is found in the attempt to prescribe a uniform procedure for all Government departments and agencies in respect to all matters, without distinction, which they have to handle. It is suggested that since uniform civil procedure has been recently adopted for all United States district courts, by the same token a uniform procedure should exist in all Government departments and agencies. Plausible as this argument seems at first blush, it becomes demolished by close analysis. The rules of civil procedure apply to all suits in equity and actions at law. The civil business of all United States district courts is the same, namely, the trial and disposition of suits in equity and actions at law, irrespective of whether the district court is located in one State or another. On the other hand, the functions and duties of the various Government departments and agencies vary widely. There are many proceedings before various Government agencies that are of a quasi-judicial character. Many others are of a purely executive or administrative nature. Some require summary and expeditious disposition, while others do not.

To what extent uniformity of procedure is desirable and feasible, and to what extent it must be varied and molded to suit and fit the needs of the particular problems which a Government agency has to face, and finally, what is the best type of procedure for the various kinds of matters handled by the respective agencies, cannot be determined in an enlightened manner without first conducting a survey and a study of the activities of the various Government departments and agencies and of the laws under which they operate. It is just such a study as is now in progress and is being conducted by the Attorney General's committee on administrative law, and it would seem desirable to await the termination and results of this study before formulating definitive legislation regulating administrative procedure.

Section 4 of the bill would require each agency to create intra-agency boards composed of three members. Any person aggrieved by a decision of any officer or employee of any agency may secure a review by such a board, which would be required to make written findings of fact and conclusions of law in each instance.

It is probable that the framers of the bill had in mind that matters of a quasi-judicial character should be reviewed by a board of this nature. The bill, however, is not limited to such cases. The decision of any matter whatsoever, no matter whether it is of a purely administrative or executive nature, is also to be submitted to a review by such a board. For example, the award of a contract to the successful bidder might be questioned before such a board by disappointed bidders. Administrative discipline inflicted on a member of the personnel of a Government department; the transfer of an employee, a diminution in his salary, or a denial of an increase in salary, would conceivably be subjected to such a procedure. Purely administrative matters, not partaking of any quasi-judicial character whatsoever, would be subject to an appeal to an intraagency board, thereby causing an accumulation of inordinate delays in the operation and administration of every Government department. Moreover, it would preclude the use of individual officials, for a review by a board of three members is required in each case, no matter how minor in character. The Department of Labor, for example, passes on many thousands of matters a year relating to admission, exclusion, and deportation of aliens. To permit a review by a board of three employees in each instance would require multiplication of employees and result in great delays and loss of efficiency of administration. Additional housing facilities would be required for the use of aliens while this slow and cumbersome procedure is pursued.

Another example may be found in connection with fraud orders issued by the Post Office Department. The procedure followed in such cases has been in vogue for a great many years. It is effective and expeditious and at the same time fair. It would be highly detrimental to the public interest to substitute the procedure proposed in the bill because it would operate much more slowly and much less efficaciously.

Government departments must generally operate by remitting various functions to individual officials instead of to boards or committees of three members.

The bill proposes to permit independent agencies to use trial examiners, but executive departments are to be required to use boards of three members. No reason for the distinction appears.

If it is intended that only matters of a quasi-judicial nature should be subject to the type of review within the agency that is contemplated by section 4, the bill should so provide. In the interest of clarity and precision an enumeration and list of proceedings intended to be covered should be inserted, with references to the statutes under which such proceedings arise. As now framed, the bill would result in demoralizing Government departments, destroying their efficiency, delaying the transaction of Government business to an excessive and intolerable degree, and greatly enhancing the cost of government.

(4) JUDICIAL REVIEW OF DECISIONS OF ADMINISTRATIVE AGENCIES

Section 5 of the bill provides that any party to a proceeding before any agency, as provided in the preceding section of the act, who may be aggrieved by the final decision or order, may secure a review of such action, either in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia or in the circuit court of appeals for the circuit in which such party resides or maintains his principal place of business or in which the controversy arose. It should be borne in mind that special statutes creating various agencies, such as the Federal Communications Commission, the Securities and Exchange Commission, the National Labor Relations Board, contain provisions for court review of certain actions of such bodies. This is likewise true of certain matters handled by executive departments in which the head of the department acts in a quasi-judicial capacity, as, for example, orders under the Packers and Stockyards Act, various orders of the Secretary of Agriculture in connection with the administration of the Pure Food and Drug Act, etc.

The systematic and methodical course to be followed in the event that any of these court-review provisions are inadequate would seem to be to amend the specific statute in which the inadequacy is found. In order to accomplish this result in a proper and scientific manner, it would seem necessary to make a study of the court-review provisions of innumerable statutes governing the activities of the various agencies of the executive branch of the Government, and then to suggest any amendments to such laws, if found necessary. The Attorney General's Committee on Administrative Law is, among other things, studying this phase of the entire field.

Instead, the framers of the bill, without disclosing the results of any such study, if they have made one, insert a blanket provision in section 5, permitting a review by the courts of any administrative decision of any Government department or other agency. No limitations or restrictions are contained.

As section 5 is linked to section 4, in that every ruling which is made by one of the three-man boards provided by section 4 is ultimately subject to judicial review, the result would be that every action, no matter how minor or insignificant in character, of any executive department or administrative agency, would ultimately be subject to judicial review. Today decisions of a quasi-judicial character are subject to judicial review under special statutory provisions. Under this legislation, even executive action, as well as administrative action of a purely minor character, could be subject to review by the courts. Personnel matters, such as transfer of an employee from one station to another, refusal to reclassify an employee, refusal to promote him, or a demotion, would all be subject to court review. The awarding of contracts by a Government department would be subject to court review. Numerous matters of a purely administrative character, such as the exclusion or deportation of an alien, could be reviewed by the courts as of right in every instance. The granting or withholding of compensation or hospitalization to a veteran, or a change in rating of disability of a veteran, by the Veterans' Administration, would be subject to court review.

Fraud orders of the Post Office Department, the denial of an application for a passport to go abroad, the denial of an application for an immigration visa to enter the United States, rulings of the Department of Labor under the Walsh-Healey Act, matters of military and naval discipline, the granting or withholding of a license for a boat or of a master's or mate's ticket by a steamboat inspector, the determination of claims for benefits under the Social Security Act, the determination of claims for pensions of retired railroad employees by the Railroad Retirement Board constitute a few random examples of the thousands of actions of Government departments and agencies which would become subject to judicial review, but which are not now so reviewable.

The ultimate consequence would be not only to swamp the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia and the circuit courts of appeals with a flood of minor administrative matters that have never been regarded as justifiable cases or controversies, but to retard and hamper the work of the executive branch of the Government to an intolerable degree. The control of the executive branch would be transferred to the courts, and the performance of all executive duties would be subjected to the supervision and control of the judiciary. Theoretically, this is contrary to the basic ideas of our form of government, which makes a clear demarcation between executive and judicial duties. Practically, it will destroy the efficient and expeditious operation of the executive departments of the Government and throw them into confusion. The cost of government would be multiplied tremendously.

The undesirable results would be aggravated by enlargement of the scope of appellate review from that now prevailing. The general rule is that the findings of fact of administrative bodies and officers will not be reviewed if supported by substantial evidence. Section 5 (a) would permit the courts to review the weight of evidence and upset the findings of fact of administrative bodies and officers if the courts deemed them contrary to the weight of evidence. This far-reaching result is to be accomplished by the seemingly innocuous clause which would permit the court to reverse findings of fact if clearly erroneous. What constitutes "clearly erroneous" is, of course, a matter of opinion. These are the words of rule 52 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, which have been construed as permitting the courts to review the findings of a trial court. There is, of course, a vast difference between the findings of a trial court and the findings of an administrative tribunal or officer. It is a principle that has been deeply imbedded in administrative law for a great many years that findings of the latter type should not be subject to appellate review, unless it appears that they are not supported by substantial evidence. The Supreme Court has recognized this principle in its decisions; the Congress has done so in legislation providing for court review in certain quasi-judicial matters. Finality in respect to findings of fact must reside somewhere if the operations of government are not to be constantly delayed and fettered.

It is a significant fact that certain administrative agencies are expressly excepted from the operations of the law. Among them are, for instance, the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Federal Trade Commission. While there is no objection to freeing any agency from the shackles of the proposed legislation, the very fact that some agencies are to be exempted would seem to be an indication of a lack of confidence in the basic theories on which the legislation is predicated.

It is urged, in view of all the foregoing considerations, that the legislation should not be enacted.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, permit me to say that if there was ever a bill considered by this House that is discriminatory, it is the one before us. It is discriminatory because it exempts certain governmental agencies from the proposed law. The country should know the underlying reasons for these exemptions. It is my belief that "what is good for the goose is good for the gander." Is it intended only to apply to agencies and bureaus created to give labor of the United States the opportunity to obtain justice and equal rights? This is not in keeping with the Democratic doctrines advocated by Thomas Jefferson of "equal rights to all, special privileges to none."

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to discuss this bill, but listened attentively during its consideration because I had not reached a decision as to whether I would support or whether I would oppose it. After listening to the talk in opposition to this bill which was just delivered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], who apparently wants to go back to Illinois and leave his post of duty in the Nation's Capital during this critical period, I have now been able to reach a decision to vote and support the bill, and I believe a great many other Members have done so. [Applause.]

As a member of two great labor organizations for many years, I resent the condemnation of the American Federation of Labor just delivered on the floor of the House by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], when he stated that the American Federation of Labor did not know what it was doing when the resolution was passed to support this bill. I know that the American Federation of Labor would not pass a resolution endorsing a piece of legislation which they knew nothing about. I sincerely hope that the gentleman from Illinois will move to strike out the next three words and get up on the floor of the House and apologize for his unfair and unwarranted attack on the American Federation of Labor. [Applause.]

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I find myself in a most peculiar situation. For a day or two I have been trying to find out by reading and rereading the bill just what it means. It may be on account of my obtuseness, but up until now, frankly I do not know what powers it confers, nor do I know just what it does. I asked the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE] when he had the floor the other day, suppose the Interstate Commerce Commission, which is exempted under the bill, were not exempted, what difference it would make. I do not think his answer was very clear.

I do want to take a moment, however, to reply to some of the things my beloved friend from Georgia [Mr. Cox] said the other day, to say in defense not only of the Chairmen we have had at the Securities and Exchange Commission but of the entire membership of that Commission, that in my opinion since it was set up, both the majority members and the minority members of the Commission have constituted one of the strongest and ablest commissions in the Government. I think Mr. Kennedy was a great Chairman. I think Mr. Landis was a great Chairman. I heard him criticized little, if at all, by those operating under the Security Act of 1933, the Stock Exchange Act of 1934, or the Utility Holding Company Act of 1935. When Mr. Douglas came to the chairmanship of the Commission, a great many people said that another professor is come to judgment, but in talking to the people, big and little, who had to do with the Commission, before Mr. Douglas had been on it for many months, they were convinced he was fair, and an able and square man. As for Jerome Frank, members of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and many others who have had to do with him in his recommendations to that committee since he became its Chairman, that I have talked with, do not hesitate to say that he is a fair and able man. It is said that old commissions and boards are exempted under this law. The Power Commission law has been on the statute books since 1920. It is not exempted. When we come to translate into legislation the idea that some of us have of punishing somebody for something they have done which we do not like, we may make a serious mistake. Of course, some people do not like the Securities and Exchange Commission because that Commission has denied them the right to issue new securities.

One of the reasons for the passage of that bill was that from 1922 until 1932 corporations and partnerships in this country issued and offered to the American public $50,000,000,000 in securities, and a committee from the Department of Commerce, while that Department was presided over by Mr. Hoover as Secretary of Commerce, made a solemn finding that in their opinion $25,000,000,000 of that amount were not worth the paper upon which they were written. This is one of the fears that I have about this bill. Suppose a corporation anywhere is in desperate need of new money. The corporation operates in interstate commerce. Therefore, in order to issue securities, it must go to the Securities and Exchange Commission. Suppose the President and every member of the Board of Directors endorses the issue. The corporation wants to refund, it wants to expand, it wants to refinance, it wants to pay maturing obligations. It is in a desperate situation. They need money, and they need money quickly in order to do any of these things. When application is made, any person on earth with a substantial interest in that company can tie up the matter of the issuance of those securities maybe for many, many months. A competitor of this corporation might have a substantial interest in the financial standing and the business operation of the corporation applying for the issue. It competes with it in business. It may intervene to tie up the issue of the securities. Do you want to slow up things like that? I think this bill may very well do that. Suppose the Board of Directors of the New York Stock Exchange and all the boards of directors and those interested who have a right to vote on new rules and regulations come down and they are given the O. K. by the Commission. Will some party at interest intervene? Under the provisions of this bill, they have the right to intervene. One of these interdepartmental boards is set up. Nobody knows who will be on it, nobody knows how long it will take them, and the exchanges of the country, not only in New York, but throughout the length and breadth of the country, may want to amend their rules and regulations immediately to meet an immediate emergency. That matter might be held up for weeks and even months. I could go along and tell about other provisions in this bill I do not understand.

I approach consideration of this bill with an open mind. I know there are abuses, but sometimes we fly from one evil to a greater evil. All things considered, I think it would be a good thing for the House of Representatives and for the Congress if this bill went back to the Committee on the Judiciary, a great and fine committee, for a little more study. That is what I feel it is my duty to vote for this afternoon. [Applause.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph and ask for recognition.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment on the desk that I would like to have read before the gentleman speaks, in order that we may vote on it.

The CHAIRMAN. That can be disposed of after the debate is closed.

Mr. KELLER. I have one also. Will they all be read?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Will the Chair tell us how much time remains?

The CHAIRMAN. There are 5 minutes remaining.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. That will consume all the time?

The CHAIRMAN. That will consume all the time.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, let us see what the situation is that we have to deal with. Everybody knows of the tremendous expansion in number and in power of the bureaus of this Government.

There is no Member of Congress sitting here who does not know of the tremendous increase in his own responsibilities.

In our attempt to discharge our duties we have divided Congress up into what amounts to little Houses of Congress—these committees; but even with that dangerous arrangement, where only a few Members of the House can know with regard to any item of legislation, it is utterly impossible to take care of the Government's business. The result is that the overload that is brought here from the States and the natural increase of the Federal Government's responsibility has to be taken care of by bureaus. It is utterly ridiculous to oppose the establishment of bureaus when the total of governmental responsibilities concentrated in Washington exceeds the capacity of the ordinary functioning machinery of a representative system of government.

When this Congress adjourns there will be operating the machinery of this Government nearly a million people. Of that million people, when we go home, there will only be one human being active in the Federal Government who has been elected by the people, and that is the President of the United States. In the executive branch of the Government now there are nearly a million people, as I have stated. As those responsibilities have accumulated in Washington, we not only have increased those bureaus but as the business of the Federal Government has increased the responsibilities which used to be taken care of by heads of bureaus are passed on to subheads, and on and on it goes, until somebody of those million people is entrusted with that responsibility. I certainly do not criticize those employees. I want this understood. This legislation is not directed against men. We are dealing with principles of government and not men, not bureaus, not persons. But in the arrangement of things these governmental powers are passed on, far removed even from the head. There is not anybody here who does not know that the President of the United States cannot know who those million people are. He cannot know what they are doing with the governmental powers that are trusted to them. This we do know—that contrary to all our philosophy of government we have placed in one personnel, appointed personnel, all three powers of government. They make the rules, which have the force of law; they construe the rules; they enforce the rules.

I want to repeat, I am not criticizing. I am talking about a condition. When one of those people goes to an ordinary private citizen he goes to him with all the powers that a king ever had. This man may be 2,000 miles from Washington. He has no power to resist, practically speaking, the mandate of an agent of these bureaus.

Now, what can you do about it? You are elected by the people, but you know that as Members of Congress you cannot supervise them, and you do not know what they are doing. You know the President cannot supervise them. What is the use being foolish about it? What does that mean? That means that those people in whom we have placed all three powers of government, an appointed personnel, are operating without supervision in America today. That is all there is to it. There is no human being who can controvert that statement, because there is nobody who can supervise them. The President is the only one. When Congress adjourns and you go home you are a private citizen, running for reelection, looking big and talking wise; but you do not have a thing to do with the Government. [Laughter]

Now, where can we put the power? Gentlemen get up here and talk about how many judges we must have. We should have thought about that before we brought these powers and duties up here from the States. We are not at the end of this thing. There is no use creating a condition that makes it necessary to have judges and then complaining because you have the judges. If anybody is to sit in judgment between these employees and the people, you must have a judge to do it. If you do not want the judges, you ought not to have created the condition.

I cannot claim any credit for this bill. This bill was formulated while I was in the hospital last year, but the men on that committee have done the best they could. It is subject to all sorts of criticism. It is pioneer legislation.

We have only this choice: Either to turn the American people loose, subject to the governmental power of an appointed personnel who have all three powers of government under their control, insofar as the average citizen is concerned, or we have got to make it possible for the citizen to resort to the only place under the Anglo-Saxon system of government that an aggrieved person can go to, and that is the courts of the country. That is what this bill attempts to do. [Applause.]

I made a statement 15 years ago which is pertinent now. I will ask that it be printed in the Appendix of this RECORD. I hope it will attract more interest now than it did 15 years ago when nobody paid any attention to it.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

EXTENDING OF CUSTOMS AND OTHER PROVISIONS TO NEW YORK AND SAN FRANCISCO FAIRS OF 1940

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 431) to amend the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution providing for the importation of articles free from tariff or customs duty for the purpose of exhibition at the Golden Gate International Exposition to be held at San Francisco, Calif., in 1939, and for other purposes," approved May 18, 1937, as amended.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. TREADWAY. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I understand that this is the measure the Committee on Ways and Means unanimously reported in reference to the continuation of the two fairs, one in New York and the other in San Francisco, during the year 1940, and the exhibitions of the Government at these fairs.

Mr. BUCK. The gentleman is correct. As originally introduced it applied only to the San Francisco Exposition and introduced some new material. The committee decided to exclude the new provisions and to include the New York World's Fair as well.

Mr. TREADWAY. The measure has the approval of the minority, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution providing for the importation of articles free from tariff or customs duty for the purpose of exhibition at the Golden Gate International Exposition to be held at San Francisco, Calif., in 1939, and for other purposes", approved May 18, 1937, as amended, is hereby amended (1) by adding to the title thereof after "1939" and before the following comma the words "and 1940"; (2) by striking out all the words of said public resolution following the resolving clause thereof and preceding the second proviso of said public resolution and inserting in lieu thereof the following words: "That all articles which shall be imported from foreign countries for the purpose of exhibition at the Golden Gate International Exposition to be held at San Francisco, Calif., either in the year 1939 or in the year 1940, by the San Francisco Bay Exposition, or for use in constructing, installing, or maintaining foreign buildings, or exhibits at the said exposition, upon which articles there shall be a tariff or customs duty shall be admitted without payment of such tariff, customs duty, fees, or charges under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe; but it shall be lawful at any time during or within 3 months after the close of said exposition in 1940 to sell within the area of the exposition any articles provided for herein, subject to such regulations for the security of the revenue and for the collection of import duties as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe: Provided, That all such articles, when withdrawn for consumption or use in the United States, shall be subject to the duties, if any, imposed upon such articles by the revenue laws in force at the date of their withdrawal; and on such articles the duties, if payable, shall be assessed according to the appraised value at the time of withdrawal from entry hereunder for consumption or entry under the general tariff law; and due allowance shall be made in the appraisement of such articles which shall have suffered diminution or deterioration from incidental meddling or exposure"; (3) by inserting immediately after the above a new proviso reading: "Provided further, That articles and materials imported and used solely for constructing and maintaining foreign buildings at such exposition may be withdrawn for consumption free of duty"; (4) by adding after the word "exposition" in the third proviso of said public resolution the words "in 1940"; (5) by inserting immediately after the fourth proviso of said public resolution two new provisos reading: "Provided further, That the withdrawal from entry hereunder of any article for entry in bond under the general tariff law by a person duly authorized in writing by the San Francisco Bay Exposition shall terminate the liability of the San Francisco Bay Exposition under its bond with respect to such article under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided further, That at any time during or within 3 months after the close of the exposition in 1940 any article entered hereunder which is in illustration of the progress of the arts, sciences, agriculture, or manufactures, or which has educational value, may be withdrawn free of duty for presentation to any State, municipal corporation, religious society, college, academy, school, or seminary of learning, under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury."

SEC. 2. The provisions of Public Resolution No. 60 of the Seventy-sixth Congress, approved April 29, 1939, as amended, are hereby extended and made applicable to the Golden Gate International Exposition of 1940.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, beginning in line 3, strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That (a) the joint resolution entitled 'Joint resolution to permit articles imported from foreign countries for the purpose of exhibition at the New York World's Fair, 1939, New York City, N. Y., to be admitted without payment of tariff, and for other purposes,' approved August 16, 1937, as amended and supplemented, is extended and made applicable to the New York World's Fair, 1940, Inc.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], and now yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this is a rule to make in order the consideration of the bill introduced by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FULMER], that has as its purpose the granting of similar provisions of crop insurance to the cotton farmers as is now provided for the wheat farmers of the country. It is an open rule and the bill will be read under the 5-minute rule for amendment.

About 3 years ago the Persident of the United States submitted his report on crop insurance to the Congress and recommended that appropriate legislation be enacted for the purpose of insuring the basic crops of agriculture.

We in this country have come to regard insurance as a matter-of-fact proposition. We insure our private property of all descriptions, and there is no reason why there should not be some provision made for insuring the crops of the farmer. The farmer's barn, his automobile, his house, and all other property owned by the farmer, as well as the businessmen and all the other citizens of the country, are usually covered by insurance against fire and tornado and other losses, including theft in respect of automobiles. The farmer has had a hard road to travel. When he plants his crop he never knows what he is going to get. He does not know whether a drought is coming or whether a flood is coming. He does not know whether the boll weevil or the grasshopper, or what not, is coming to infest his crop.

So this Government in an effort to try to be of assistance to the already hard-pressed farmer has recommended this form of insurance to give the farmer some protection, and to give him some sense of security as to what he may expect. The Congress, in response to the President's recommendation of more than a year ago, started upon an experimental basis by making this provision of insurance to apply only to the wheat farmers. In 1939 a great portion of the wheat farmers of this country enjoyed the benefits of the protection that this law provided, and we find that in 32 out of the 48 States of the Union, the wheat farmers of this country exercised the right to receive the benefits of the wheat insurance that was made possible by the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation.

Now, the Committee on Agriculture, backed by the Department of Agriculture, having made a study of cotton, has recommended that the benefits of this insurance be applied to the cotton crop.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 3 additional minutes.

I may add in this connection, Mr. Speaker, that the Department of Agriculture now is engaged in making a study of the corn situation so that corn may be included in subsequent legislation under the provisions of this insurance.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. COLMER. I yield to my friend from Georgia.

Mr. COX. I happen to know that the gentleman has manifested a great interest in this question covering a long period of time. I recall when the members of the Committee on Agriculture appeared before the Rules Committee, of which the gentleman is a member, asking for a rule making this bill in order, that the gentleman from Mississippi questioned those gentlemen to a considerable extent.

In that inquiry was it disclosed that the Committee on Agriculture is anxious to extend the benefits of this form of insurance to the corn growers and likewise disclose the fact that the Department of Agriculture is interested in extending the insurance to the corn growers, and that they are all to go forward just as soon as studies now being conducted by the Department of Agriculture have been completed? Did the gentleman find that his committee was altogether agreeable to cooperating with the Committee on Agriculture in order to further extend this form if insurance to the growers of farm commodities throughout the country as soon as they come prepared to ask for a rule?

Mr. COLMER. The gentleman has made a very fine statement of the facts in the case in the form of a question.

I confirm those questions and make them positive. That is exactly what happened.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLMER. Yes.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The gentleman has made a statement that possibly corn could be considered for this insurance program. The Committee on Agriculture has had in mind all of the time that all farm commodities should come under the program. Therefore wheat was used as an experiment.

Mr. COLMER. So I just stated.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. But I do not think we are ready yet to take over all farm commodities, as the experiment has not been completed. I do not think the gentleman should single out tobacco or corn, when we have in mind that we want to insure all farmers in a sound, workable program.

Mr. COLMER. It is true, as I stated a moment ago, that wheat was used as the first experiment, but I understand, and I think the gentleman understands, that this is to be applied to these other basic agricultural commodities just as soon as the Department of Agriculture has completed its study of the factual data necessary.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLMER. Yes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Is it not true that in addition to an insurance of wheat crops the United States in recent years has provided for an insurance of crops, and we have had considerable experience as a result of that program in Puerto Rico?

Mr. COLMER. Yes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Is it not true that the Senate has already passed a similar bill?

Mr. COLMER. The Senate passed this bill some time ago, and it is now, of course, up to the House.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. COLMER. Yes.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Can the gentleman give us some idea as to what the premium rates on cotton will be, the minimum and the maximum rates?

Mr. COLMER. Of course, my friend does not expect me to enter into a discussion of the factual data with him, when he is a member of the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. FULMER. If the gentleman will permit, anywhere from 5 to 20 pounds of lint, and at 10 cents a pound that would be from 50 cents to $2 an acre.

Mr. COLMER. I thank the gentleman from South Carolina. I assumed the gentleman from Minnesota knew that because I read that in the report myself. This matter, as I said, has been tried in 32 States. There is no reason why it should not be applied to the cotton crop. There should not be any sectionalism, there should not be any question of crops entering into this thing. The corn will come in just as soon as the study has been completed. The provisions of this bill as it affects wheat has already spread all over the country and as far as the Rules Committee is concerned and the Agricultural Committee as well, at least those who appeared before our committee, the Congress is ready to put it into effect immediately as soon as this data is completed for all basic commodities. I reserve the remainder of my time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself as much time as I desire, and ask unanimous consent to speak out of order for a part of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, there is no desire on the part of the minority to ask for a roll call on the rule. That does not mean, however, that the minority may not oppose tomorrow the passage of the bill. The opposition to the bill is stressed upon the fact that this crop insurance has existed on wheat for only a year and has not been tried out long enough to find out its full value, and whether it is actually meritorious or not. Members of the Committee on Agriculture on this side feel that there should be a longer trial before cotton is included, and possibly corn and other agricultural commodities. The bill does require a substantial increase in the authorization from $6,000,000 to $12,000,000 so that it is not chicken feed by any means, and to that extent it is an important bill. I have to confess that I have a great deal of sympathy with cotton States of the South, because of what has happened to them during the last 7 years under the New Deal. We in the North realize that in order to have a prosperous America we must have prosperous farmers, and prosperous farmers in the cotton States of the South, but the fact is that under the raw deal or the New Deal or whatever you call it, the cotton growers of the South have been given the kiss of death by the New Deal wand wavers, theorists, and crystal gazers.

So, very often they must come to Congress for relief, and huge sums of money are doled out. All the time the price of cotton is away down, from 8 cents to 10 cents a pound. whereas under Republican administration, between 1920 and 1930, cotton averaged 17½ cents a pound in all those years. Naturally we Republicans have some sympathy with you people from the cotton States because of what has happened to you and the price of cotton under the New Deal program of destruction and scarcity. That is only half the story because you have also lost half or more of your cotton exports. You used to export 8 or 10 million bales of cotton under good old Republican administrations and you brought that great wealth back to the farmers of the South and made for a prosperous Southland, and as you should have today, but now you are exporting only 3 or 4 million bales, just about half what you were exporting under Republican administration, even under those iniquitous, vicious Republican tariffs.

So naturally we Republicans feel that the New Deal, having failed the cotton farmers, no matter whether they are Democrats or not they are Americans, that we must lean over backward, sometimes on our side, to help you out, due to the deplorable failures of the New Deal. It may be that we will not fight this Cotton Insurance Act too much, although I believe the insurance experiment should have a longer trial. What you really want is a better price for cotton, and you will not get that price until you elect a Republican President and have a Republican House of Representatives. [Applause.]

I absolutely guarantee a fair price to the cotton farmers of the South, although I do not expect them to vote the Republican ticket.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. PACE. I was wondering if the gentleman could be helpful in giving us a suggestion of how it can be handled and how the Republicans intend to handle it?

Mr. FISH. Well, I wanted to talk on other subjects, but I will answer you briefly. If the Republican Party does not restore confidence and buying power throughout America, thereby putting people to work and increasing the price of cotton, wheat, and corn, then we will have to do something more drastic. I am not speaking for the Republican Party. I am speaking for myself. I would suggest a two-price system, one for our home markets and another for our foreign markets. I would unload cotton at 5 cents a pound, if necessary, all over the world and bring back that money to the cotton farmers of America. The same with wheat and corn and other surplus farm products.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. COOLEY. How would you finance such a program?

Mr. FISH. Oh, there would not be any difficulty financing a program of unloading cotton, corn, and wheat on the world market and regaining the foreign markets we have lost, because we would meet the world price and they will purchase our surplus at the world price, even if it is 5 cents on cotton and 50 cents on wheat. The main objective is to have a home-market price that will be profitable for the American farmers.

Mr. COOLEY. You advocate permitting the farmer to sell on the world warket at world prices and not receive any benefits for so doing. In other words, you defend the dual-price system without anything to compensate?

Mr. FISH. Certainly. We would have the home market out of which to get a profit for our farm products.

Mr. COOLEY. At the same time we would be selling in an unprotected market and buying in a protected market, by the tariffs which we have now erected?

Mr. FISH. Now, the gentleman and I could get into a tariff argument for some time. However, I do not think it needs an answer.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Will the gentleman yield? I want to put the gentleman straight.

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. As a matter of fact, the cotton farmer would be protected in his home market for everthing he sold for domestic consumption. I know the gentleman is for that.

Mr. COOLEY. But he cannot live on that.

Mr. FISH. I believe the cotton farmer would welcome 12 or 15 cents for the home market. I am not worrying about the tariff. When we had this so-called wicked, vicious Republican tariff from 1920 to 1930, cotton was selling at an average of 17½ cents a pound.

Mr. COOLEY. And the farmers were starving to death.

Mr. FISH. Most of them would even forget their politics to get back to 17-cent cotton. Now, after 8 years of the New Deal, cotton is selling anywhere from 8 to 10 cents a pound; just about half. So it is no use raising the tariff bugaboo. You might just as well blame George Washington for it as to blame the Republican Party for what has happened to the cotton farmers under the New Deal.

Now, as the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER] is going to take the last 15 minutes, I want to use the balance of my time to speak on two subjects that have nothing to do with cotton.

This newspaper has just been handed to me, and it reads:

United States warns Japan to keep hands off Dutch East Indies.

That is the message of Secretary Hull to the Japanese Government. I wonder if Secretary Hull intends to copy the fatal policy of former Republican Secretary of State Henry L. Stimson, who bombarded Japan with notes almost daily? Does this statement of Secretary Hull mean that we propose to extend the Monroe Doctrine, the American Monroe Doctrine, to the East Indies, 10,000 miles from our shores? Does it mean that he proposes to guarantee the status quo of all the nations in the Far East?

Now, suppose Japan ignores this request; suppose Japan seizes the East Indian Islands, if Holland is attacked, does that mean that we have to go to war to uphold what Secretary of State Hull and President Roosevelt have said, practically extending the Monroe Doctrine to the Far East? It is a serious question. I am not prepared to discuss it. All I am doing now is to ask questions, whether we will have to go to war if the slap on the wrist is not listened to by Japan. Suppose Holland is embroiled in the war, and God forbid it—I say that with a great deal of feeling, because I am of Dutch origin. No one would be more opposed to the invasion of Holland than I am, but I am not willing to guarantee the status quo of any nation in the world outside of our own, and I am not willing to commit us to war or to the sacrifice of the life of a single American soldier for any foreign nation in advance, such as this policy does. I also want to discuss in the few minutes remaining another issue.

The President today sent a message to Congress, and in that message he said, in effect, that he wants to be able to spend the relief funds provided under the Budget of $975,000,000 in the next 8 months, and he virtually said he asked Congress to scrap the Woodrum amendment, which calls for the apportionment of that money over a 12 months' period so that the money could not be used in any one month. I believe everybody will agree that the peak of relief comes in the middle of the winter, in January or February.

I have not had time to look up the statistics, but I think these facts are fairly well known: That back in 1936, when the President had the power he is now asking for—he is now asking for discretionary power over the control of these relief funds—back in 1936 during a Presidential campaign 500,000 relief workers were put on the Federal pay rolls during the months of September and October just prior to election and then taken off the pay rolls as the winter was advancing—in the month of November right after election. The question I want to propound here is, Is this another campaign slush fund? Does this mean that 500,000 American citizens will be placed on the pay rolls in September and October in order to preserve the New Deal and keep its supporters in power at the expense of the taxpayers of America?

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. COOLEY. Did not the President in his message say that the money would not be used unless it was necessary to prevent suffering?

Mr. FISH. That is exactly the question I want to raise. The President asks for this power himself. I would like to known in advance whether this money is to be spent for campaign purposes instead of relief, the way it was spent 4 years ago and 2 years ago?

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. COOLEY. Would the gentleman want to put a provision in the law that would prevent the expenditure of this money until after the general election had been held?

Mr. FISH. I do not want the bill amended, I want the Woodrum amendment to remain in the bill. I think everybody will acknowledge that the peak of the relief load is in the middle of the winter months and not in September and October. Four years ago we found that this money was spent for political and partisan purposes, and we have a right to protest now and to insist that the Woodrum amendment be left alone. If any attempt is made to undermine it or to weaken it or to repeal it, then the people back home ought to know the facts; the American people should be told that it is an effort to create a slush fund to preserve the New Deal with money out of the taxpayers' pocket and the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Did not the same thing happen in 1938 when employment throughout the Nation was increasing, that relief money was being squandered all over the country around election time, and a couple of months prior to that time?

Mr. FISH. I believe the investigations conducted by a Democratic committee of the Senate proved that to be the case; yet here, without any argument at all, this letter from President Roosevelt is sent to the Congress asking for further discretionary power. As far as I am concerned I would like to see Congress take back the discretionary powers it has already given the President and restore representative and constitutional government in the United States of America.

Furthermore, talking about discretionary power, this Congress will adjourn in 60 days. The President has tremendous war emergency powers, and there is one thing above everything else that I am in favor of, and urge the Congress to repeal all those war emergency powers granted the President before we adjourn, and restore those powers to the Congress which has the sole right to declare war. If the President is permitted to retain these emergency powers he can make secret commitments and take steps that may involve us in foreign wars before Congress can act. I am fearful that unless Congress regains these emergency powers we will be secretly committed to a war policy before Congress reconvenes. [Applause.]

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to my distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, it is to be regretted that the gentleman from New York, who is a candidate for the highest office in the United States, the Presidency, should be so reckless with the facts. We know that he loves to enlarge and magnify dangers that do not exist. Two years ago you and I heard the gentleman talk about the danger of President Roosevelt's forcing us into war. We are not in war now, and I know that if the President of these United States can keep us out he will do so. He will do everything humanly possible to preclude our being involved in war. The gentleman from New York, of course, may have information from his trip to Europe, due to his conferences with certain gentlemen who entertained him, whose names I will not mention—he may have information that I do not have. I have not that close relationship with these gentlemen.

Now, getting down to the bill, the gentleman stated that the farmers can be relieved only by a Republican administration. He quoted the prices that were in effect from 1920 to 1930, but he failed to state that the prices that farmers obtained for their commodities from 1920 to 1930 were due to the previous 8 years' Democratic administration, which made possible the increase in prices to the farmers for their products.

For the information of the gentleman and for the information of all Members, may I say that I remember the price of cotton in 1932, and I know I am not mistaken when I say cotton was selling for 5 cents a pound at that time. It is now selling for 10½ cents, double the price which the cotton farmers obtained during the Hoover administration. That same statement applies to wheat that sold for 25 cents a bushel, corn at 8 cents a bushel, cattle and hogs that sold for 3 cents per pound on the hoof, and correspondingly low prices for every other farm product.

The only benefits the farmers of this Nation can obtain are from a Democratic administration under President Roosevelt, as has been amply demonstrated. It took the Republicans only 8 years to bring about the greatest panic in history.

Under the pending bill we are extending certain privileges to cotton and later on, if the Democratic administration is continued in power, these benefits will inure also to corn and to all other farm commodities. Therefore you gentlemen who represent the agricultural sections of the West and South should without hesitancy, if you are interested in the farmers who helped elect you, join with us in passing this bill and see that Roosevelt is renominated and reelected; then your troubles will be over and you will not have to have any fears in the coming years.

Mr. Speaker, I take the liberty of inserting at this point an excerpt of a letter that I received from my colleague, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FULMER], sponsor of the bill. After an explanation of the provisions of the bill, his letter continues:

> This is what I thought that you and a great many others would be interested in because of your deep interest in getting all of the W. P. A. and relief money that you possibly can for the purpose of taking care of the unemployed and needy, other than farmers.
> Without this insurance we are paying out annually millions of dollars in the way of grants and relief to farmers because of their crop losses, and thousands of them are employed on W. P. A. work.
> If this bill is passed, not only will this leave all of this money for the other employed citizens not living on farms, but it would absolutely keep farmers off W. P. A. and relief rolls, and would give them three-fourths of the normal value of their destroyed crop, to be used in paying their taxes and other obligations, whereas W. P. A. work and money spent for farmers' relief simply goes to maintain them and their families, and leaves them with their various obligations carried over to the next year unpaid.
> Therefore, I am hoping that you who are deeply interested in this matter, will give me your full support on Thursday in the passage of this sound, commonsense business proposition.
>
> Yours very sincerely,
> H. P. FULMER, M. C.

The bill provides for $12,000,000, which is necessary and will be the only cost to which the Government will be subjected, because this is cooperative insurance set up for the guidance of the farmers by the Department of Agriculture. I am pleased that no one as yet has seen fit to unfairly attack that Department which has done so much under the present administration for the farmers and for the country.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes.

Mr. GROSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GROSS. The gentleman is now admitting then that the passage of this bill is to elect President Roosevelt?

That is your admission, is it not?

Mr. SABATH. I will answer the question. I believe that the passage of this bill will help the farmers if the people are not misled by misrepresentations and if they will renominate and reelect President Roosevelt. Of course, you gentlemen have the facilities when you go home whereby you can act through the Republican newspapers, corporations, and special interests that own the newspapers, which are rather reckless with the truth. They feed the people with untruth and false information. If the people get the real truth, the real facts, the honest-to-goodness facts about this administration and the good it has accomplished, I am satisfied none of you would have a chance to get reelected unless you ran on the Democratic ticket.

Mr. GROSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I am trying to give you good facts.

Mr. GROSS. Oh, yes?

Mr. SABATH. I hope you will benefit by this advice. I have been here now for 35 years and I have always tried to do the right thing. That is the reason my people send me back, because I advise them right and if the gentleman was in my district I would advise him the same as I advise my people. After all, I try to be of some benefit and help and I hope the gentleman will profit by my advice. That is about all I have to say.

Mr. Speaker, this bill should receive the unanimous vote of every man who actually has the interest of the farmer at heart, because if the farmers receive a fair compensation for their products I believe the laboring men of the United States will be benefited, the businessmen will be benefited, and it will be of general benefit to the entire Nation; therefor, I feel that this bill should receive the unanimous support of the Members, whether they be Democrats or Republicans. [Applause.]

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER]?

There was no objection.

WIDOWS' AND ORPHANS' PENSIONS

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, I have asked for this time so that I could bring to your attention the far-reaching effects of H. R. 9000, and to outline as fully as possible the reasons that compel me to oppose its enactment into law.

H. R. 9000 is a bill sponsored by the American Legion and introduced by the chairman of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation, the gentleman from Mississippi, the Honorable JOHN E. RANKIN. As a matter of fact, it is a substitute for H. R. 7593, which was the original Legion bill.

After hearings before the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation the bill was favorably reported to the House. As I recall it, the only witness appearing in opposition to this bill was ordered off the witness stand by the committee chairman, allegedly because certain statements were displeasing to the chairman. The proponents of the legislation were largely representatives of the major World War veterans' organizations.

Following favorable action by the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation, H. R. 9000 was placed on the Consent Calendar. On Monday, April 1, objection was made to its immediate consideration by the gentleman from California, the Honorable JOHN COSTELLO, a member of the majority party's committee of "objectors." It is the responsibility of members of this committee, as well as members of the minority party's committee, to study bills on the Consent Calendar and object to passage of those bills that they feel should be debated and considered at greater length than can be done during consideration of the Consent Calendar. I am told that members of these committees, as a rule, object to passage of bills that involve the expenditure of more than $1,000,000.

Last Monday, April 15, during the calling of the Consent Calendar, this bill was again objected to by three Members—the gentleman from California, Hon. JOHN COSTELLO; the gentleman from New Jersey, Hon. ROBERT W. KEAN, a holder of the Silver Star Medal and Distinguished Service Cross; and myself—three objections being needed to strike the bill from the calendar.

The normal procedure should then have been for the chairman of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation to go to the Rules Committee of the House and ask for a rule to make it in order for the House to consider H. R. 9000. I have been informed by both majority and minority members of the Committee on Rules that although a letter had previously been sent to the chairman of the Rules Committee asking that committee to grant the rule, no time had been given to the committee to consider this request. Regardless of the fact that the Rules Committee has not had time to consider the request for a rule, a petition was placed on the Clerk's desk within an hour of the time the bill was stricken from the Consent Calendar. To provide for immediate consideration of H. R. 9000, 218 signatures are required to make a discharge petition effective, and the necessary signatures have since been secured.

So that my opposition to this legislation may be understood, I ask that I be pardoned a few personal references. Circumstances at the end of the World War gave me a lot of time to study the problem of adequately providing for the war disabled and the adoption of a sound legislative program. I was confined in a Government hospital for several years, between 1919 and 1929, and had intimate contact with hundreds of disabled veterans and their dependents. I followed with interest the organization of the American Legion and supported wholeheartedly the Legion's legislative program. The American Legion has largely been responsible for calling to the attention of Congress the needs of the disabled and the securing of just benefits for the disabled, their dependents, and for the widows and orphans of men who died in service or as a result of service-incurred disabilities. Almost without exception legislation recommended and approved by the American Legion has been enacted into law by Congress. Thus far the provisions of H. R. 9000 are the outstanding exceptions, although it has been on the Legion's program since 1934. Almost without exception I have supported the Legion's legislative efforts. I have come to Washington at my own expense to urge passage of legislation for the benefit of World War veterans. I have addressed department and national conventions of the Legion urging adequate pensions for widows and orphans of men whose death was caused or hastened by their war service. I will continue my efforts in that direction. It is partly because of my concern for that comparatively small group that I am compelled to oppose this general pension proposal.

Before leaving France in 1919 I drove past the cemetery where lay buried more than 150 aviators and I vowed that never, if I could prevent it, would their loved ones suffer. Then again in 1937 I visited several of the huge American cemeteries scattered through France and I was reminded of the obligation this Government owed to the dependents of the men who lay buried in those sacred spots.

With these thoughts in mind, how can I bring myself to vote for this bill when I feel certain that its passage will make adequate pensions for real war widows more difficult to obtain, if not impossible. These widows, if under 50, now receive a maximum of $38 per month, with a $45 maximum for those over 50.

I have tried to serve the American Legion and, through it, my less fortunate comrades, and the American Legion in my own State of Connecticut has honored me by giving me the opportunity to serve as Department Commander and as a member of the National Executive Committee, which post I resigned to become a candidate for my present office. I have served as a member of the National Advisory Rehabilitation Committee, and have introduced legislation at the request of the Legion. With that background is it necessary for me to say to you, Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, that the most difficult decision I have had to make as a Member of this body is whether or not to oppose this Legion bill? Under my oath, and because of convictions I have, it is impossible for me to sit in my seat without voicing my objection to this bill.

The chairman of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation, Mr. RANKIN, stated Thursday that I was opposed to this bill because of its cost. While it is true cost is an important factor, it is only a factor. My opposition is a matter of principle and the principle is just this—should the Federal Government pay a pension to the widow of a veteran who served his country during the World War and who suffered no wound, injury, or disease during his service, who, in some cases, performed his service on a college campus; who perhaps was stronger, physically, at the end of the war than when he enlisted and who, years after the war, married a girl he did not know or who perhaps was not even born at the time of the war, and who, years after the war, dies as a result of an automobile accident or from some other natural cause, which by no stretch of the imagination could be connected with his war service. That is one of the questions we must decide before we vote on this proposal. We say now, through legislation adopted last year, that the widow or children of any veteran who, as a result of his war service, suffered any disability whatsoever, even though it be rated as only 1 percent, shall be entitled to a pension, regardless of the cause of death. I realize that there are a few cases where, due to loss of records or death of witnesses, it has been impossible to establish service connection to the satisfaction of the Veterans' Administration. I would be willing to support legislation to care for that situation, or I would include widows of veterans who actually saw combat service as determined by the War Department, for entitlement to a battle clasp on a Victory Medal, as I believe it quite reasonable to contend that engaging in a major battle during modern warfare might well shorten a man's life.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] expressed criticism because no one objected last Monday to passage of certain legislation for the benefit of Civil War widows. I am not as familiar with Civil War pension legislation as, perhaps, I should be, but that was the closing chapter to an old book, while H. R. 9000 deals with the opening chapter of a new book of pension laws for which this generation will be wholly responsible.

There seems to be a difference of opinion as to the cost of the provisions of H. R. 9000. The chairman of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation says it will cost the taxpayers almost nothing, and, compared to sums that have been spent on other proposals, he may be right. His estimate is between six and eight million dollars. However, in a report on H. R. 9000, which I secured from the Veterans' Administration, and which I inserted in Thursday's RECORD, it is estimated that the bill provides pensions in the amount of over $48,000,000. True, the report points out that past experience indicates only half of those entitled to receive these benefits will apply the first year, making the first year's cost approximately twenty-four million. No one has estimated the cost for future years, but one thing is certain, and that is it will increase rapidly each year, even if the law is not amended.

It is up to you to decide whose figures you will accept as most likely to be correct.

Now, let us see just where we stand at the present time. Just what benefit laws now on the statute books provide for widows and orphans of World War veterans, where this proposed legislation originated, and what brought it about.

To the best of my knowledge, this proposed legislation was first known as the fourth point of a four-point program adopted by the American Legion in 1934, at the time Edward Hayes, of Illinois, was National Commander of the American Legion; and I might add that no man ever worked harder nor did more for the rehabilitation of disabled veterans than Past National Commander Hayes. It is significant that the other three points have since been enacted into law, while this fourth point has been passed on from one Congress to another. Each year, without a great deal of further study, the National Convention of the American Legion has reiterated its previous stand and asked for passage of a bill to provide for dependent widows and orphans of World War veterans, regardless of the cause of death. For all these years it has been part of the Legion program.

I contend, Mr. Speaker, that conditions have changed since 1934, altering the whole picture and I maintain that the Legion has not given ample consideration to the changed circumstances. For one thing, we have acquired a national debt of almost $45,000,000,000 and that fact cannot be overlooked in the future, when we consider the adoption of legislation, no matter how meritorious it may be. For another thing, we have adopted a program of social security for our citizens, veterans, and nonveterans alike. Only last year we amended the social-security laws so that provisions are made for pensions to widows with children. We should determine whether the proposed pension provided in H. R. 9000 is to supplement any social security pension or is it in lieu of a social-security pension? In 1934 we were providing a more adequate income for the widows of veterans who died in battle than we are today. In 1934 the widow of a veteran who died as a result of a service-connected disability, in most cases, was receiving $87.50, $30 of which was pension and $57.50 from war-risk insurance, bought by the veteran. Today these insurance checks are a thing of the past for the widow of a man who died during the war. To be sure, Congress recently increased the pension to $38 for such a widow under 50, and $45 if over 50 years of age. This group of widows, orphans, and dependent parents of men whose death was due to war service may be small in number, but they are close to the heart of every American citizen and they have a real claim, not only for justice but for generous treatment from their Government.

This proposed legislation goes much further than we have ever gone before in that it introduces a new item in war veterans' legislation.

Mr. CAMP. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. CAMP. The gentleman states that this is further than we have ever gone before. Does not the gentleman know that the rate of pensions provided in this bill is the same as that being paid to widows of veterans——

Mr. MILLER. The amount is——

Mr. CAMP. Wait until I have finished my question. The same that is being paid to widows of veterans of the Philippine Insurrection, the Spanish War, and all the others?

Mr. MILLER. I said this legislation goes further, and I will call attention to the fact that it does go further, because never before, in either Civil War or Spanish War veterans' legislation, have we granted pensions to parents of men who died from a non-service-connected disability, and this in spite of the fact that now for the first time in our history we have social-security pensions for citizens over 65. Most of the parents of deceased World War veterans are now 65 or over, and many of them are receiving social-security benefits. Is it proposed to pay one citizen a pension under this act plus his social-security benefits while his next-door neighbor, equally in need, with no son of military age at the time of the World War gets a smaller pension.

Mr. CAMP. The gentleman now is speaking of parents.

Mr. MILLER. I am speaking of H. R. 9000, and to that extent it does go further. It provides a new category of dependents. The amount involved is less. Of course, we have granted larger pensions, and we will grant more to the World War widows if we pass this bill, and in a very short time.

It might be well to insert right here, a brief résumé of legislation for widows and orphans adopted by Congress since the end of the World War. In the Sixty-eighth Congress, as part of Public, 242, a pension of $30 per month was granted for a widow, with $10 additional per month for the first child, and $6 monthly for each additional child. This pension was only paid where the veteran died either in service or as a direct result of a service-connected disability. Public, 484, of the Seventy-third Congress was enacted, at which time it was claimed, and I believe correctly so, that many veterans were dying of some causes not directly due to their war disability, but that their death had undoubtedly been hastened by a service-connected disability. For example, a veteran badly gassed, died of a heart attack. The heart undoubtedly had been weakened by continuous coughing or by the gas. Congress, therefore, said that the widow of such a veteran should be entitled to a pension, providing that at the time of the veteran's death he had a 30 percent or more service-connected disability. In such cases the pension was to be smaller than that paid to the widow of a veteran who died of a service-connected disability. New rates were established at $22 for the widow, plus $8 for the first child, and $4 for each additional child, further providing the veteran was married before July 3, 1931.

Later Public, 844, of the Seventy-fourth Congress was passed to amend Public, 484. This act increased the pension for the widow of a veteran who, at the time of death, had 30 percent or more service-connected disability but who died of some other cause, to $30 for the widow, with $10 for the first child, and $6 for each additional child. Then, when Public, 304, of the Seventy-fifth Congress was passed, the percentage of service-connected disability a veteran must have to entitle his widow to a pension was reduced to 20 percent, and the amount of pension payable was $30 for widows under 50, $37.50 for widows from age 50 to 65, and $45 for widows over 65, with $10 for the first child up to age 10, increased to $15 after age 10, and $8 for additional children up to age 10, increased to $13 from age 10. During the third session of the Seventy-fifth Congress, Public, 514, reduced the requirement to 10 percent with the marriage date moved to May 13, 1938.

Finally, last year, in the Seventy-sixth Congress, Public, 198 further reduced the disability rating to 1 percent. In other words, the widow of a veteran who had any service-connected disability was to be pensioned at the rate of $38 if under 50, and so forth.

Now, in H. R. 9000 it is proposed to wipe out the need for any service-connected disability, and it is proposed to pay a pension to the dependents of World War veterans regardless of the cause of death or the extent or type of the veteran's service, provided he served honorably for 90 days.

For a moment let us consider this proposal from the standpoint of the widows we seek to aid. I believe that if we adopt this legislation and pay these widows $20 a month they will have to come back to us and ask for more. They may not intend to do that now, but they will have to do so, because $20 a month will be a handicap to them in some ways. This may sound strange, but I have seen it work out in the case of disabled veterans—men who were drawing $18, $20, or $25 a month. Such a veteran would go to a W. P. A. administrator or apply for a position in private industry; the employment manager would beam upon him and say, "You are a charge of the Federal Government; you should not have to come to us, or you should not have to ask for a job on W. P. A.; it is the responsibility of the Federal Government to provide for you." That is what they will tell the widows for whom we are providing $20 under this bill.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Briefly.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. May I state that as far as my own city of New York is concerned no veteran is discriminated against, nor is the widow of any veteran discriminated against, because of any benefits they may receive from the Federal Government.

Mr. MILLER. I am glad that is true in New York. I know of other places where it is not true.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. How would the widow or family of a veteran in Massachusetts benefit by legislation of this kind, when we have the soldiers' relief law fully and adequately taking care of them there today?

Mr. MILLER. They cannot benefit in Massachusetts, and they cannot benefit in Connecticut and some other States.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Would not we in Massachusetts be in a better position through our soldiers' agency to take care of the needs of the widows and the families of the veterans than would somebody down here in Washington, 500 miles away?

Mr. MILLER. I believe so.

For several months I have been trying to find out what the rank and file of American Legion members really think about this legislation. I spoke to a Legion post here in the District of Columbia—a large well-attended meeting—and discussed the provisions of this proposed legislation, its background, and the present situation as thoroughly as I could and then suggested that those who disagreed with me, do me the favor of writing to me, expressing their views. That was several weeks ago and to date I have not received a single letter from a veteran who attended that meeting. On April 5 I went back to my own district, where I had been invited to address a Legion gathering, assembled to celebrate Army Day. There were approximately 200 veterans in attendance. After discussing the national-defense program of the Legion rather briefly, I brought up the subject of legislation for the benefit of World War veterans' widows and orphans. I said to them, many of whom I had known intimately and associated with for many years, that I was talking to them frankly, and that after I finished if they still felt that the American Legion, in the light of all circumstances which exist today and in the light of social-security legislation which had been enacted, was justified in pressing for this legislation, I wanted them to write and tell me. To date not a single person has written to me indicating his disagreement with my position. On the other hand, I have had numerous letters heartily endorsing the stand I have taken on this legislation. These letters are open to the inspection of any Member of the House who desires to come to my office. In addition to addressing the two meetings to which I have referred, I have, during the past several months, been talking to a great many veterans about this proposal legislation. If you say to a veteran of the World War: "Are you in favor of pensions for widows and orphans of World War veterans," almost without exception that answer will be in the affirmative. But, when you explain the provisions of H. R. 9000 and point out that the pension provided in this bill will go to the widows of men who saw little or no service; men who received no injury or disability; or men who served their full enlistment in the S. A. T. C., for example, almost without exception they have said they meant the widows of men who were killed in service or who died as a result of injury or sickness incurred in service. I much prefer to have the Government provide adequately for that group than to extend widows' pensions to practically every World War widow.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman realize that, as a matter of fact, there would probably be no or very little expense to the taxpayers because of the needs provision or the dependency clause in this bill? The veterans' dependents would receive more from soldiers' relief or from social-security relief or through some other agency than they would secure under this bill. General Hines in his report does not take this into consideration. It is very different from any other so-called pension bill ever introduced.

Mr. MILLER. It depends on what you call very little. I have got to abide by the figures sent here by the Veterans' Administration and which I have placed in the RECORD.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. I cannot yield further.

As my time is rapidly drawing to a close, I want to repeat that on the whole I have been proud of the Legion's record of suggesting sound legislation. We have seen what happens when legislation enacted for the benefit of World War veterans is hastily considered and not adequately debated. We remember the enactment of the so-called Disability Allowance law which provided pensions for veterans whose disability was not incurred in service. We know that that legislation was hastily written and that the provisions went far beyond the intentions of those who proposed the legislation. The Disability Allowance law was not sponsored by the Legion or by any other veterans' organization. I have always felt that it was the provisions of the disability-allowance law that made possible the enactment of the Economy Act in 1933, for in almost every congressional district there were one or two outstanding cases of veterans who had been injured, for example, in an automobile accident and who had recovered substantial damages either from an insurance company or through the courts, and then secured a Federal pension. Because of such cases, the disabled veteran received a black eye and many Members of Congress in 1933 found it impossible to vote against the Economy Act. While I have in mind the provisions of the Economy Act, I would further suggest that we might well correct some outstanding hardships imposed by this act—the Economy Act—before we extend widows and orphans legislation. Some of you have forgotten that there are today approximately twenty-odd-thousand disabled veterans who are receiving but 75 percent of their normal rates due to the fact that their disability is presumptively service connected. These so-called presumptive cases were all reviewed by special boards, and it has always been my contention that, based on sound medical testimony, their disabilities are in fact, or should be directly service connected. I would like to see justice restored to this group.

I cannot believe that it is the intention of Congress to provide pensions for all dependent widows of World War veterans at a time when widows of men who died or were killed in line of duty in the Regular Military and Naval Establishments are receiving a paltry $22 per month from the Federal Government.

Recently I had a letter from the widow of a young officer who was killed in the crash of the airship Shenandoah, urging that something be done to increase her $22 a month pension. That widow has a real claim on the Government.

Can we, in all fairness, pass H. R. 9000, when we cannot seem to find money enough to provide relief for all who need it?

I am simply asking the Members of Congress to give serious consideration and study to the provisions of this bill; I am urging Members to talk to veterans in their own districts, explaining the full provisions of the bill to them, and asking for their reaction. Many of you have received letters and telegrams from the legislative chairmen of posts and auxiliary units of the Legion urging you to support H. R. 9000. I point out that these letters and telegrams are sent to Congressmen in response to an appeal which was sent out by the National Legislative Director of the Legion urging the local posts and units to lay down a barrage of letters and telegrams on their representatives in Congress.

Recently I received a letter from a legislative chairman, typical of others, urging my support of some 18 different bills in which the Legion was interested. I took the trouble to look up each of these bills and, with 1 or 2 exceptions, they are all sound proposals, but I dare say that the individual who sent me the letter had little knowledge of the contents of many of the bills he was urging me to support.

As I have said before, I have had close contact with veterans of the World War and my contacts have convinced me that there is no group of more patriotic citizens in the United States; they have given unselfishly of their services, both during the war and after, and they would be the last group of citizens to propose legislation that would jeopardize the soundness of their National Government. The Legion has always maintained a keen interest in national defense. As a matter of fact, second only to their interest in the war-disabled, has been its interest in urging an adequate national-defense program. I would like to refer to a report made to this House by the gentleman from New York, Honorable JAMES W. WADSWORTH, chairman of the special committee appointed to study our national-defense requirements, wherein it was pointed out that the weakest spot in the national-defense armor was the national debt. Members of the American Legion would never knowingly propose a program that would weaken our defense position.

I am asking only that you give full consideration to everything involved in this proposed legislation and that when the time comes to vote, you will vote for what you think is to the best interest not only of the World War veterans and their dependents but for the entire citizenship of the United States.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS]

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the tender of the time, but I will content myself at this time by asking unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD upon this subject.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

COTTON-CROP INSURANCE

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, the idea involved in the plan for all-risk crop insurance is not a new one. Benjamin Franklin suggested it in his day. The Department of Agriculture has conducted surveys and studies relative to such insurance for a quarter of a century, and insurance companies have experimented with the idea in limited areas for brief periods of time.

The failure of insurance companies in their limited attempts to establish such a type of insurance has been due in the main to their lack of reliable data, a proper spread of the risk involved, the necessary administrative set-up for placing such insurance, and adjusting losses, together with the fact that they guaranteed the price as well as the yield.

In the summer of 1936 President Roosevelt appointed a special committee, which was charged with the responsibility of conducting a proper survey with reference to the feasibility of formulating an all-risk crop-insurance program. That committee later submitted a favorable report, wherein it advised that a program of that nature be established for wheat.

That the issue involved is not a political one is evidenced by the fact that both President Roosevelt and Governor Landon, during the 1936 campaign, expressed themselves as favorable to a plan for all-risk crop insurance. In fact, both the Democratic and Republican platforms contained provisions in support of such insurance. Since that time, other national leaders have espoused the principle involved.

That the idea is not a new one, even in national legislative channels, is evidenced by the fact that several Senators and Congressmen, previous to the time the present law was enacted, had introduced measures suggesting such insurance. Senators Sheppard, McNary, Pope, and Representatives Sinclair, Hope, Fulmer, Sheppard of California, and perhaps others, had sponsored such proposals.

Whereas leading farm organizations may have differed at times in their advocacy of various plans to meet the needs of agriculture and to solve farm problems, they have been, and still are, united in their support of crop insurance. As a matter of fact, such organizations have had an important part in initiating the plans which finally resulted in the formulation of the present crop-insurance program.

All-risk crop insurance is based upon sound and well-established principles of insurance. The premium rates in the present program have been based upon actuarial data which have been carefully assembled and which are representative of past experience over a definite period of years. Rates so calculated should balance losses over a like period of years in the future.

The crop-insurance program is planned on a national scale, but the rates for each farm are based upon the crop-loss experience of the farm, the experience of the county in which the farm is located, and, to a very limited degree, upon the experience of the counties bordering on the county. As a result, sections of the country where the risks may be low are not required to contribute toward paying for the higher cost of insurance in those sections where the risks may be high.

At the outset the crop-insurance program was purposely limited to one crop, namely, wheat, to provide a concrete experiment as to the feasibility of such insurance. Profiting by the experience thus gained, substantial improvements have been made in the 1940 insurance program. The rate structure has been materially improved, through careful checking of yields and lengthening of the base period. With each passing year it will be possible to further improve all phases of the program.

The present set-up, wherein the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation administers the program jointly with the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, affords close contact with the growers in selling the insurance to them, in checking the yields and losses, and in making appraisals. This close cooperation is proving helpful alike to the growers and to those charged with the administration of the act.

The capital stock of the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation is supplied through an authorization of Congress providing for $100,000,000, $20,000,000 of which has been appropriated. Of the latter amount, about $2,000,000 has been used the first year in the payment of losses. Although premiums should equal losses over a longer period of years, differences one way or the other will naturally appear in individual years.

In its 1936 report President Roosevelt's special committee estimated that had crop insurance been in effect in 1930–35, under a 50-percent participation, premiums would have exceeded losses by 70,000,000 bushels the first 3 years, while losses would have exceeded premiums by 68,000,000 bushels the next 3 years. Consequently, it may be noted that present developments are not out of line with expectations expressed at the time the present crop-insurance program was first advocated.

As to the fact that the indemnity payments for the 1939 crop exceeded premiums for that year by approximately 50 percent at a time when the annual production for the Nation was about normal, it should be borne in mind that a normal national yield does not necessarily mean a normal yield in the particular areas participating most heavily in the insurance. That was true in some of the Great Plains States in 1939, where the wheat crop was 11 percent below normal in Nebraska, 24 percent below normal in Kansas, 29 percent below normal in South Dakota, and 18 percent below normal in Texas.

To put it in another way, for 1939, 6,695,771 bushels of wheat have been received in payment of premiums where 9,949,450 bushels have been paid out in losses, a difference of 3,253,679 bushels. In five of the larger wheat-producing States, namely, Kansas, Nebraska, Oklahoma, South Dakota, and Texas, 2,669,003 bushels of wheat have been received in premiums where 6,087,912 bushels have been paid out in losses, a difference of 3,418,909 bushels. Hence, the difference between premiums and losses in those five States was 165,230 bushels greater than the difference in premiums and losses for the entire Nation.

Where the drought in certain States was largely responsible for the lack of sufficient premium wheat to meet losses in 1939, other factors have naturally contributed to the result. One such outstanding factor is to be found in the effect which the late closing date, and the privilege of insuring after seeding (now discontinued), had in enabling the grower to insure where the prospect for a crop seemed poor, and to refrain from doing so where the prospect was more favorable later in the season.

Each year will disclose such variations. The extent of the variations will depend upon the percent of participation, the total national yield, and the spread of the losses and their relationship to average yields on participating farms. Then, too, as far as the 1939 program is concerned, it should be admitted in all candor that it is humanly impossible to establish a new system of insurance, calculate premium rates, appraise yields, and adjust losses without some attending imperfections at the outset.

Administrative expenses and the cost of storage are paid by the Federal Government, and rightly so, because of the national benefits resulting from the program. While the crop-insurance program affords security to the individual grower and the community wherein he resides, it likewise furnishes benefits to others who are interested in the increased national farm buying power which such security to agriculture affords.

The initial cost of administering an insurance program, where much of the expense involves the cost of establishing such a program, is not to be compared with the cost of its administration after the initial period has passed. That is especially true where an effort is being made to establish such a program in a new field where experience is lacking, where no precedent can be found as a guide, and where the undertaking is largely of a pioneering nature. That, in brief, is the situation as it related to the administration of the Federal crop-insurance program for 1939.

During the first year, in addition to the outlay of necessary funds for the current administration of the crop-insurance program, those charged with its administration found it necessary to expend additional amounts incidental to the organization of a new set-up; that is, those funds which were needed for assembling actuarial data, for acquiring office fixtures and supplies, and for extensive educational purposes. Then, too, they found it desirable to expend other funds in planning the 1940 program, as well as in assembling information relative to other crops.

The experience of both stock and mutual insurance companies will verify the truth of the statement that the sales and operating expenses during the initial period, ranging from 1 to 10 years, has equaled or exceeded the total losses paid for that period. For instance, in case of the farmers' mutual windstorm insurance companies, their expenses over the first 10-year period averaged $1.58 per dollar of losses paid. The Federal Crop Insurance Corporation expended less than that proportionately for that purpose during the first year of its administration of the program.

The Spectator, Insurance Yearbook for 1939, reveals that for administrative expenses in 1938, out of total receipts from premiums written, 332 stock, fire, and marine insurance companies expended $326,305,985, or 45.31 percent of $720,157,663 received; 41 stock, automobile insurance companies expended $17,506,594, or 28.22 percent of $62,446,832 received; 151 advanced premium mutual fire insurance companies expended $30,205,074, or 34.51 percent, of $87,535,817 received, and 5 farm mutual fire insurance companies expended $1,101,967, or 35.14 percent, of $3,135,608 received. In other words, according to this yearbook, these 529 stock and mutual insurance companies engaged in a fire, windstorm, hail, automobile, and other kindred insurance business expended a total of $375,119,620, or 42.98 percent of $872,875,920 received for administrative expenses in 1938.

Using the same approach for the purpose of a comparison, we find that the estimated expense of administering the 1940 crop-insurance program will be $5,923,200—amount appropriated for that purpose—or 37.16 percent of $15,938,200 estimated total receipts. (Appropriation plus estimated receipts from premiums.) In arriving at this latter figure, it is estimated that an approximate total of 15,000,000 bushels of wheat will be received in payment of premiums for 1940 with a cash equivalent of $10,015,000 on the basis of wheat prices at the time premiums were paid. On the basis of the present prices of stored premium wheat, the comparative cost of the administration of the program for 1940 would be much lower.

The experience which the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation has gained through administration of the program for the first year, and an increase in the volume of business is enabling it to reduce very definitely the administrative cost per policy received. It now seems that such cost for 1940 may be less than one-half of what it was in 1939. Aside from the effect which a material increase in the number of policies has had, improved methods involving simplification of procedure, elimination of duplication, and fewer and more direct contacts, and other like changes have contributed materially toward that result.

That the program has been highly acceptable to wheat growers is evidenced by the fact that where 166,000 paid-up applications were received in 1939, more than 378,000 such applications have thus far been received for the 1940 program. Increased interest in crop insurance is further evidenced by legislation which has been proposed to extend the program to other crops, especially to cotton, tobacco, corn, fruits, and vegetables.

Although crop insurance does not supply a panacea for all farm ills, the security which it provides has had a definite appeal to farmers in areas affected by crop losses, especially in those Great Plains States where wheat growers have suffered severe losses in recent years. Such crop conditions have contributed materially toward creating an interest in crop insurance, not only in wheat-growing areas but elsewhere.

In the past the burdens of crop failure have been beyond the resources of the individual grower. In fact, during a 10-year period extending from 1926 to 1936, the Federal Government expended for emergency agricultural relief a total of $600,000,000, and did so largely because of crop failures. The crop-insurance program is materially reducing the need for Federal and State Government relief in wheat areas, and will have a like effect in other areas as soon as the program may be extended to apply thereto.

Because of increased taxes, interest, and debts, as well as greater hazards, at least in some areas, and the uncertainty of markets and effective demand, together with increased overhead, the individual grower is more dependent now upon cash income than he was in the earlier days. Crop insurance definitely assures him of that. While crop insurance would have been helpful even in those earlier days referred to, diversification, rotation, and a limited carry-over for each year largely sufficed to safeguard the growers' farming operations.

A better understanding of the purpose of the program, as well as the benefits to be derived therefrom on the part of the growers themselves, is resulting in closer cooperation on their part. Each grower realizes more clearly each day that better farming will not only assure his eligibility to participate in the program in the future, but will aid in increasing the coverage and in reducing the rate for the farm. Being willing to make that contribution himself, he will become increasingly more insistent that other growers do likewise.

Better farming, increased income, cooperation among farmers, sympathetic Government assistance, and the farmers' efficient administration of their own program, locally and in the State, will aid materially in reducing the dangers of farm bankruptcy and land foreclosure, resulting in nonresident land ownership and tenancy. Just as the national farm program, as a whole, is contributing toward that result, it is increasing the possibilities of more farmer-owned and farmer-operated farms in every rural community.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution under consideration may be amended by striking out "H. R. 6972" and substituting in lieu thereof "S. 2635."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I feel this request coming at this hour, when most of the membership has gone to their offices, is an unreasonable request.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman understand that it has been agreed that we would stay here and debate the rule and adjourn tonight? Of course, if that procedure is followed, it would be impossible to submit this request.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I do not agree with that theory at all. The gentleman can make the same request later when the bill is under consideration.

Mr. PACE. After the rule has been adopted?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. You can substitute the Senate bill for the House bill by unanimous consent later just as well as you can this evening. In fact, that is the normal procedure. It has been frequently done.

Mr. PACE. The gentleman understands that we have consulted with the members of the committee.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Yes; but, after all, there are 435 Members of the House, and several did not know that this request would be made. I regret to be obliged to object. I object.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

WIDOWS' AND ORPHANS' BILL

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I was not in the Chamber at the beginning of the remarks of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER] in attacking the widows' and orphans' bill.

He makes much ado about the fact that dependent parents are included and says that was never done before. As a matter of fact we never had old-age pensions in this country before. This is the first administration that has ever adopted the humane policy of taking care of the aged. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER] was on the floor Monday when a bill was brought out here and passed without any protest from him to put the widows of Civil War veterans on the pension roll at from $40 a month to $50 a month, widows who had married Civil War veterans as late as 65 years after the war closed. What we have done in this bill is to cut it to the irreducible minimum. I realize there are many big income-tax payers in Connecticut and in other States who are opposed to any veterans' legislation at all.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. Does the gentleman think that that is a fair statement?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; I think it is. I think that the opposition to this widows and orphans' bill is being inspired from the outside. Two hundred and eighteen Members signed the petition to bring it out, and there were 8 or 10 more waiting to sign it when the two hundred and eighteenth man put his name on the list.

I have been chairman of this committee for 10 years, and I have done my best to hold this legislation within reasonable bounds, but the time has come when we must do something for the widows and the orphans of these veterans, and I do not propose to take all of the criticism from those individuals who oppose veterans' legislation consistently, merely because I happen to be the chairman of the committee. The vote in the committee was unanimous and when it comes to a vote in the House I dare say there will not be a dozen votes against it.

Many of these widows have small children, many of them are on relief; and as I said a while ago, the widow of a veteran who served his country honorably in time of war ought not to have to rear his orphan children on relief.

I cannot understand why the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER] did not object to pensioning Civil War widows who married Civil War veterans 65 years after the Civil War closed. I cannot see why he did not object to the bill granting them pensions of from $40 to $50 a month and at the same time objected to this bill to give these World War widows $20 a month, especially when many of them have little children to care for.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 minutes to make a statement to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

The gentleman made the statement that it was necessary to have a petition to get this legislation to the floor. I want to say to the gentleman that I am one of those who favor this legislation, but I want to say also, as a member of the Rules Committee, that I have no knowledge of the gentleman having made application for a rule for the consideration of this legislation. I yield to the gentleman to answer me.

Mr. RANKIN. I will say to my colleague that I made my application to the chairman of the committee. I realize that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER] is one of the strongest supporters of veterans' legislation in the House.

Mr. COLMER. I thank the gentleman for his statement, but I still want to say, as one who believes in this veterans' legislation, that I think the Rules Committee as a whole should have had an opportunity to pass upon it.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLMER. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. The Rules Committee would have had an opportunity if the chairman had laid it before them, as I supposed he would. I supposed when I wrote the chairman a letter that he would lay it before the Rules Committee.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLMER. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. I am a member of the Rules Committee also, and it is rather disagreeable to be discharged from something that you do not know anything about. This matter was never called to the attention of the Rules Committee.

Mr. COLMER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MICHENER. If the leadership does not call it to the attention of the Rules Committee, then certainly the Rules Committee should not be condemned because they have refused to report out something about which they have heard and know nothing.

Mr. COLMER. I agree with the gentleman from Michigan, an able member of the Rules Committee.

I merely called this matter to the attention of my distinguished friend, the chairman of the Veterans' Committee, because as a member of the Rules Committee I did not like to be placed in the position of being discharged, or asked to sign a petition to discharge my own committee from something that I have never had an opportunity to consider.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

I also wanted to call this matter of filing discharge petitions, before a committee has had a reasonable opportunity to consider the legislation, to the attention of the House. While I realize and appreciate the interest and zeal of my distinguished friend, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN], for veterans' legislation, I nevertheless feel that this is a bad practice of legislating.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COOPER). The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER] may have permission to extend his own remarks and include therein a radio address delivered by him.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

WHITE-PINE BLISTER RUST

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 3406), for forest protection against the white-pine blister rust, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 3, strike out lines 3 to 7, inclusive.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I will ask the gentleman from Mississippi if it is not a fact that this is a bill which passed the House unanimously some time ago?

Mr. DOXEY. It is.

Mr. HOPE. And the Senate amendment merely removes the authorization for an appropriation?

Mr. DOXEY. That is true.

Mr. HOPE. Otherwise there are no changes?

Mr. DOXEY. No changes. The Senate simply struck out section 2, which is the appropriation authorization.

Mr. HOPE. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, I have a special order to address the House for 20 minutes. I ask unanimous consent that that may be vacated and that I may have permission to address the House on Monday next, following the reading of the Journal and the legislative program of the day, for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the previous order of the House, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. THILL] for 15 minutes.

WAR PROPAGANDA AND ALIEN AGENTS

Mr. THILL. Mr. Speaker, during the last few days I have spoken to a number of my colleagues in Congress, and they have expressed real fears that this country might enter into the war now going on in Europe.

Their opinion was that war propaganda would overcome the American desire for peace and neutrality and would induce America to enter the war.

The seriousness of the situation resulting from the dissemination of war propaganda in the United States cannot be overemphasized. Much propaganda material appears in the newspapers; it is heard over the radio; it is mailed to the office and the home; it comes to the desks of Members of Congress every day. How much of this information is false cannot be gaged by the average person. Needless to say, much of this propaganda is a skillful misrepresentation of facts; some of it has an element of deceit in it; some of it is a deliberate statement of untruth, and most of it can be characterized as a vicious and vile fraud upon the American people. Congress should take immediate steps to eradicate this evil.

I have introduced a resolution, House Resolution 410, to appoint a special committee to investigate war propaganda in the United States. The resolution proposes an investigation of, first, the extent, character, and objects of war-propaganda activities in the United States; second, the dissemination, written or oral, from foreign countries or from within this country, of propaganda or news items, radio broadcasts, motion pictures, or other media which are calculated or intended to draw the United States into a foreign war or to create internal strife; third, any and all activities of belligerents, individuals, groups, organizations, or corporations which have for their purpose, direct or indirect, to involve this Nation in war; and fourth, all other questions in relation to war propaganda that would aid Congress in any necessary remedial legislation to protect and preserve the neutrality of the United States and to keep this Nation at peace.

The minds of American citizens are being warped by propaganda which comes from foreign sources in the shape of literature, radio broadcasts, newspaper articles, and platform speeches. No one knows how many agents of warring nations are posing as lecturers and journalists for the principal purpose of shaping American foreign policy. Russia alone has spent millions of dollars in its campaign to spread communism in the United States, thereby infusing false doctrines, creating distrust, and producing a spirit of unrest in this country.

Under an act of Congress approved June 8, 1938, all agents of foreign governments, companies, or individuals are required to register with the State Department and give full information as to their activites. I have before me Publication No. 1370 of the Department of State. This is a pamphlet pertaining to the laws and regulations administered by the Secretary of State governing the registration of agents of foreign principals and the notification of agents of foreign governments.

The act approved June 8, 1938 (52 Stat. 631), entitled "An act to require the registration of certain persons employed by agencies to disseminate propaganda in the United States, and for other purposes," as amended by the act approved August 7, 1939 (Public, No. 319, 76th Cong., 1st sess.), contains this definition:

(d) The term "agent of a foreign principal" means any person who acts or engages or agrees to act as a public-relations counsel, publicity agent, or as agent, servant, representative, or attorney for a foreign principal, and shall include any person who receives compensation from or is under the direction of a foreign principal: Provided, however, That such term shall not include—

(1) A duly accredited diplomatic or consular officer of a foreign government who is so recognized by the Department of State of the United States; nor

(2) Any official of a foreign government recognized by the United States as a government other than a public-relations counsel or publicity agent or a citizen of the United States whose status and the character of whose duties as such official are of record in the Department of State of the United States.

(3) Any member of the staff of or person employed by a duly accredited diplomatic or consular officer of a foreign government. * * *

(4) Any person performing only private, nonpolitical, financial, mercantile, or other activities in furtherance of the bona fide trade or commerce of such foreign principal; nor

(5) Any person engaged only in activities in furtherance of bona fide religious, scholastic, academic, or scientific pursuits or of the fine arts.

Every person who is now an agent of a foreign principal must file with the Secretary of State a registration statement under oath.

Every person who has filed a registration statement must thereafter file a supplemental statement, within 30 days after the expiration of each period of 6 months succeeding the first filing. The original registration statement contains 19 questions which must be answered; there must be indicated the name of the registrant, the status of the registrant, his principal business address, and so forth.

I wrote to the Secretary of State and asked him to supply me with a list of these agents, their names, and their compensation. Under date of March 4 he advised me as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, March 4, 1940.

The Honorable LEWIS D. THILL,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. THILL: I acknowledge the receipt of your letter of February 29, 1940, and, in compliance with your request, transmit herewith a copy of the most recent list available containing the names and addresses of agents of foreign principals who have registered with the Secretary of State pursuant to the terms of the act of June 8, 1938, as amended, requiring the registration of agents of foreign principals.

I regret that the limited facilities of the Department have not been sufficient to enable it to assemble and publish the detailed information contained in the registration statements and supplemental registration statements which have been filed in conformity with the above-mentioned legislation. These documents now number over a thousand.

Information submitted by agents of foreign principals for filing pursuant to the act of June 8, 1938, as amended, becomes, as you know, a matter of public record in accordance with the terms of the act. Should you, therefore, wish to obtain further information of the character described in your letter, I should be glad at any time, upon your request, to arrange to make these files available to anyone you may wish to designate for examination in the Department.

As of possible interest, I am enclosing a copy of the pamphlet, Agents of Foreign Principals and of Foreign Governments, which contains under part I the provisions of law and regulations governing the registration of agents of foreign principals.

Sincerely yours,

CORDELL HULL.

I felt that the information I sought would be worth while for the Members of the House and for the country at large, so I had the registration statements on file with the Secretary of State checked and certain information taken from them.

As of March 19, 1940, there were 363 such agents registered with the Secretary of State. Among those listed is John W. Wheeler-Bennett of the British Library of Information, 51 Rockefeller Plaza, New York, N. Y. It is the purpose of the British Library of Information and John Wheeler-Bennett to spread British propaganda in the United States.

There is also listed the name of Heinz Beller, 17 Battery Place, New York City. His foreign principal is the German Government. He is director of the German Library of Information and as such it is his duty to spread Nazi propaganda in the United States.

There is also listed Emanuel Silverstone, 729 Seventh Avenue, New York City, and Morris Helprin, the same address. These men represent Alexander Korda Film Productions, Ltd., and they supervise the exploitation and distribution of films produced in England. One of the films which they are currently distributing in the United States is entitled "The Lion Has Wings." This is a bold piece of propaganda which presents the English side of the war. The motion picture shows death and destruction of Nazis as a triumphant and exhilarating experience for British fighters.

The theater critic for the Washington Post in an article appearing in the March 7, 1940, issue has this to say about the picture:

Like an H. G. Wells forecast in terrifying reality. The Lion Has Wings is an avowedly propaganda film, at once ugly and fascinating. * * * No matter how much one may wish England to win the war against Hitlerism, this film is a disturbing experience, a grim ultimatum that in wartime intelligence goes on the shelf while life is disorganized for a parade of destruction. Factories turn out death missiles, the triumphs of life becoming the deaths of others. Smiling Englishmen and grim-faced Nazis reflect the disease of civilization. * * *

Noncomparative things are compared. All Nazis goosestep; they have none of the traditional sports of the English. Death, when it comes to the flying English, comes gloriously and off the screen; but the Grim Reaper sends the taut-faced Nazi plummeting earthward in his airplane in full view of the camera.

Another agent listed is John M. Taylor, of San Antonio, Tex. His principal is Nicholas Rodriguez—secret address—head of the Nationalist Party of Mexico. Taylor handles publicity in any form. In the case of Nicholas Rodriguez it is purely revolutionary so far as Mexico is concerned. Rodriguez plans a new Mexican administration, so the registration statement indicates.

Another agent listed with the Department of State is Bookniga, Inc., 255 Fifth Avenue, New York City. Before this organization or corporation would register the Attorney General had to start proceedings against it and an indictment was actually brought against the individuals who ran this corporation, namely Morris Liskin, Raphael Rush, and Norman Weinberg. It was definitely shown that Bookniga, Inc., was an agent of a Russian organization, and that they were distributing and selling communistic propaganda material in this country.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert at this point a list of the agents registered with the Secretary of State, together with the names of the foreign principals, the nature of the agent's business, the compensation, and the agent's nationality.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. THILL]?

There was no objection.

Mr. THILL. Mr. Speaker, the value of placing the foregoing list at the disposal of the American people through the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, lies in the fact that they can now readily check up on foreign propagandists in their own communities, and if they find certain propaganda agents have not registered in accordance with the law, they can report these propagandists to the Attorney General for prosecution. Under date of April 2, 1940, Attorney General Jackson advised me that only eight individuals and companies have been indicted for failing to register, as provided by law. It seems to me that there are many agents of foreign governments who are viciously propagandizing this country, and who have failed to register with the Secretary of State.

The American reading public has been trained to accept as true the information contained in the daily press; as a result the readers of the daily newspapers accept the information contained in the news articles of European war correspondents, as truthful presentations when as a matter of fact the news articles are censored and colored by the nation which permits the release of the articles. The official government news agencies not only disguise and distort the facts, but they are often guilty of preposterous lying. For example, on February 23, 2 days after Russian planes bombed the Swedish city of Pajala, the official Soviet News Agency issued this statement:

Not a single Soviet plane has flown over Pajala.

But on March 5 the Soviet Government had to admit its planes had bombed Pajala. On another occasion, Russia's Molotov stated to the United States Ambassador in Moscow:

The Soviet Government has not bombed cities and will not do so.

Yet the world knows that Soviet planes almost daily bombed the city of Helsinki and Finnish civilians.

Propaganda was one of the main avenues for developing a war attitude in the minds of the American people from 1914 to 1917. Today the masses are more subject to direct appeal than in 1914, because of the radio. The fact that Americans listen to the radio every day has brought in a new style of war propaganda. The war is discussed on short wave international hook-ups. Germany is particularly active in presenting such propaganda broadcasts. Americans are supposed to listen to the fictional characters of Schmidt and Smith, a German and an Englishman who meet and chat via the short waves over their coffee cups in a Swiss hotel. A similar pair are Johnny and Jimmy, "Canadians," who pronounce the typical colonist's point of view. Another dialog goes on between Fritz and Fred, the "friendly quarrelers." The arguments invariably are won by the German point of view. In this connection I might mention what Hitler states on the subject of war propaganda in his book Mein Kampf. Says Hitler:

It is the task of propaganda not, for instance, to assay the various causes but to emphasize exclusively the one cause it represents. * * * Propaganda must limit itself to saying a very little, and this little, it must keep forever repeating.

British propaganda prior to the last World War was amazing in its methods and in the effect it produced. I have before me Harper's magazine for March 1918. It contains an article entitled, "The United States and the War." This article was written by the Right Honorable Sir Gilbert Parker, and he brazenly reveals that he became responsible for American publicity practically since the day when war broke out between England and the central powers. The scope of his department was very extensive, and its activities covered a wide range. Let me quote his own words, as follows:

Among the activities was a weekly report to the British Cabinet on the state of American opinion, and constant touch with the permanent correspondents of American newspapers in England. I also frequently arranged for important public men in England to act for us by interviews in American newspapers; and among these distinguished people were Mr. Lloyd George (the present Prime Minister), Viscount Grey, Mr. Balfour, Mr. Bonar Law, the Archbishop of Canterbury, Sir Edward Carson, Lord Robert Cecil, Mr. Walter Runciman (the Lord Chancelor), Mr. Austin Chamberlain, Lord Cromer, Will Crooks, Lord Curzon, Lord Gladstone, Lord Haldane, Mr. Henry James, Mr. John Redmond, Mr. Selfridge, Mr. Zangwill, Mrs. Humphrey Ward, and fully a hundred others.

Among other things, we supplied 360 newspapers in the smaller States of the United States with an English newspaper, which gives a weekly review and comment on the affairs of the war. We established connection with the man in the street through cinema pictures of the army and navy, as well as through interviews, articles, pamphlets, etc., and by letters in reply to individual American critics, which were printed in the chief newspapers of the State in which they lived, and were copied in newspapers of other and neighboring States. We advised and stimulated many people to write articles; we utilized the friendly services and assistance of confidential friends; we had reports from important Americans constantly, and established association by personal correspondence with influential and eminent people of every profession in the United States, beginning with university and college presidents, professors, and scientific men and running through all the ranges of the population. We asked our friends and correspondents to arrange for speeches, debates, and lectures by American citizens but we did not encourage Britishers to go to America and preach the doctrine of entrance into the war. Besides an immense private correspondence with individuals, we had our documents and literature sent to great numbers of public libraries, Y. M. C. A. societies, universities, colleges, historical societies, clubs, and newspapers.

These are the methods used 20 to 25 years ago to get the United States into war. Similar methods are being used today, and we can see them at work all around us. Sometimes officials of foreign governments speak out of turn, as did the attorney general of Ontario, just recently. He stated that it was Canada's duty to do everything within her power to enlist the active support of the United States in the cause of the Allies. What sort of a good-neighbor policy is that? Are we good neighbors only if they can use us? Nothing seems more important to some foreigners than to get the United States into war. How much help do they want? Let me quote Attorney General Conant's exact words:

With their vast resources and materials and men and their industrial capacity added to those of the Allies, there could be no question as to the outcome.

Get those words, "and men." They want not only our resources and our materials, not only cash and carry, not only credit, not only bombing planes, but they also want our boys to fight across the seas on foreign battlefields.

In speaking about his dear friend James Cromwell, our present minister to Canada, the Ontario attorney general said:

Let us hope that Mr. Cromwell did express the sentiments of the great majority of the people of the United States of America.

He referred, of course, to the speech Cromwell made in behalf of the Allied cause. Then the attorney general continues:

But let us also hope that action, and not merely professions of faith, will follow.

Get that. He wants action. Does not that mean soldiers, as quickly as possible? He wants us to get into the war to fight their battles.

Every type of propaganda is being used to get us into war. Falsehood is being deliberately used to get this Nation involved in the conflict abroad, just as every belligerent uses falsehood as a weapon of warfare to deceive its own people, to curry the favor of the neutrals, and to misinform the enemy. Foreign propaganda agents are using our freedom of the press and of speech for a purpose which may result in destruction of our form of government. They are trying to entangle us in a conflict that would force a dictatorship upon America. Let us avoid a repetition of the mistake we made in 1914–17, when we listened to the siren voice of paid war propagandists. We must vigorously uncover the artful deceit of these foreign agents; we must expose their falsehoods to the light of truth, because we want no part of war and its hateful consequences. We must fight with all our hearts to remain neutral and at peace.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order, the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS] is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] has introduced today a resolution which would provide for the purchase, by the United States, of Greenland. As Greenland is a Danish possession and as Denmark is not a sovereign state at the present time, I do not see how this purchase could be negotiated, as Germany is now occupying Denmark. Any negotiations would have to take place with the leaders of Nazi Germany and certainly this would be most unsatisfactory.

Mr. Speaker, I firmly believe that the United States should act, however, for our own protection, and that a protectorate should be declared over Greenland on behalf of the Danish people, on behalf of the 15,000 white people who are in Greenland at the present time, and the 12,000 Eskimos who also live in Greenland. When peace is restored in Europe and Denmark regains her sovereignty I shall be in accord with a purchase plan because I believe, without qualification, that Greenland should belong to the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes tomorrow after the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, and at the conclusion of legislative business in order for the day and after any special orders heretofore entered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under special order heretofore entered, the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, in view of the lateness of the hour, I ask unanimous consent that the special order granting me permission to address the House at this time be vacated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, APRIL 19, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Heavenly Father, at early dawn, as we look toward the east, we know that the morning is coming, that the light is advancing, and that ere long the sun will pour forth its light and fullness. O Sun of Righteousness, send out Thy light, that we may perceive the fading of the night and the coming of the day. We yearn with deep desire to be Thy children with the morning promise and hope and with the right attitude toward God and man. It is blessed to live, but it is more blessed to live well, for our works do follow us. Through the future years, when foundations will have crumbled, the influences sent forth from this Chamber will be part of the great pattern of the world's history. Oh, may our ambition ever be to serve our country and conform our wills to Thy holy purpose. Grant that we may walk humbly and patiently before men and be filled with the spirit of the Master, giving it increasing strength day by day, and Thine shall be the praise. In the name of our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4929) to amend the act of June 23, 1938 (52 Stat. 944), submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed on by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report:

On amendment No. 1: Restores the language of the House providing that the Commander in Chief of the United States Fleet may not serve on the selection boards for the selection of officers.

On amendment No. 2: Restores the language of the House which provides in effect that medical records, along with the other official records of officers, will be furnished to the selection board for its consideration in the selection of officers.

On amendment No. 3: Modifies the amendment of the Senate to permit the retention of officers assigned to engineering duty only or aeronautical engineering duty only in addition to those representing the percentage furnished the board by the Secretary of the Navy.

On amendment No. 4: Modifies House language to provide that recommendations of selection boards in the case of officers assigned to engineering duty only and aeronautical engineering duty only shall be based upon their comparative fitness for the duties prescribed for them by law. Makes all such officers, upon promotion, additional numbers in grade. Prohibits officers assigned to engineering duty only or to aeronautical engineering duty only from succeeding to command on shore unless designated to do so by the Secretary of the Navy.

On amendment No. 5: Strikes out the House provision to require the reports of the selection board to include a statement giving reasons actuating the selection of every officer recommended for selection and the reasons for passing over those officers not recommended.

On amendment No. 6: Strikes out the House provision to provide that officers selected as best fitted shall, when promoted, take their place in the next higher grade in accordance with the place they held when they were originally commissioned in the Navy. This House provision made no provision for the promotion of officers adjudged as fitted for promotion.

On amendment No. 7: Modifies the House provision for retaining all fitted officers on active duty until June 30, 1944, to provide that only wartime aviators who were commissioned under the act of June 4, 1920, and who are now assigned to duty involving flying shall be retained on active duty until June 30, 1944. Other officers of the fitted group may be retained under existing law if their services are needed. This amendment inserts the language of the Senate providing that commanders who were on June 1, 1939, or who may hereafter be placed on the retired list pursuant to section 12 (f) of the act of June 23, 1938, and who have not completed 2 years of commissioned service shall receive the retired pay of a commander with 23 years' service.

On amendment No. 8: Modifies the language of the House to authorize the President to recall to or retain on active duty not more than two officers of the retired list above the grade of captain. Such officers, while on active duty, to have the highest rank held by them before retirement and to receive the highest pay and allowances they received before retirement.

On amendment No. 9: Strikes out the House provision which provision would have prevented the counting of temporary and Reserve commissioned service for retirement purposes.

On amendment No. 10: Restores the House provision which requires that a sufficient number of officers of the Navy of the grade of rear admiral be designated each year for retirement in order to maintain an average of nine vacancies annually in that grade. Under existing law an average annual number of eight such vacancies must be maintained.

On amendment No. 11: Strikes out the proposal of the Senate to repeal existing law requiring a specified average number of annual vacancies in the grade of rear admiral in the Navy and in the grade of general officers of the line of the Marine Corps.

On amendment No. 12: Eliminates from the bill language which would require selection boards to be convened for the purpose of designating rear admirals of the junior half of that grade for retention on active service. The provision in existing law, as amended, accomplishes this purpose by providing for the designation of officers in this grade for retirement. Existing law is preferred to the proposal contained in this amendment.

On amendment No. 13: Strikes out language inserted by the Senate which would make void the action of any boards convened pursuant to the act of June 23, 1938, for the purpose of designating flag officers of the Navy and general officers of the Marine Corps for retirement to maintain an average number of annual vacancies, and substitutes therefor language which would grant to any officer who has been so designated for retirement the retired pay of a rear admiral of the upper half.

On amendment No. 14: Inserts language proposed by the Senate directing the Secretary of the Navy to appoint a board of officers to investigate and report upon the question of promotion and retirement of officers of the staff corps of the Navy and officers assigned to engineering duty only and aeronautical engineering duty only. It requires the Secretary of the Navy to transmit the report of this Board to Congress in January 1941.

CARL VINSON.
P. H. DREWRY.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, the conferees are unanimous in this report. Unless there is some question that some Member desires to ask, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

CROP INSURANCE FOR COTTON

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill 2635 and consider it in Committee of the Whole instead of H. R. 6972, to amend the Federal Crop Insurance Act of 1938. This bill is identical with the House bill, except that the word "tobacco" is included in the Senate bill. We propose to offer an amendment to take that out.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object to have the gentleman explain the matter.

Mr. FULMER. The Senate bill is the same as the House bill, except that the Senate included tobacco with cotton. We propose simply to put cotton in with wheat under the insurance plan. We want to substitute the Senate bill, with the understanding that we will offer an amendment to take out tobacco, because the tobacco people do not ask for it.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 6972, with Mr. DUNCAN in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. DOXEY].

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Chairman, in opening the discussion today on this amendment to the present crop-insurance law. I want to say that within the limited time we have for debate it will not be my purpose to go into detail and endeavor to analyze the bill at the present time. A number of our colleagues have already spoken upon the measure and they discussed it in detail several days ago. However, it will be my purpose at this time to give the members of this committee a little background as to the history of this legislation, which possibly some of you do not know.

Congress was called into special session by President Roosevelt November 15, 1937, for the purpose of enacting general farm legislation.

From that date on, the Committee on Agriculture of both the House and the Senate were in constant session until the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 was passed and signed by the President on February 16, 1938.

The House passed the bill December 10, 1937. The Senate passed the bill December 17, 1937. It was sent to conference on December 18, 1937.

The conferees on the part of the House were Marvin Jones, of Texas; H. P. Fulmer, of South Carolina; Wall Doxey, of Mississippi; Clifford R. Hope, of Kansas; and J. Roland Kinzer, of Pennsylvania. The conferees on the part of the Senate were E. D. Smith, of South Carolina; George McGill, of Kansas; J. H. Bankhead, of Alabama; Carl A. Hatch, of New Mexico; J. P. Pope, of Idaho; Lynn J. Frazier, of North Dakota; and Arthur Capper, of Kansas.

The conference committee worked during the Christmas holidays of 1937 and submitted to Congress their conference report on H. R. 8505—the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938—on Monday, February 7, 1938.

The conference report was approved by the House on February 9, 1938, and was approved by the Senate on February 14, 1938.

The members of this conference committee worked many days; yea, even weeks on this measure. Many differences between the House and the Senate had to be ironed out and adjusted.

One of the items in this constructive and far-reaching farm program was the question of crop insurance.

The agricultural adjustment bill, as it passed the House, did not contain any provision for crop insurance, but when the Senate passed the agricultural adjustment bill it included a provision for crop insurance on wheat.

When the conferees of both the House and the Senate began to consider the bill, quite a bit of consideration was devoted to the question of crop insurance.

The conferees determined to make the farm legislation as broad and inclusive as possible. They wanted to do as much as they could for the national welfare and the general welfare in particular of the American farmer.

Therefore, after much consideration and long study, title V, known as the Federal Crop Insurance Act, was made a part of the farm conference report that afterward became a law and was known as the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938.

I was one of the members of this conference committee who insisted and urged that cotton be included along with wheat in the crop-insurance provisions, because there was pending at that time before the House Committee on Agriculture a bill by the distinguished chairman of the committee, Mr. JONES, and also one by our distinguished friend the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FULMER], with reference to crop insurance. Those bills that were then before the House Agriculture Committee included both wheat and cotton. Naturally, therefore, the House conferees said, "If you are going to have any crop-insurance plan, we feel that cotton should be included." That was the problem with which we were faced with reference to crop insurance in conference.

In our conference, however, it was argued, and the facts disclosed that at that time there were not sufficient data available as to cotton to include cotton in the insurance plan.

It was agreed by all conferees that the insurance plan was novel and was just an experiment on the part of the Government.

Finally, after due deliberation, it was agreed in conference to try out the insurance plan on just the one commodity—wheat—and that just as soon as the proper data were available as to cotton it would be the next agricultural commodity to be included in the insurance provisions.

That was the understanding among the conferees. It amounted to a "gentlemen's agreement," in my opinion. I believe the other members of the conference committee will agree with me in that view. Senators Pope and McGill, who were both very much interested in this provision, and were members of the conference committee, are not now Members of the Senate, but if they were I feel sure they would both verify my statement in this regard.

In fact, we then and we hope now to expand this crop-insurance feature to other agricultural commodities. We do not expect to confine it just to wheat and cotton but to fruits, vegetables, and other crops if and when the necessary data are available and the facts and circumstances justify it.

That was clearly the intention of the conferees, for we provided in our conference report, under the title Investigation for Crop Insurance, that—

> There is authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary of Agriculture the sum of $150,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary until such study is completed, for making a study of a feasible and practicable plan of crop insurance for fruits, vegetables, and all other crops. The Secretary is directed, as soon as he has completed such study or has sufficient information available to justify a report, to report his findings and recommendations with respect to such plan or plans to the Congress at the earliest practicable date.

As a result, we have a marvelous store of information in this regard given us by the Department of Agriculture in a document known as House Document No. 277, Seventy-sixth Congress, first session, A Suggested Plan for Cotton Crop Insurance.

However, not having the data with regard to cotton available at the time the conferees were considering the crop-insurance feature of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, the conferees agreed that the crop-insurance feature of the bill would at that time be made applicable only to wheat for the year 1939 and see how it worked.

Consequently, we set up the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation and authorized an appropriation of $6,000,000 for the crop-insurance program pertaining to wheat, knowing that the administration of the program for the first year or two would necessarily require a greater outlay of expenditure by the Government than in later years, as we had to set up a system and get it to functioning properly. That wheat-crop insurance program has been in effect now on the wheat crop of 1939.

In the limited time that I have at my disposal I will not attempt to analyze or discuss the provisions of this present bill in detail. It has been discussed by some of my colleagues and explained generally.

However, we all agree that the time has arrived for us to enact legislation, including cotton, in the general crop-insurance plan.

I appeared before the Rules Committee of the House and asked that a rule be given for the consideration of this crop-insurance bill, stating at the time that I certainly would be most happy to advocate the inclusion of other agricultural commodities in this general crop-insurance plan if and when the proper data is presented to Congress regarding them and the facts and circumstances justify the inclusion of any other specific agricultural commodity.

We all realize that from the inception of this crop-insurance program it was to be regarded as a large-scale program in protecting farmers from unavoidable crop losses. This proposed legislation insures only against losses in production. It has nothing to do with insuring as to prices of agricultural commodities.

This crop-insurance plan has been studied for a long while. Much research work has been done in regard to it. As a result of this extensive work and background, fairly accurate requirements can be established at this time with reference to the two major agricultural commodities, wheat and cotton.

Personally, I feel that the program will work out much more satisfactorily with reference to cotton than it has with reference to wheat.

I base this opinion on the fact that throughout the cotton-producing areas there are not as many complete crop failures as there are, generally speaking, throughout the wheat-producing areas.

The history with reference to cotton pertaining to States, counties, and even farms is complete to a marked degree. The general average production over a period of years is firmly established, and I have no doubt but what the insurance principle can be successfully applied to the cotton crop.

Naturally, any Government insurance plan, whether it relates to wheat, cotton, or any other agricultural commodity, has to grow. From a practical standpoint we all know that for the first year or two there will necessarily be more administrative expenses than there will be after the system begins to properly function.

Furthermore, there will be fewer applications the first few years than there will be in after years as the program develops and gets on a substantial basis.

I will not attempt here to discuss how this law has worked with reference to the 1939 wheat crop insurance program. You gentlemen from the wheat sections are generally familiar with the growing popularity of this program among the wheat growers of this Nation.

Coming from a cotton section as I do, I feel that the crop-insurance plan for cotton should be included as a part of our general farm program.

As I have often said on the floor of this House, there is no one single piece of legislation that is going to solve the cotton farmer's problem. We have to approach and attack these many farm problems from many angles. However, I feel that this crop-insurance plan would provide for the cotton farmer a better distribution of income from year to year and would alleviate some of the hardships brought about by periodical crop failures.

Our cotton crop is financed largely through credit means, and when a farmer has a cotton-crop failure he not only experiences a reduction in his cash income but the cotton farmer of the South necessarily has to carry over his debts and incur other obligations that he cannot meet even if he has a good crop the next year.

However, with this plan of crop insurance in operation for the cotton farmer, if he took out Government crop insurance, which, of course, is purely voluntary, and then experienced a crop failure, he would be reimbursed either on the 75 or 50 percent average yield per acre planted on his cotton farm, which would give him enough money to certainly help him with his living expenses and keep him from having to seek more credit elsewhere.

My colleagues full well realize that many a farmer seeks to be and is placed on the relief rolls because he has had a crop failure. However, if Government crop insurance is available and he has taken advantage of it, he will not have to seek the relief rolls. Therefore, to my mind, this crop-insurance plan should certainly reduce the Government relief rolls in areas that have suffered and will suffer in the future from either partial or total crop failures.

This crop-insurance plan also provides or at least approaches what has been termed an "ever-normal granary." The wheat and the cotton paid to the Government by the farmer as premiums are stored by the Government and repaid in kind to those who suffer losses. Of course, where the insured requests cash, he is paid cash, and the Government has a right to sell a sufficient amount of the commodity collected as premium to take care of the cash outlay paid in losses. I feel that this plan can be made to work with reference to cotton.

Take the 10 counties that compose the Second Congressional District of Mississippi that I have the honor to represent in Congress. They are all cotton-producing counties and the following table has been worked out with regard to these 10 counties in my district to show the tentative county average loss costs for the base period, 1933 to 1938, inclusive, for cotton-crop insurance.

County	Average loss cost for the 6-year base period, 1933–38 [1]
	Lint 75 percent	Lint 50 percent
	Pounds	Pounds
Benton	10.0	0.8
De Soto	8.5	.5
Lafayette	6.2	.5
Marshall	8.9	.6
Panola	7.4	.6
Tallahatchie	9.6	.4
Tate	8.1	.6
Tippah	8.3	.9
Union	9.7	.5
Yalobusha	7.5	1.0

[1] These loss-cost figures for the 6 years, 1933–38, will be adjusted to reflect the loss experience for the 11 years 1928–38 when county yield figures for 1938 become available from the Division of Crop and Livestock Estimates. Minimum premium rates would be established under both the 75- and 50-percent plans.

The base figures show the average premium that would be required to be paid in each county per acre. However, that does not mean that each farm in the same county would pay the same premium. One farmer on his general average, according to the past history of his farm, might be required to pay 10 pounds of lint cotton per acre as premium, whereas another farmer in the same county with a different background and a different cotton history for his farm might be required to pay either a little more or a little less than 10 pounds per acre as premium.

The county committee and those in charge of the program in each county, as well as the State and the Federal Government authorities, all have the cotton history of each county and of each farm within the county. Therefore, if administered like I understand the Department intends to administer it, I feel the cotton-insurance program will mean a great deal to our cotton farmers, who depend on their cotton crop as their major source of cash income.

The bill provides that this program will be administered by the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation and that the State and county committees already established and handling other farm programs would be used in the administration of this cotton crop insurance program.

The premiums are paid by the insured in kind. The insurance reserves are built up out of the premiums so paid. If the insured desired to pay his premiums in cash, that cash would be used and invested in cotton. In other words, the Government is supposed to have on hand at all times either enough of the commodity in kind or the cash on hand to pay the losses.

Claims for the losses could be paid to the farmer by issuing to him a warehouse receipt for a certain amount of cotton or by selling a sufficient amount of cotton from the reserve so built up and paying to the farmer the cash that would be equivalent to the amount of cotton due him as the result of his losses.

Each farm would have a separate coverage per acre and a separate program rate per acre, so, to my mind, it would not be very hard to administer this law equitably and satisfactorily.

The purpose and intent of the law is to have the Government pay the expenses of administration, you might say as a donation to the program, but the losses would be paid out of the reserve built up by the collection of the premiums paid in by the individual farmer.

I feel that this cotton crop insurance plan will meet a real need and prove to be an important and fundamental part of the Federal Government's general farm program. Of course, it is based on risk, chance, and other elements incident to any insurance plan.

It is the intention of Congress that this plan will provide for protection against losses of cottonseed as well as losses of lint cotton.

It necessarily will take time to work out all the details in connection with the program, but the broad principle is that this insurance plan shall apply to all cotton grown in the United States except sea-island cotton.

I trust that all of you who are interested in agriculture will help us pass this proposed legislation, for when we have proved that it works satisfactorily with regard to wheat and cotton we can then extend the program to include other agricultural commodities that some of you are more primarily interested in than you are in wheat and cotton.

This crop-insurance plan will produce and develop closer cooperation among farmers, increase their incomes, promote better farming methods, and enable more farmers to own their farms.

Crop insurance is an important and necessary part of our general farm program, and certainly should be made to include cotton.

The bill that we are now considering provides for the crop insurance to apply to the 1940 cotton crop. However, I am of the opinion that on account of the lateness of the season and the fact that this measure may not be signed by the President until after the 1940 cotton crop is planted, especially in some sections, this bill should be amended so that the insurance plan will apply to the 1941 cotton crop instead of the 1940 crop. I have discussed this with the members of our committee, and I think they agree with me in this regard. Therefore I feel certain a committee amendment to this effect will be offered at the proper time, and I hope it will be approved by this House.

I am sorry my time is up, but there are a number of Members who want to speak on this bill, and the entire time for its consideration is limited. I am sure other Members will explain other features of the bill. I hope there will be no question and no trouble in passing this bill by a great majority. I thank you. [Applause.]

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDRESEN].

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. DOXEY] has told you that there is a great deal of factual information in House Document No. 277 with relation to cotton, and the application of crop insurance to this crop. He is correct. This does not mean, however, that every time a theory is worked out on paper it will work out in actual practice. During the past 7 years we have had many experiences along this line, theories have been worked out on paper, but when they were put into actual practice they turned out to be failures.

I am not opposing insurance for cotton, but I do oppose this legislation at the present time, because when a system is set up for the insuring of cotton or other crops in this country I want to be sure that it will be a sound system which will work for the benefit of the farmers of this country. I do not believe that the Department of Agriculture, in its insurance division—and I am satisfied that no Member of Congress—has definite information to show that the wheat program which has been in operation only a little over a year has been a success. Several private companies have tried to insure crops during the last two decades, three companies in particular. They tried it for 1 year, and went out of business, because it nearly put them out of business.

Mr. GREEN, who inaugurated the crop-insurance plan for wheat, a very able man, did give the committee some of the soundest information it ever had on the subject of trying crop insurance for wheat. It was trying out an experiment, he said, and that it would take a period of 5 to 6 years before we could determine whether that experiment would succeed or fail. We have had 1 full year of crop insurance for wheat. If we were to judge the legislation by what took place last year we would find that the organization lost money; in other words, it lost more than 2,300,000 bushels of wheat in addition to the administrative cost which ran about $4,800,000.

I feel that if we are going to establish the biggest insurance business in the world, which it will be if we start insuring all farm crops—and all farmers are entitled to that coverage, once we start—that we should be perfectly sure we have a sound system based upon experience in actuarial figures submitted to us from what has been observed and tried out in wheat. We have no yardstick to go by when it comes to cotton. It is true a great deal of statistical information has been submitted to us on cotton, but there are 2,000,000 cotton farmers in this country. Cotton production now will run from 12,000,000 bales to 18,000,000 bales, and you can figure that if 12,000,000 bales of cotton should be insured up to 75 percent of the yield per acre, this in itself would be one of the biggest insurance undertakings in the world. But when you add on the production of 800,000,000 bushels of wheat for insurance, when you add on 2,540,000,000 bushels of corn, and when you add barley, rye, oats, vegetables, fruits, and all other commodities, the organization that would be set up here, if it is not sound will have to be financed by the Federal Government through contributions from the General Treasury.

If we are going to establish a system in the United States to insure crops from all types of losses and injury from pests, then we should be sure that the experiment which has been going on with wheat is a success; that it is self-sustaining and that it will carry itself without cost to the Treasury of the United States. I know the farmers want to be made safe so far as the production of their crops is concerned, because there is no greater hazard than the production of agricultural commodities; but they do not want this to be financed out of the Treasury of the United States. It is true that at the present time the Government stands all administrative expenses and the cost last year run close to $5,000,000. There was a personnel of around 1,500 permanent employees, which has been gradually reduced, but with tens of thousands of men throughout the country who are operating on a per diem when they work, these too are also a part of this organization.

The cotton-insurance amendment which is before us today provides for $6,000,000 of administrative expense for next year, which means that several hundred additional employees will be added to the insurance organization in addition to putting the county and township committees to work in the cotton areas of the South who will also receive $4 or $5 a day for going out to measure up the land and assist in the administration of the act. The extension of this program to cotton will build up an additional bureaucratic organization in the Nation's Capital and in the country.

As far as I am concerned, I am not ready to support a measure of this kind until I am satisfied that the experiment on wheat will work out without any cost to the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. PACE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. PACE. Does the gentleman propose to repeal the wheat-crop insurance program?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I am not proposing to repeal the wheat-crop insurance, no; nor did I so state. The gentleman knows that as soon as the wheat-crop insurance program has proven to be successful I will vote to put all commodities into an insurance program.

Mr. PACE. The gentleman would want to respect any agreement between the conferees on the part of the House and the Senate with respect to including cotton, would he not?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I do not feel that I am bound by any agreement of which I am not aware. I have talked with some of the conferees on my side of the aisle with reference to whether or not there was an agreement, and I am told that they know nothing of such agreement.

Some of the Members from the cotton area may not know how much this is going to cost the cotton farmers as far as insurance premiums are concerned. I spent several hours with Mr. Smith, who is now in charge of the insurance program, day before yesterday, and he told me that the premiums on cotton would run from 5 to 25 percent of the average production of cotton, which means that in some instances one-quarter of the cotton produced on a particular piece of land will have to be paid as a premium for 75-percent coverage. That seems to me to be a great deal, but, of course, maybe you gentlemen from the cotton section feel that all of the cotton farmers want this program and will go into it. If they do, they will have to pay the premium, and there will be approximately 2,000,000 cotton farmers in it.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. May I ask, when these premiums are assessed against the farmer, in other words, when a crop of growing cotton is insured and the premium collections are made against the cotton acreage, does the farmer deliver cotton in payment of the premium?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. That is part of the program. He has to deliver lint cotton as payment for his premium. But it is not really working out that way. Let me tell you how the premiums are paid on wheat. Ninety percent of the premiums paid on wheat last year were not paid in wheat. They were paid in deductions from the soil-conservation checks by an assignment from the farmer who was to receive that check over to the Insurance Corporation to pay his premium.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I want to see if I understand this matter correctly. Through that machinery of administration, instead of actual lint cotton being delivered in payment for the premium, the buying power of the cotton farmer for consumer goods, which he would have had in his possession through a distribution of the soil-benefit checks, is withheld from him in benefit-payment settlements and goes back to the Insurance Corporation in payment for the premium and the cotton remains in the farmer's hands and moves into the commercial market?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The gentleman is correct. When the insurance corporation gets this money from the A. A. A., then it goes into the market and buys cotton, places that cotton in storage, and I do not know how much storage it will have to pay on the cotton when it is stored in warehouses for a period of 10 or 12 months; but on wheat, for the present year, they have 15,000,000 bushels on hand and in storage, and they are paying a storage charge of 6½ cents a bushel to carry that wheat, or nearly $1,000,000 for storage to carry the premiums for this year's crop.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. I read the other day some place that the Government is paying some concern 25 cents a bale for inspecting and grading 12,000,000 bales of cotton now in storage.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I am not familiar with that, but I would say that is very reasonable.

Mr. KNUTSON. And they found a large part of it is of inferior quality.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I may say to the gentleman from Minnesota who made that interrogation that I believe the record will disclose that the Commodity Credit Corporation has gotten into one of the most fantastic positions that one could imagine in that since we made our barter agreement with England to trade some 600,000 bales of cotton for rubber we find the Government in possession of about 6,750,000 bales or more of cotton. Now we are caught in a web of circumstances wherein the cotton factors are being paid a fantastic sum of money to grade and look into the quality and character and staple of each bale in order to select only 600,000 bales to go to England. I find that out of the first 2,000,000 bales so sampled and checked only approximately 300,000 bales have been selected, and that the department has assumed that the additional cotton must be so graded and checked and that we must burden the Treasury with the expense of doing so; and beyond the 2,000,000-bale limit they proceed without competitive bids for doing the work. To me it is one of the most unusual procedures, and I believe this House should take the necessary action to stop it.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The gentleman will find that a good many fantastic things have been done and are being done today.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. It is my information that out of every six bales that have been graded only one or two have been found to be up to specifications.

Mr. CRAWFORD. British standard?

Mr. KNUTSON. British standard, yes; in other words, we are allowing them to come out on the good cotton and they leave us with all the shoddy.

Mr. CRAWFORD. May I answer that?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Let me finish this. I will see that the gentleman gets a little time.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The reason I wanted to stress this point is that cotton is now held by the Federal Government and every taxpayer in the Federal Government and every Member of Congress is today concerned about cotton whether he wants to be or not. We pulled this Government-owned cotton out of the warehouse monopoly some few months ago and cut the carrying charge from about 25 cents per bale per month to approximately 10 to 12½ cents per bale per month. Now, immediately we get it out of the clutches of unreasonable warehousemen, it gets into this sampling racket.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I thank the gentleman for contributing to my speech.

With reference to the wheat situation for last year, there were 166,000 policies written covering wheat, and, mind you, there are better than 3,000,000 wheat growers in the United States. The cost of writing these individual policies last year was around $28 a policy.

This year there are 378,519 insurance policies, and they have been written at a cost of approximately $10 a contract. The total coverage of wheat insured this year is 106,266,000 bushels. From the April 1 crop estimates furnished by the Department of Agriculture it appears that we will have at least a 25-percent loss in the production of winter wheat throughout the Southwest. A large number of policies on wheat have been written in the Southwest. If this 25-percent loss occurs, it means that it will cost the Insurance Corporation, in addition to the 15,000,000 bushels of premiums collected, at least another 10,000,000 bushels to pay a 75-percent coverage on the wheat insured; and that is all it does—it covers from 50 to 75 percent of the average normal production of the wheat grown on any particular farm.

As I said, we have around 3,000,000 wheat farmers in the United States, which means that there are 3,000,000 different insurance rates for wheat farmers because there is a different rate for every farm in this country. When we get 2,000,000 cotton farmers into the picture, we will have 2,000,000 different rates to insure the cotton farmers of the United States. I am not objecting so much to that, but what I do want to point out is that until this program has been tried on wheat over a period of years no accurate determination can be made by the Department or the Corporation in charge of the administration of the insurance law or by Congress as to the success of the plan. If we are to set up a sound insurance corporation—one that will finally and eventually cover all farm commodities—we must act on sound actuarial experience rather than be motivated by our political aspirations in order to try to satisfy some section of the country.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 additional minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentlewoman from Illinois.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. I should like to know from what time the crop is insured. Is it true, as has been rumored, that it is insured from the time the seed goes into the ground?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. It is insured before the seed goes into the ground. No policy is written after the seed is put into the ground.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Is it insured against failure of the seed to germinate?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Yes; it is insured against everything except price.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. PACE. I know the gentleman would not intentionally make a misstatement, but he said it is insured against germination. That is expressly prohibited by the language of the act. It is not insured as to germination.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. I should like to know against what it is insured.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I may say to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE] that Mr. Smith, who is in charge of the Insurance Corporation, told me definitely day before yesterday that the policies are written before the seed goes into the ground.

Mr. PACE. Yes.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. We agree on that; and that it covers crop losses on from 50 to 75 percent of the crop from drought.

Mr. PACE. Will the gentleman let me read the act?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I am sorry, but I have only 1 minute. It covers crop losses from drought, from flood, from destruction from pest, and other causes.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. MILLER. Is there any protection against the so-called moral hazard; anything to prevent the farmer from planting his crop and not taking good care of it?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. There is supposed to be some protection against that, because the county and township committees are to inspect and see that the man puts the seed in the ground that is covered by the insurance in a proper way.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. It seems to me if you are insuring against failure of seeds to germinate, you are likely to be placed in the position of insuring against a man's ability or inability to pick his seed or, in other words, his ability to farm his land.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. There might be instances where a man would fail to put in seed that would germinate, but most of the seed does germinate. Once in a while, probably, it will not; but where the seed has been actually put in the ground, a farmer will be able to recover his insurance if it shows that he has engaged in good husbandry and in good farming practices upon the land that he operates.

Let me again urge upon you, in conclusion, not to break down this entire system by bringing in other groups here before we have completed our experiment. After we have found that that experiment is a success, then we can go to work to take in all agriculture under this scheme, but it should be self-sustaining and should be able to carry its own weight and stand upon its own feet. [Applause.]

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS].

Mr. HOBBS. From a very ancient and very wise Book we learn that the angel Gabriel will some day blow his horn and wind things up. That is the day to which the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota who has just spoken must refer when he says that we should wait for cotton-crop insurance until we know with final certainty exactly how insurance of wheat crops will ultimately pan out. Nothing is certain save death and taxes. Even the weatherman's predictions occasionally fail of fulfillment, and weather is but one of the risks against which all-risk crop insurance insures.

The world runs on faith. You have faith in the mechanism of your automobile, known as the differential, to take you around the next corner, and if you did not you would be a fool to turn.

You have faith in the road builders when you drive down a dark road with a beam of light going out ahead probably 500 feet, and you know within reason that there is going to be a curve within a mile or two, yet you plunge right on at 60 miles an hour because you have faith in the engineers who designed the highway and in the maintenance crews. "Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen," and we live in the enjoyment of that substance; we rely safely on that evidence. Not until the Day of Judgment can you know positively the net result of any farm program.

A colored farmer down in Alabama—and this is a true story—5 weeks before Christmas, made his yearly settlement with his landlord. The cash balance coming to him, $700, he deposited in the savings bank. He came back a week later and asked for his usual advances for Christmas. The landlord said to him, "Why, Charlie, you have more money than I have. You have $700 in the savings bank, and don't owe a dime. Why don't you use some of your own money, and not borrow against your next year's crop at a higher rate of interest than the bank is paying you?" The farmer replied: "Well, captain, you don't understand. You don't think I am fool enough to risk my own money on a cotton crop, does you?" [Laughter.]

There is nothing much more uncertain, and yet from year to year, if we have sufficient spread of risk, it is just as certain as the minute of the death of the average man in this room as figured by the actuaries. Life insurance and every other insurance risk is built upon a spread among hundreds of thousands of policyholders, and they know to the minute when the average man in every group is going to die. That is the foundation of the institution of insurance. The reason that private companies have not made a success of crop insurance is simply because they lack spread of coverage. Insure a sufficient number at adequate premium rates and the success of no other venture is more certain.

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. It is always a pleasure for me to yield to the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. DOXEY. And the further fact that they insured the price. We are not insuring as to price.

Mr. HOBBS. That is right. I thank the gentleman for that contribution.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN], a most estimable gentleman, is thoroughly in favor of crop insurance as a sound, general principle. He will tell you so himself. He simply questions the wisdom of extending crop insurance to cover cotton at this time, before the final net result of our wheat crop-insurance program shall have been proven. Such an argument, if accepted, would prevent cotton crop insurance at any time, or, in other words, forever; for any year, the next year's wheat experience might change the picture.

I accept his challenge. In his own home county, in 1939, there were only 46 policyholders. Forty-six premiums were collected, and the indemnity paid those 46 policyholders exceeded by 2 to 1 the amount of premiums paid. The proof of the pudding is the eating, so, having tasted the sweet benefits of wheat-crop insurance, the number of policyholders in that same county of Goodhue increased from 46 to 513 in 1940. In the State of Minnesota, from which the gentleman hails—and which he so ably represents—in 1939, there were 10,280 policyholders of wheat insurance, but, in 1940, 21,267 have availed themselves of the protection of the Wheat Insurance Act. Therefore it is evident that the wheat farmers of Goodhue County and of Minnesota believe in wheat-crop insurance, think that it is succeeding, and have faith that it will be increasingly successful as the spread of coverage is extended.

The whole Wheat Belt agrees with Minnesota. In 1939 only 166,000 wheat farmers took wheat-crop insurance. In 1940 some 400,000 did.

Doubtless this increasing spread of coverage will continue and enable us to run the wheat-crop-insurance venture on a 10-year basis of calculation without loss to the Government.

It was amusing to hear the able gentleman from Minnesota fall into a confession of faith. He said it looks as if there will be a 25-percent loss on winter wheat. How dare you, sir, to speculate on the future? How can you argue from an unproved assumption?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. Certainly, at any time.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. In making that statement I referred to the crop report of April 1, as issued by the Department of Agriculture and that reported a net loss of approximately 25 percent in the winter-wheat area, and if that is sustained in the final production, then the insurance corporation will have to bear a large percentage of that loss, which is quite apparent.

Mr. HOBBS. I have only to say that the crop report is merely an estimate. The estimators may have good reason for the faith that is in them, but you decry faith.

The passage of this bill will not put the Government into competition with any private business. There is no private business operating in this field. Nor is there desire on the part of private business to again enter it.

If over a 10-year period, without cost to the Government, cotton crop insurance may operate to enhance purchasing power and to stabilize income of 2,000,000 citizens in the lowest income brackets, how dare we deny such benefits to them and through them to the national economy?

We who favor this measure have faith by reason of the known facts of wheat crop insurance, the known facts of human nature, and of the institution of insurance in other fields, that such results may be assuredly expected. Let no doubting Thomases thwart this righteous and reasonable purpose.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON].

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN], who spoke in opposition to this bill, were consistent, it strikes me in all fairness he should have introduced and promoted a bill repealing existing law with respect to crop insurance on wheat. I think it is a fair statement to say that all the arguments submitted by the gentleman in opposition to the extension of this program to cotton are applicable to the wheat program. It is easy to find fault, it is easy to criticize, but in all fairness, if the crop insurance is not a good program, I believe that the gentleman from Minnesota, a ranking member of the minority on the Committee on Agriculture, should submit a better program, one more constructive.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. In just a moment. Congress has given much consideration to the matter of insurance in connection with crops. During the Coolidge and during the Hoover administrations there were rather extensive hearings with respect to insurance against price decline, and I remind the gentleman that the Agricultural Marketing Act of June 15, 1929, contained a provision authorizing the Federal Farm Board to initiate an insurance program, upon the application of the cooperative associations, against price decline. I promoted that feature of the legislation and personally I think that the Federal Farm Board would have done better if it had authorized that program. The pending bill has passed the Senate. Its purpose is to extend the crop-insurance program to cotton. The President of the United States in submitting this matter to the Congress in 1937 stated that the experience with respect to wheat was to be used as a backlog in extending this program to other crops when desired by farmers. I have read the hearings on the pending bill. I am sure that the administration's program has sustained a loss for the first year, but it must be kept in mind that this crop-insurance program is a pioneering one. I think the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation has done a good job. They have collected statistics and information that should be useful not only in extending this program to cotton but to other crops. It strikes me that the data, the factual data with respect to crop risks, the fact that they do not undertake to insure full crops, that they merely insure 75 percent production, and the further fact that they can profit by experience in wheat, should be of benefit in the administration of the pending program. There are hazards that confront the farmer that do not confront the manufacturer.

Probably 60 percent of the factors that enter into farming are the weather, insects, and matters beyond the control of the farmers. There is a definite problem. The Congress of the United States in 1938 undertook to solve that problem by eliminating the distress that would follow the failure of crops, in providing for insurance on wheat, with a very definite understanding and with the expressed intent of extending those provisions to cotton and other crops as soon as reports could be made and studies submitted to Congress.

I submit that it is not a good reason for denying this extension to cotton, that other crops have not been studied, and that reports and factual data on other crops have not been submitted. I believe if this program is extended to cotton and reports and factual information are later submitted covering other crops, crop insurance could and should be extended to other commodities [Applause.]

I extend my remarks to quote the President of the United States in his letter transmitting the report of the committee on crop insurance in 1937:

> I believe that legislation should authorize the application of similar programs to other commodities when it is established that producers desire them, and the application of the plan to wheat is to provide the backlog of experience in applying the principles of crop insurance.

The Federal Crop Insurance Act of 1938, as amended, is limited to wheat. It was intended to utilize the experience in wheat so as to extend crop insurance to other crops. Studies were made and a suggested plan for cotton-crop insurance was submitted to Congress on May 2, 1939, and published as House Document 277, Seventy-sixth Congress, first session. A similar bill passed the Senate on July 19, 1939, and hearings were conducted by the House Committee on Agriculture in July 1939. The committee has approved the pending bill. It is now in order, therefore, to extend the benefits of crop insurance to cotton.

COST OF ADMINISTRATION

It has been stated that the costs of administration were almost as large as the value of the wheat paid in kind as insurance. Those who make this criticism overlook the fact that crop insurance is a pioneering undertaking. There is no crop insurance by private companies against production hazards. There are no all-risk crop policies by private companies available. Hail insurance is available, but the costs are really prohibitive.

Again, it was essential that an organization be set up the first year. Factual studies had to be made; data had to be assembled. The ground work for a sound program had to be done. There is a loss for the first year's operation. Such has been the case with many insurance companies. Profits do not obtain every year. Some years are good and some years are bad. Again, some insurance companies succeed and others fail. The failures, however, are not an argument against the soundness of the principle. It is better for the Government to have made an adequate appropriation and laid a broad and solid foundation for the first year of the wheat program than to have made inadequate provisions.

WHEAT INSURANCE

The hearings disclose that the operations in wheat have been fairly satisfactory. On the whole, the program has been successful. Many more wheat growers will utilize the program in 1940 than took advantage of it in 1939. Enough experience has been obtained and enough data accumulated to warrant the extension of the program to cotton.

THE PROGRAM

The program was designed to meet the problems of all-crop insurance. Provision is made for the measurement of risks, for the avoidance of price insurance, for the elimination of hazards by limiting the insurance to 75 percent of the average crop, to the proper selection of risks, and to the limitation of insurance only to seeded crops. Additional provisions are made for perfecting organization, and provisions are made for the payment of premiums in kind or the cash equivalent.

Only those cooperating with the agricultural-adjustment program can obtain crop insurance. Good-farming practices should obtain, and they will be promoted by compliance with the program.

It was to be expected that pioneering would be expensive. The experience obtained should be valuable not only for wheat but for other crops. The extensive researches that have been conducted should result in the accumulation of actuarial data for the application of cotton, corn, and other crops. I personally would like to see the administration obtain the best actuarial and insurance talent available. If the cotton and wheat programs fail, it means that other crop insurance will not be adopted.

Already improvements have been made as a result of experience. New methods of measuring risks have been evolved. Yields have been established for each farm, and rates have been made for established insurable yields and premium rates. It was fortunate that the Agricultural Adjustment Act was amended to enable farmers to provide for crop-insurance premiums by drawing against payments to be earned under the agricultural-conservation program.

INSURANCE

The farmer insures his home and his barn against fire and tornado. He insures his life. Crops are most uncertain. Insurance in connection with agricultural relief has been considered in hearings on agricultural legislation in Congress for many years. As I have stated, there were extensive hearings covering crop insurance against price decline some 10 or 12 years ago. Insurance against price decline must not be confused with the pending bill which provides for production insurance. The two programs are different. I repeat to emphasize that Congress has made rather thorough investigations respecting insurance. Crop insurance was under consideration, therefore, prior to the adoption of the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

THE PROBLEM

More than 2,000,000 American farmers depend upon cotton for their income. Crop failures are beyond the control of the growers, and these failures result in bankruptcy to producers. Protection against unavoidable production hazards has long been needed.

Crop failures occur annually in all parts of the Cotton Belt. The result is that many farmers are without income. Crop insurance would provide against hazards beyond the control of the farmers. The growers would be enabled to pay their debts despite crop failures.

While crop insurance is not a solution for all of the problems of the farmer, it will make a substantial contribution toward many of the difficulties that confront the farmer.

Weather hazards are a most important factor in growing cotton. Insect pests are the largest single hazard in cotton growing, but droughts, floods, hail, and other disasters beyond the control of the growers are important factors. In the district that I represent there was a strip from 1 to 5 miles wide and approximately 50 miles long where matured cotton crops were practically destroyed in September 1939 by hail. Farmers were unable to pay their debts. It was necessary for the relief agencies to provide for employment and support for the farmers who were dependent upon their crops for their income and for their support.

COTTON NEXT CROP

It was the intention of the Federal Crop Insurance Act that an all-risk insurance program should be tried as an experiment on wheat, and if found successful it would then be extended to other crops. It was understood that cotton would be the second crop to be given consideration.

The farmer cannot definitely control his output as can the manufacturer or the industrialist. He plows and cultivates upon faith. Good husbandry and good farming are essential, but after all the farmer's production is determined by factors over which he has no control, and for which he is in no wise responsible. The uncertainty of production multiplies the farmer's hazards, and contributes to the country's problems. All parts of the country, as well as the Cotton Belt, are interested in the success of cotton growers. There is no better market for the manufacturers of other parts of the country than the Cotton Belt of the South. If the crops of the farmers fail, there are fewer markets for the manufacturers.

For almost a hundred years cotton has been the principal export crop of the United States. It is true there have been declines in recent years, but these declines have not been because of the agricultural adjustment program. High tariff walls and agreements between countries for trade in kind, as well as other causes beyond the control of the United States, have contributed to the decline in cotton exports in recent years. The program for crop insurance on wheat should be extended to cotton. As soon as available reports have been submitted and adequate data furnished, the program should be extended to other crops.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, before somebody reminds me of the fact, I might as well state that I do have within my district several large insurance companies. Hartford County is the insurance center of the United States, and I dare say that possibly half of the Members of this House at one time or another have sent premiums in one form or another to the city of Hartford.

I believe in insurance. I believe in the institution of insurance. I was particularly interested in the remarks of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS], in which he pointed out that last year we had 166,000 risks on wheat insurance; that this year we would have 375,000. His argument was that if we got sufficient spread, then there will not be any such losses. That is certainly true of sound insurance. Spread is important. As the gentleman said, the insurance companies can tell almost to the minute when any given man in any given group will die; but that is because the rates for insurance, the mortality tables, and experience are based on an accurate mathematical formula. If we could get a sound formula for establishing rates on wheat, cotton, and tobacco, or any other crop, then it is true that the greater the spread, the less likelihood there is for loss. But if we are operating on an unsound actuarial basis—and I am not competent to say that we are or are not, because I do not believe we have had the experience—if the actuaries could establish a sound basis, then the old-line companies throughout the country would establish a rate that the farmers could meet, but thus far they have not been able to establish a rate that would be profitable and low enough to attract purchasers.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Three old-line insurance companies did try out insuring crops, and after trying it for 1 year the losses were so tremendous that they discontinued the business.

Mr. MILLER. Private insurance companies do not have the taxpayers to fall back upon.

Mr. HARE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. HARE. In the insurance they were able to establish a correct actuarial basis only after years of experience. They were not able to do so at the beginning. The same thing would apply in crop insurance, whether it be cotton, wheat, tobacco, or any other crop.

Mr. MILLER. I hope the gentleman will not misunderstand me. I believe in insurance. I would like to see private companies work this out. I do say that if it were possible to establish a sound basis, I believe the companies would be glad to write such risks. They are writing in the gentleman's State, I understand. In South Carolina last year the insurance companies wrote $1,825,000 of premium income on hail insurance on tobacco crops alone.

Mr. HARE. The point I was trying to make is that we would not be able to establish a dependable basis for agriculture without some experimentation.

Mr. MILLER. And so far the experience has been disastrous.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. That is the reason why wheat was selected as the commodity upon which the experiment should be made in order to establish the experience.

Mr. HARE. The gentleman is not ready to abandon the idea of insuring wheat, is he?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. No; but I say we should try out that experiment and see whether or not it is sound before we add other commodities.

Mr. MILLER. I just want to add this thought: As I have indicated, the old-line insurance companies would gladly write this business. I take this opportunity to point out that I think there are very few Members who feel unkindly toward these insurance companies, because, after all, the insurance companies of the United States have been a godsend to this country during the past 7 years. The millions and billions of dollars that they have paid into every community on one type of risk or another has acted as a cushion during this period of depression. They have been sound. They have developed carefully. They have tried to establish sound rates; I am unalterably opposed to having the Government go into the insurance business. The Government certainly should not be expected to write unsound risks; risks that no sound company could consider at the premium charged by the Government.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE].

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that any Member who will give serious thought to this subject, including the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN], will seriously contend, assuming that crop insurance is still in the experimental stage, that we get a fair and complete test out of the one crop of wheat. I will tell you why I do not think so. There are several reasons. We do not raise much wheat down in my country. A test on wheat will give us no test of climatic conditions in the cotton regions, nor will it give us a test of excessive moisture, frosts, or insect pests as they relate to cotton. The causes of loss in the crops of cotton and wheat, comparing these two, are shown from data appearing on page 2 of House Document 277, where is given the result of studies of the things that produce a reduction of wheat and the things that produce a reduction in cotton. Let me give you some of the high lights. Six percent of the reduction from a full yield in cotton is caused by excessive moisture, but in the case of wheat excessive moisture causes only 2 percent loss. In the matter of freezing there is but a 1-percent reduction of production in cotton on that account, whereas in wheat the reduction from this cause is 4½ percent. In the case of cotton, reduction in yield is due 18.6 percent to insect infestation, whereas in wheat only 1 percent is due to this cause.

Now, do you as businessmen think the one crop of wheat, which has many things peculiar to itself, could give you a fair test of crop insurance? I do not think the gentleman from Minnesota, upon reflection, will insist upon that position. I am not so selfish as to believe that wheat and cotton would be perfect subjects for this trial, but I do believe sincerely that with wheat representing the great western and northern area and cotton representing the great southern area, these two combined would give us the best test we could find in this Nation, and I think the gentleman will agree with me.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACE. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I thoroughly agree with the gentleman, and what I have said here has not been against cotton, as the gentleman knows.

Mr. PACE. I know; but the gentleman has taken the position that we should try the plan out on wheat for 6 years, let the wheat crop of his State be insured, and then, after possibly he and I some 6 or 8 years from now may not be here, this body would take up for consideration the question whether or not we would include cotton. By that time we would have completed the experiment on wheat, yet there would have been no test whatever on cotton.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I am sure the gentleman will be here not only 6 years from now but 25 years from now, long after I am gone.

Mr. PACE. We never know.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The thing I am concerned about is that when we start out on a comprehensive crop-insurance plan, and when we start to taking in other crops, we want to be sure that we are doing it on a sound and consistent basis.

Mr. PACE. So do I.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. That is all I am trying to get. I want the experience with wheat before we start on something else.

Mr. PACE. Now, if the gentleman will pardon me a minute, let me say that I carry insurance on my home, and I am sure the gentleman carries insurance on his home. Why? Because we can afford to pay the small premium, but we cannot afford the financial loss of our homes. Just the same, the farmer would like to have some assurance that when he plants his seed in the ground he has a reasonable assurance of reaping a crop. We have unemployment insurance today. The Government protects those who lose their jobs. We have the great social-security system providing for those in old age. But you know there is not a farmer in the Nation who is eligible under that program. Everything seems to be all right for everybody until we get to the man who is producing the wealth of this Nation, until we get to the man who is providing the food and fiber to maintain this Nation, but when we get down to him some of you want to leave him without any security or protection.

This program started late in 1939. Its record is not perfect, and therefore, you say, the whole thing must be damned. I do not agree with that at all. I think the farmers of this Nation, unless something is done before long, are going to rise up and punish those who fail or refuse to provide them with the same protection and security which is now being enjoyed by other groups.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACE. I yield.

Mr. HOLMES. The gentleman stated that the Federal Government furnishes unemployed insurance. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that labor and industry pays for it.

Mr. PACE. Yes; and let me say here that every dime of this money comes from a fund created by premiums paid by the farmers—this cotton program. The only expense to the Government at present is the administrative expense, and if I have my way, as soon as the program is definitely worked out, I shall propose that the administrative expense be included in these premiums so it will be on a 100-percent self-sustaining basis.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. PACE. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Does the gentleman mean that Congress has done nothing for the cotton farmers during the past 7 years?

Mr. PACE. No, I certainly do not mean to say that.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I am glad to hear the gentleman say that.

Mr. PACE. But I do say, in response to the gentleman, that I think that the wheat and cotton and other farmers of this Nation are entitled to a 100-cent dollar rather than the 73-cent dollar they are getting paid today. They are entitled to a parity price for their crops; they are entitled to a parity income; they are entitled to the same protection which the manufacturer enjoys; they are entitled to the same security granted other groups; they are entitled to benefits to overcome the burden the tariff places on them. I am sure the Congress has tried to help, but we have not solved the farm problem, and there are many things that need to be done. A parity price and the security of crop insurance are two of those things.

Mr. Chairman, I am including, in my remarks for the RECORD, the following statements prepared for me by the Department of Agriculture, and to which I invite the special attention of the Members:

INFORMATION RELATIVE TO CROP INSURANCE

The idea involved in the plan for all-risk crop insurance is not a new one. Benjamin Franklin suggested it in his day. The Department of Agriculture has conducted surveys and studies relative to such insurance for a quarter of a century, and insurance companies have experimented with the idea in limited areas for brief periods of time.

The failure of insurance companies in their limited attempts to establish such a type of insurance has been due in the main to their lack of reliable data, a proper spread of the risk involved, the necessary administrative set-up for placing such insurance and adjusting losses, together with the fact that they guaranteed the price as well as the yield.

In the summer of 1936, President Roosevelt appointed a special committee which was charged with the responsibility of conducting a proper survey with reference to the feasibility of formulating an all-risk crop-insurance program. That committee later submitted a favorable report, wherein it advised that a program of that nature be established for wheat.

That the issue involved is not a political one is evidenced by the fact that both President Roosevelt and Governor Landon, during the 1936 campaign, expressed themselves as favorable to a plan for all-risk crop insurance. In fact, both the Democratic and Republican platforms contained provisions in support of such insurance. Since that time, other national leaders have espoused the principle involved.

That the idea is not a new one, even in national legislative channels, is evidenced by the fact that several Senators and Congressmen, previous to the time the present law was enacted, had introduced measures suggesting such insurance. Senators Sheppard, McNary, Pope, and Representatives Sinclair, Hope, Fulmer, Sheppard (California), and perhaps others, had sponsored such proposals.

Whereas leading farm organizations may have differed at times in their advocacy of various plans to meet the needs of agriculture and to solve farm problems, they have been, and still are, united in their support of crop insurance. As a matter of fact, such organizations have had an important part in initiating the plans which finally resulted in the formulation of the present crop-insurance program.

All-risk crop insurance is based upon sound and well-established principles of insurance. The premium rates in the present program have been based upon actuarial data which have been carefully assembled, and which are representative of past experience over a definite period of years. Rates so calculated should balance losses over a like period of years in the future.

The crop-insurance program is planned on a national scale, but the rates for each farm are based upon the crop-loss experience of the farm, the experience of the county in which the farm is located, and, to a very limited degree, upon the experience of the counties bordering on the county. As a result, sections of the country where the risks may be low are not required to contribute toward paying for the higher cost of insurance in those sections where the risks may be high.

At the outset, the crop-insurance program was purposely limited to one crop, namely, wheat, to provide a concrete experiment as to the feasibility of such insurance. Profiting by the experience thus gained, substantial improvements have been made in the 1940 insurance program. The rate structure has been materially improved through careful checking of yields and lengthening of the base period. With each passing year it will be possible further to improve all phases of the program.

The present set-up, wherein the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation administers the program jointly with Agricultural Adjustment Administration, affords close contact with the growers in selling the insurance to them, in checking the yields and losses, and in making appraisals. This close cooperation is proving helpful alike to the growers and to those charged with the administration of the act.

The capital stock of the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation is supplied through an authorization of Congress providing for $100,000,000, $20,000,000 of which has been appropriated. Of the latter amount, about $2,000,000 has been used the first year in the payment of losses. Although premiums should equal losses over a longer period of years, differences one way or the other will naturally appear in individual years.

In its 1936 report President Roosevelt's special committee estimated that had crop insurance been in effect in 1930–35, under a 50-percent participation, premiums would have exceeded losses by 70,000,000 bushels the first 3 years, while losses would have exceeded premiums by 68,000,000 bushels the next 3 years. Consequently, it may be noted that present developments are not out of line with expectations expressed at the time the present crop-insurance program was first advocated.

As to the fact that the indemnity payments for the 1939 crop exceeded premiums for that year by approximately 50 percent at a time when the annual production for the Nation was about normal, it should be borne in mind that a normal national yield does not necessarily mean a normal yield in the particular areas participating most heavily in the insurance. That was true in some of the Great Plains States in 1939, where the wheat crop was 11 percent below normal in Nebraska, 24 percent below normal in Kansas, 29 percent below normal in South Dakota, and 18 percent below normal in Texas.

To put it in another way, for 1939, 6,695,771 bushels of wheat have been received in payment of premiums where 9,949,450 bushels have been paid out in losses, a difference of 3,253,679 bushels. In five of the larger wheat-producing States, namely, Kansas, Nebraska, Oklahoma, South Dakota, and Texas, 2,669,003 bushels of wheat have been received in premiums where 6,087,912 bushels have been paid out in losses, a difference of 3,418,909 bushels. Hence, the difference between premiums and losses in those 5 States was 165,230 bushels greater than the difference in premiums and losses for the entire Nation.

Where the drought in certain States was largely responsible for the lack of sufficient premium wheat to meet losses in 1939, other factors have naturally contributed to the result. One such outstanding factor is to be found in the effect which the late closing date, and the privilege of insuring after seeding (now discontinued) had in enabling the grower to insure where the prospect for a crop seemed poor, and to refrain from doing so where the prospect was more favorable later in the season.

Each year will disclose such variations. The extent of the variations will depend upon the percent of participation, the total national yield, and the spread of the losses and their relationship to average yields on participating farms. Then too, as far as the 1939 program is concerned, it should be admitted in all candor that it is humanly impossible to establish a new system of insurance, calculate premium rates, appraise yields and adjust losses, without some attending imperfections at the outset.

Administrative expenses and the cost of storage are paid by the Federal Government, and rightly so, because of the national benefits resulting from the program. While the crop-insurance program affords security to the individual grower and the community wherein he resides, it likewise furnishes benefits to others who are interested in the increased national farm buying power which such security to agriculture affords.

The initial cost of administering an insurance program, where much of the expense involves the cost of establishing such a program, is not to be compared with the cost of its administration after the initial period has passed. That is especially true where an effort is being made to establish such a program in a new field where experience is lacking, where no precedent can be found as a guide, and where the undertaking is largely of a pioneering nature. That, in brief, is the situation as it related to the administration of the Federal crop-insurance program for 1939.

During the first year, in addition to the outlay of necessary funds for the current administration of the crop-insurance program, those charged with its administration found it necessary to expend additional amounts incidental to the organization of a new set-up. That is, those funds which were needed for assembling actuarial data, for acquiring office fixtures and supplies, and for extensive educational purposes. Then, too, they found it desirable to expend other funds in planning the 1940 program, as well as in assembling information relative to other crops.

The experience of both stock and mutual insurance companies will verify the truth of the statement that the sales and operating expenses during the initial period, ranging from 1 to 10 years, has equaled or exceeded the total losses paid for that period. For instance, in case of the farmers' mutual windstorm insurance companies, their expenses over the first 10-year period averaged $1.58 per dollar of losses paid. The Federal Crop Insurance Corporation expended less than that proportionately for that purpose during the first year of its administration of the program.

The Spectator, insurance yearbook for 1939, reveals that for administrative expenses in 1938, out of total receipts from premiums written, 332 stock, fire, and marine insurance companies expended $326,305,985, or 45.31 percent of $720,157,663 received; 41 stock, automobile insurance companies expended $17,506,594, or 28.22 percent of $62,446,832 received; 151 advanced premium mutual fire insurance companies expended $30,205,074, or 34.51 percent of $87,535,817 received; and 5 farm mutual fire-insurance companies expended $1,101,967, or 35.14 percent of $3,135,608 received. In other words, according to this yearbook, these 529 stock and mutual insurance companies engaged in a fire, windstorm, hail, automobile, and other kindred insurance business expended a total of $375,119,620, or 42.98 percent of $872,875,920 received, for administrative expenses in 1938.

Using the same approach for the purpose of a comparison, we find that the estimated expense of administering the 1940 crop-insurance program will be $5,923,200 (amount appropriated for that purpose), or 37.16 percent of $15,938,200 estimated total receipts (appropriation plus estimated receipts from premiums). In arriving at this latter figure, it is estimated that an approximate total of 15,000,000 bushels of wheat will be received in payment of premiums for 1940, with a cash equivalent of $10,015,000 on the basis of wheat prices at the time premiums were paid. On the basis of the present prices of stored premium wheat, the comparative cost of the administration of the program for 1940 would be much lower.

The experience which the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation has gained through administration of the program for the first year and an increase in the volume of business is enabling it to reduce very definitely the administrative cost per policy received. It now seems that such cost for 1940 may be less than one-half of what it was in 1939. Aside from the effect which a material increase in the number of policies has had, improved methods involving simplification of procedure, elimination of duplication, and fewer and more direct contacts, and other like changes have contributed materially toward that result.

That the program has been highly acceptable to wheat growers is evidenced by the fact that, where 166,000 paid-up applications were received in 1939, more than 378,000 such applications have thus far been received for the 1940 program. Increased interest in crop insurance is further evidenced by legislation which has been proposed to extend the program to other crops, especially to cotton, tobacco, corn, fruits, and vegetables.

Although crop insurance does not supply a panacea for all farm ills, the security which it provides has had a definite appeal to farmers in areas affected by crop losses, especially in those Great Plains States, where wheat growers have suffered severe losses in recent years. Such crop conditions have contributed materially toward creating an interest in crop insurance, not only in wheat-growing areas but elsewhere.

In the past the burdens of crop failure have been beyond the resources of the individual grower. In fact, during a 10-year period extending from 1926 to 1936, the Federal Government expended for emergency agricultural relief a total of $600,000,000, and did so largely because of crop failures. The crop-insurance program is materially reducing the need for Federal and State Government relief in wheat areas, and will have a like effect in other areas as soon as the program may be extended to apply thereto.

Because of increased taxes, interest, and debts, as well as greater hazards, at least in some areas, and the uncertainty of markets and effective demand, together with increased overhead, the individual grower is more dependent now upon cash income than he was in the earlier days. Crop insurance definitely assures him of that. While crop insurance would have been helpful even in those earlier days referred to, diversification, rotation, and a limited carry-over for each year largely sufficed to safeguard the growers' farming operations.

A better understanding of the purpose of the program, as well as the benefits to be derived therefrom on the part of the growers themselves, is resulting in closer cooperation on their part. Each grower realizes more clearly each day that better farming will not only assure his eligibility to participate in the program in the future but will aid in increasing the coverage and in reducing the rate for the farm. Being willing to make that contribution himself, he will become increasingly more insistent that other growers do likewise.

Better farming, increased income, cooperation among farmers, sympathetic Government assistance, and the farmers' efficient administration of their own program, locally and in the State, will aid materially in reducing the dangers of farm bankruptcy and land foreclosure, resulting in nonresident land ownership and tenancy. Just as the national farm program, as a whole, is contributing toward that result, it is increasing the possibilities of more farmer-owned and farmer-operated farms in every rural community.

No effort is made here to define technical terms as, for instance, what is meant by "all risk" insurance, "payment in kind," "coverage," "workmanlike manner," or to answer questions like "Who may insure?" "When and where are premiums paid?" "How are rates calculated?" And "Where and how is premium wheat stored?", etc. Such definitions and answers to such questions are contained in FCI–Information Bulletin No. 9, entitled "Questions and Answers on Wheat Crop Insurance."

HOW THE COTTON-CROP-INSURANCE PLAN WOULD HAVE WORKED IN SELECTED COUNTIES IN 1939

A general idea of how the cotton-crop-insurance plan might have operated in selected counties had the insurance been in effect on the 1939 crop may be obtained by assuming that insurance had been written in 1939 on the same representative farms selected at random which were used in developing the actuarial basis for insurance. From available acreage and yield data it was possible to develop average yields and premium rates per acre for insurance on the 1939 crop for the sample farms in accordance with the insurance plan outlined by the Department of Agriculture in the publication entitled "A Suggested Plan for Cotton-Crop Insurance."

Under this plan the average yield for each farm for the base period 1933 to 1938, inclusive, was determined as the average of the yield figures for the farm for these 6 years. These annual yield figures for a substantial proportion of farms in each county are on file in the office of the county agricultural conservation committee. The 6-year average yield was then adjusted by a statistical process in order to reflect the yield on the individual farm for the longer, more representative period of years 1928 to 1938, inclusive. The amount of insurance per acre for the farm under the 75-percent plan would be 75 percent of the adjusted average yield. This figure is commonly referred to as the coverage per acre.

The premium rate per acre was computed for each farm by averaging the loss experience for the farm with the loss experience for the county. The county-loss experience, or loss cost, represents the average of the loss experiences of all sample farms in the county. As in the case of average yields, the loss-experience figures represent 6-year data for individual farms adjusted to the 11-year basis. Thus the premium rate per acre for a farm would be the loss experience (or average loss per planted acre) for the farm for the 6 years, 1933–38, adjusted to reflect the 11-year (1928–38) loss experience, and then averaged with the county loss experience for the same 11 years. Consequently the farm premium rate reflects both the risks that affect the individual farm and those that affect all farms in the county alike.

The premium rate per acre thus developed was applied to the acreage planted to cotton in 1939 on each sample farm to arrive at the total premium that would have been paid for the farm.

In order to determine the loss in yield per acre, if any, that each farm sustained in 1939, the actual yield for each farm in 1939 was compared with the amount of insurance per acre. Had a farm been insured for 200 pounds of lint per acre and the 1939 yield amounted to 150 pounds per acre, then the grower would be entitled to indemnification for 50 pounds per acre, or the cash equivalent thereof, determined from current market prices. In case the farm yielded 200 pounds per acre or more in 1939, then no indemnity for loss would be due.

The five counties in which 1939 yields have been analyzed in this study to determine the extent of crop losses had an insurance program been in effect in 1939 are Lauderdale and Colbert Counties in northwestern Alabama, Marengo County in southwestern Alabama, Chickasaw County in eastern Mississippi, and Washington County in the Mississippi Delta. All of these counties except Washington represent an area in which widespread crop losses occurred in 1939. Cotton yields in the Delta were considerably above the average in 1939 so that the experience in Washington County serves as a contrast to that in the other counties.

A summary of the results that could have been expected in the five selected counties in Alabama and Mississippi had the same farms been insured under the 75-percent plan in 1939 is shown in table 1.

[1] Yield and premium rate figures are based on the plan and the procedure outlined in H. Doc. 277, 76th Cong., 1st sess., entitled "A Suggested Plan for Cotton-Crop Insurance." They represent average figures for sample farms in each county for the years 1933 to 1938, inclusive, adjusted to reflect the experience during the years 1928 to 1938, inclusive. Premium rates shown are for lint coverage, and were not increased to provide additional protection against losses of cottonseed. Actual acreage and yield data for 1939 were obtained for each sample farm.

The average of the yields used as a basis for insurance ranged from 291 pounds of lint in Washington County, Miss., to 159 pounds in Marengo County, Ala. Within the counties the yields showed wider variations between farms, ranging from 485 pounds to 76 pounds in Washington County, and from 287 pounds to 35 pounds in Marengo County. Yields that would be used as the basis for insurance on the 1941 crop would include the 1939 experience and would not be the same as those used for the insurance in 1939.

Premium rates per acre also varied widely between farms, although the premium rate for a farm would be based partly on the variation in yield on the farm and partly on the average variation in yield on sample farms in the county. The county average premium rate per acre was highest in Washington County (14.4 pounds) but was lower in Lauderdale County, Ala. (5.9 pounds), than in Marengo County (8.5 pounds). In Washington County the premium rate per acre for individual farms ranged from 38 pounds to 9 pounds, and in Marengo from 33 to 5 pounds. As in the case of yields, premium rates for insurance in 1941 would include the 1939 experience and might be lower or higher than for 1939. Furthermore, the premium rates used in this study were based on lint coverage and were not increased to provide insurance protection against losses in yields of cottonseed.

A comparison of the premium rates per acre for the country as a whole or for an individual farm does not reflect the cost of insurance in terms of the protection offered, because yield (or coverage) and premium rates per acre are not often directly related to each other. This means that a high-yielding farm may have a low premium rate, or vice versa. Premium rates per acre expressed as a percentage of the coverage affords a better comparison. On this basis the per-acre cost of this "all risk" crop insurance to the average farmer was 9.8 percent in Chickasaw County; 7.1 percent in Marengo County; 6.6 percent of the coverage in Washington County, Miss.; 4.6 percent in Colbert County; and 3.3 percent in Lauderdale County, Ala. Thus the premium rate in terms of protection afforded was highest in Chickasaw County, Miss., and lowest in Lauderdale County, Ala.

The average acreage planted to cotton per farm in 1939 varied from 114.3 acres in Washington County, Miss., to 10.1 acres in Colbert County, Ala. Consequently the total premium per farm amounted on the average to 1,646 pounds of lint in Washington County and 75 pounds for the average grower in Colbert County. In four of five counties shown in table 1, the average premium payment per farm would have been less than a bale of cotton. Even in Washington County the total premium for almost 54 percent of the farms would have amounted to less than 500 pounds of lint. In the other four counties the total premium would have amounted to as much as 500 pounds of lint on only 4 percent of the farms studied. This indicates that the payment of premiums in the cash equivalent or by some means other than in lint cotton would be desirable or necessary in practically all cases.

CROP LOSSES IN 1939

The county average yield per acre in 1939, the percent of all farms studied on which losses would have been sustained had the farms been insured under the 75-percent plan in 1939, and the average loss per insured acre are shown in table 2. The 1939 crop was below 70 percent of the average for the 11 years, 1928–38, in all of the five counties except Washington, Miss. In Colbert, Marengo, and Chickasaw Counties the yield in 1939 was about 55 percent of the 11-year average, and losses were sustained on three-fourths of all farms studied in these counties. The premium rate that would have been paid for insurance in 1939 amounted on the average to 9.7 pounds per acre in these three counties, and the average loss that would have been sustained was 48.1 pounds per insured acre. Thus the average loss per insured acre that would have been sustained in 1939 in these three counties was over five times as large as the premium per acre that farmers would have paid for insurance. It should be kept in mind that the 1939 average yield per acre in each of these counties was lower than for any year during the 11 years, 1928–38. In fact, complete crop failures in 1939 were reported on about 9 percent of the farms studied in these three counties. As in the premiums, the indemnities shown are for lint loss and were not increased to provide for additional indemnification for losses in yields of cottonseed.

TABLE 2.—Average cotton yields, the percentage of farms on which losses would have been sustained had the 1939 crop been insured under the 75-percent plan in selected counties, the average lint loss per insured acre in pounds, and as a percent of the 1939 premium [1]

[1] Based on data for sample farms selected at random in each county. These farms would reflect the county experience in 1939 had they been representative of the farms insured. Indemnities are for lint cotton and were not increased to provide additional indemnification for losses in yields of cottonseed.

The most important single factor contributing to the severe crop losses in this area was excessive rains which began in May and continued into July. Most farmers were only able to cultivate a small portion of their crops. Most of the cotton on bottom land was either washed up, covered up, or drowned out. A few crops were destroyed by hail. Conservative estimates made late in June indicated that the crop could not exceed 40 percent of average.

Washington County, Miss., was included in this study for the purpose of comparing the experience in a county in which very few losses occurred with that in the other counties where losses were common. The county yield in this county in 1939 was 34 percent above the 11-year average, and losses in yield under the 75-percent insurance plan occurred on only 3 percent of the farms studied. The average indemnity per insured acre amounted to only 0.6 pound, or about 4 percent of the county average premium rate per acre that would have been paid in 1939.

If insurance had been written on one-half of the acreage in each of the five counties, the total indemnities collected by farmers would have exceeded the premiums they paid by 3,791 bales, as shown in table 3. In this table the average premium rate per acre and average loss per insured acre for each county were applied to one-half the acreage planted in the county in 1939. The highest loss ratio would have been in Colbert County, where indemnities would have exceeded premiums by 1,434 bales, while the lowest ratio would have occurred in Washington County, where premiums would have exceeded indemnities by 1,583 bales. The similarity between total premiums and total indemnities and the excess of indemnities over premiums in the three Alabama counties is striking.

The accuracy of an estimate of the result of an insurance program in the area represented by this group of counties had the 1939 crop been insured would depend on the extent to which the sample farms represented the farms on which insurance would be written in an insurance program. Moreover, the experience in these 5 counties could hardly be expected to accurately represent the experience in any large area of Alabama or Mississippi. However, four of the counties do represent a section in western Alabama and eastern Mississippi, in which cotton yields were generally lower in 1939 than they had been for a number of years. The other extreme is represented by Washington County, Miss., where yields in 1939 were considerably above the average.

This wide variation in yields between comparatively small areas shows how very low yields causing severe losses even in one section of a State might be offset by high yields and very few losses in another section of the State. It also demonstrates that by a spread of risks over the entire Cotton Belt severe losses in a given area during any year would be offset by fewer losses in other areas, because extreme crop losses over the entire cotton-growing area have never occurred simultaneously.

While crop failures occur every year in one part of the Cotton Belt or another, losses as severe as those in part of Alabama and Mississippi in 1939 are very infrequent in that area. Consequently, growers in the area are not as well prepared to meet financial difficulties brought about by crop failures as those in areas where losses are expected at more frequent intervals. For many farmers in the area the indemnity that would have been received for their 1939 crop loss would have been sufficient to pay premiums on insurance for as many as 10 or 12 succeeding years, provided such severe losses did not reoccur during that period.

"ALL RISK" CROP INSURANCE FOR COTTON

Most cotton farmers have at one time or another seen their crop destroyed or substantially damaged from causes over which they have no control. In view of the fact that cotton has always been a cash crop, produced largely on borrowed money, the loss of a crop brings about financial difficulties not only for the current year but frequently causes increased debt burdens for several additional years.

Crop losses from drought, excessive moisture, flood, hail, etc., cannot be prevented. They occur every year in one part of the Cotton Belt or another. Is there, then, any economically sound method by which farmers can secure protection against such losses? Many of the risks from the standpoint of the individual are eliminated or reduced through insurance in practically every type of business enterprise except farming.

Whether or not insurance against unavoidable production hazards is feasible for crops such as cotton or wheat depends to a substantial degree on (1) the development of a sound actuarial basis by which the risks can be measured; (2) the development of a program that will be attractive to all growers, in order to avoid adverse selection of risks in a county or area and between areas; and (3) competent administration of the program, including the setting up of farm coverage and premium rate per acre figures that will reflect the risks on the farm as nearly as possible, and the fair and just settlement of losses.

The Federal crop-insurance program, which provides for "all risk" insurance coverage against unavoidable production hazards on wheat crops was placed into operation for the first time on the wheat crop harvested in 1939. It was expected that experience with the insurance of wheat crops would illustrate the practical application of crop-insurance principles to this crop and would at the same time serve as an indication of how some of the problems in connection with the insurance of other crops could be worked out.

During its first year of operation the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation wrote 166,000 insurance contracts, which were distributed over about 1,200 counties in 30 States. Wheat growers paid in nearly 7,000,000 bushels of wheat or the equivalent in cash as premiums for insurance on about 7,589,000 acres. Claims for indemnities amounting in all to nearly 9,950,000 bushels were paid on about one-third of the policies.

The Federal Crop Insurance Corporation has already written over 378,000 insurance contracts covering over 10,000,000 acres of the 1940 wheat crop. This includes largely winter wheat, and estimates indicate that a total of possibly 385,000 growers will use the "all risk" insurance as a means of insuring their 1940 wheat crops. The increased interest in wheat-crop insurance in the second year amply demonstrates the popularity of "all risk" insurance for that crop. It also gives some idea of how cotton-crop insurance would be accepted by cotton growers.

The plan for insuring cotton crops, developed in the Bureau of Agricultural Economics and outlined in House Document No. 277, Seventy-sixth Congress, first session, entitled "A Suggested Plan for Cotton-Crop Insurance," is comparable in most respects to the wheat-crop insurance program, except for certain differences due to the nature of the crops. The need for and applicability of such a program in a typical southeastern cotton area can be shown by further and more detailed analysis of cotton-yield data collected by the Bureau and used in the development of the suggested insurance plan.

The hazards that the cotton farmer must face in producing a crop of cotton are no less than those involved in producing wheat or any other major crop. Consequently the need for cotton-crop insurance, as reflected by crop failures or substantially reduced cotton yields from these unavoidable production hazards, is as pronounced as for other crops. It is true that widespread crop failures occur less frequently in most of the Cotton Belt than in the Great Plains. Losses that do occur are therefore less spectacular than the wheat-crop failures in 1934 and 1936.

The fact that severe damage to cotton crops such as that suffered by farmers in parts of Alabama and Mississippi in 1939 occurs infrequently is not an indication that insurance protection is not needed. This point can be illustrated by the experience with wheat-crop insurance. The demand for insurance on wheat crops has been just as pronounced east of the Mississippi River where crop failures are infrequent as in the Great Plains where crop failures are common. One reason for this is the fact that wheat yields are higher and premium rates are lower in the Eastern States, so that risks to be carried are smaller, and more protection against crop loss is available at a lower cost.

Similar demands for cotton-crop insurance will no doubt exist, because under the plan now being considered, a farmer does not have to lose his crop in order to be eligible for indemnification. He can get insurance coverage up to 75 percent of his average yield. If his average yield per acre during a representative period of years is 400 pounds, he could get insurance protection up to 300 pounds per acre. If his yield on a crop insured for 300 pounds per acre amounted to 200 pounds, he would be indemnified for 100 pounds per acre, or the difference between his yield and his coverage.

That this type of protection against crop losses from unavoidable causes would be highly desirable is illustrated by table 1 which shows the annual yields of a representative sample of farms in typical counties during the years 1933–38, inclusive, the percent of farms in this sample selected in each county on which losses would have been sustained each year under the 75-percent plan, and the estimated number of farms in each county to which this percentage would apply. These Alabama, Georgia, Mississippi, and Arkansas counties should be representative of an area where cotton yields are fairly stable. The estimated number of farms in each county on which losses would have occurred had this period been used as a basis for insurance represents the percentage of all farms in the sample on which yields each year fell below 75 percent of the 1933–38 average for the farm applied to the total number of farms in the county. This means that if 10 percent of the farms in the sample studies had losses in a given year, then about 10 percent of all farms in the county could be expected to have losses that year. The 6 years 1933–38 probably do not represent a period of sufficient length on which to base insurance. However, a study of yields during this period should give some idea of how yields fluctuate from farm to farm and county to county in a normal period of years.

It will be noted from the table that losses occurred each year in all of the 12 counties studied, except in Lee County, Miss., in 1937. The proportion of farms having yields below three-fourths of their average ranged from 62.4 percent, or 1,303 farms in Marshall County, Miss., in 1935, to none in Lee County, Miss., in 1937. During 1935, which was probably the most unfavorable year from 1933 to 1938 in this area, due to drought, over 36 percent, or 9,769 farms out of a total of 26,795 farms, in the seven Alabama counties studied, probably had yields low enough to justify a claim for indemnity under the 75-percent insurance plan. Nearly 56 percent of the 4,485 farms in Lee and Marshall Counties, Miss., would have had losses below three-fourths of their average yield during 1935.

A study of actual farm yields from year to year shows that losses in cotton yields occur every year in one place or another. Even in 1937, when cotton yields generally were the highest in history, 3.3 percent, or about 875, of the approximate 26,800 farms in the seven Alabama counties shown in table 1, had less than three-fourths of an average crop. In Mitchell and Sumter Counties, Ga., nearly 15 percent of all farms produced less than 75 percent of an average crop in 1937, in spite of the fact that the average yield in these counties was 10 percent above normal in 1937.

It is significant to note that these crop losses continue to occur each year, even though the average yield of all farms has generally shown an upward trend since 1933. For instance, the average yield of the 12 counties shown in table 1 was about 30 percent higher in 1938 than it was in 1933, yet the 1938 yield on more than 8 percent of all farms studied in these counties was less than three-fourths of their 1933–38 average.

The number and percentage of all farms in the 12 selected counties on which yields were below three-fourths of the 1933–38 average during 1 or more of the years 1933–38 is shown in table 2. The advantages of having protection against crop losses through crop insurance are demonstrated by the fact that 47 percent of the farms in these counties had yields below three-fourths of their average in at least 1 year of the 6; 21 percent suffered such losses during 2 years of the 6; and 5 percent lost in 3 or more years. These percentages remained somewhat uniform from county to county, indicating that about the same percentage of farms in each county had losses 1 or more years. Individual farms are not identified in this table, and, as a consequence, a given farm having losses in 3 years may or may not be included in those having losses in 2 years or 1 year.

The fact that losses occurred during each year does not necessarily mean that premium rates for insurance based on past loss would be high, because many of the losses were small. It is true, however, that losses were most severe in the years when the most farms had losses.

In 1933 nearly 31 percent of the farms in the 12 counties had yields below three-fourths of their average, as shown in table 3. However, few, if any, of these crop losses were complete crop failures because the average loss in 1933 on the sample farms studied amounted to about 14 pounds of lint per acre. While crop losses occurred on more than 60 percent of the farms in Marshall County, Miss., in 1935, the average loss per insured acre was only 22 pounds in that county in 1935. On the other hand, the average loss per insured acre in Lawrence County, Ala., during 1935 was 24 pounds, and losses occurred on 55 percent of the farms. The fact that crop losses are usually not extreme in this area indicates that premiums taken in would have exceeded losses paid out during 4 of the 6 years, 1933–38. During the 2 years when indemnities would have exceeded premiums more than one-third of all farms sustained losses justifying indemnification, and the county yields amounted, on the average, to about 80 percent of normal.

During the years 1933–38, losses occurred on about 10 percent of the sample farms in years when the crop equaled the 6-year average, and losses during such years amounted to about one-third of premiums paid in. In years when the crop was 75 percent of the 6-year average, losses about doubled the premiums and would have been paid on about 60 percent of the farms. Premiums and indemnities would probably have balanced in years when the crop amounted to about 85 percent of average, during which years indemnities would have been paid on about 25 percent of the farms.

These estimates probably would not prove accurate in any given year, because they are based on average conditions, assume for the county, as a whole, the same relationship between average yields and average losses per insured acre as for the sample farms, and do not reflect any adverse selection of risks. Furthermore, the years 1933–38, inclusive, probably do not represent a period of sufficient length to serve as the basis for a crop-insurance program. However, the estimates do illustrate the crop-insurance principle of building up in years of good crops when premiums exceed indemnities of reserves that could be used for payment of losses in years of poor crops when indemnities would exceed premiums.

The average premium rate per acre for insurance of 75 percent of the average yield for a farm, based on losses during a representative period of years, would amount to about 10 pounds of lint per acre in the Alabama counties listed, or the equivalent of about $1 per acre at 10-cent cotton. This premium-rate figure would be higher than the average lint loss per acre during the 6 years, 1933–38, because it would include insurance coverage against average losses of cottonseed, as well as lint. The indemnities for losses would also be higher when indemnities for average loss in yield of cottonseed are included. However, the premium rate and the indemnity per acre would be increased by the same percentage in order to offer insurance against average losses in yields of cottonseed.

The average yield for these counties during the 6 years, 1933–38, was about 260 pounds, so that this premium rate would be for a coverage of about 195 pounds per acre. Thus, farmers would, on the average pay for this all-risk insurance, a premium amounting to a little more than 5 percent of the coverage.

These yield and premium-rate figures constitute a part of the actuarial basis for cotton-crop insurance developed by the Department of Agriculture from a study of cotton yields for the 6 years, 1933–38, on nearly 70,000 farms in over 900 cotton-growing counties. The Department's suggested plan for crop insurance with respect to cotton is based on this and other research conducted during the past several years.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, it is a rather singular thing that such a great innovation as crop insurance was never discussed on this floor at length before it was adopted. In 1937 and 1938 the Senate wrote the crop-insurance feature into the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, and it came to the House in the form of a conference report. Very little discussion was had on the floor of the House when the conference report was brought up for consideration. There is one thing sure, and that is that we regarded it as an experiment, and if you cherish any doubt on that subject, let me read you from page 1664 of the RECORD for the third session of the Seventy-fifth Congress the language of our good friend the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. DOXEY], a member of the House Committee on Agriculture:

We have further provided in this report, more in the nature of an experiment than anything else, crop insurance for wheat with a view of seeing how it is going to work. We realize that this is just an experiment.

Mr. Chairman, unless the data and unless the procedure under which this original experiment has been carried to a reasonable conclusion is established, I have some doubt as to whether it ought to be extended to another commodity. May I say that I am not opposed to insurance on crops as a principle, but I do say, and I think I can establish from the record, that it is still in the experimental stage.

When Mr. Leroy Smith, Director of the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation, appeared before the Subcommittee on Agriculture in December of last year, as we were preparing the data on the agricultural appropriation bill for 1941, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] made this observation:

Good insurance business at least provides premiums high enough to pay the total losses. Of course, in private industry it should pay the total losses and overhead and some little profit. You have from the business point of view had a bad business year for the Government. Do you attribute that to the fact that you have set the premiums too low or that the losses have been abnormally large?

Mr. Smith, Director of the Federal Crop Corporation, answered:

The losses have been abnormally large in the main wheat States.

This has been in operation for at least 1 year and the Director of the Insurance Corporation tells us that the losses have been abnormally large and that their actuarial data are not complete.

Let us go into the next crop year of 1940, and here is what Mr. Smith says:

The condition for wheat at the present time on account of weather conditions is as bad as it has been for a half century, some report, which, of course, indicates that probably we will have losses again for another year.

They have not definitely established the kind of actuarial data necessary to project this kind of a proposal or program into the field of some other agricultural commodity, and if you have any doubt on that score, we included for the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation an item of $148,000 for research. It is carried here as an item of research and development in connection with the establishment of bases for crop insurance.

Let me read what the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation submitted to us by way of justification on this matter. I quote from their own report:

However, the act recognizes the need for crop insurance on other agricultural commodities and directed that this research be done. Good progress has been made in assembling data on cotton and the details worked out thus far indicate the desirability of continuing the study.

Mr. Chairman, that is not my language. That is the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation speaking. If there is a desirability of continuing the study for a while, why do we project the Congress, the people, and the Federal Treasury into an insurance program on another commodity when we have not yet established a completely sound basis for wheat, which was the only one we recognized for experimental purposes when the act was first set up? Mr. Smith, of the Crop Insurance Corporation, also indicates that there ought to be certain readjustments. Let me read you the following colloquy:

Mr. CANNON, chairman of the committee, asked:

Do you expect to raise your rates or do you expect to wait for a favorable year to recoup your losses?—

Referring, of course, to wheat; and Mr. Smith, Director of the Insurance Corporation, answered:

We should not make any adjustment in rates until our analysis of our own experience indicates the need for changes.

Then Mr. CANNON asked:

You say you should or you should not?

Mr. SMITH. We should not until our research into our own experience indicates the need.

Mr. Chairman, that means nothing more than that this whole matter is still on something of an experimental basis. I may say to my friends over here that I think the weakness of this bill coming on for consideration at this time is not that the insurance principle is bad but, rather, that we ought to have at least another year or perhaps 2 years in order to make certain that we are not making a mistake. Suppose we are proceeding on the wrong premise, and suppose we go on for awhile, and there is no adjustment in this rate structure; if we make an identical mistake on another commodity that involves as much money and as much acreage as cotton, it would be unfair to the taxpayers of the country, and it would be unfair to the Congress of the United States to be put in that position. They were asking this year for an administrative appropriation of a little over $5,400,000. They sustained the losses last year on the ground it was an abnormal crop year. Now, Mr. Smith, the director says that the conditions for wheat are as bad in 1940, and there will be additional losses. There may have to be a readjustment in rates. They may have to recast this whole schedule. Then why not wait a year or two? I think that is the weakness of the bill before us at the present time.

Mr. PACE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. PACE. Does the gentleman feel that we would have any better test as to other commodities when we confine it to only one that is not general all over the Nation?

Mr. DIRKSEN. The gentleman will agree that all of the things that have been evolved thus far are more or less speculative, and we do not know whether they will work out in practice that way or not, for the good reason that we approached it on this one commodity, wheat, and as a result we took a loss in the first year, we will take a loss the second year, and probably have to recast the basic structure. That is the answer. I have no objection to the principle of crop insurance, but I do say we can make a terrible mistake, so why not wait until we have some more experience on wheat?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Is it not true that under this bill the program will not go into effect until 1941 so far as cotton is concerned, and we will then have additional experience?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Why not wait until we have the experience first, so that we may be able to determine what the situation is?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I think we can be perfecting the machinery and making arrangements in the meantime.

Mr. DIRKSEN. May I say to the gentleman from Mississippi that once the determination is made and we are absolutely certain about the statistical data and the actuarial matter, instead of coming in here with a bill in which you define agricultural commodities as being restricted to wheat and cotton, you should bring us a bill including rice, corn, and the other basic farm commodities. It was stated here yesterday that there would be no objection to adding corn, but, frankly, I am not anxious that corn be added until we can be sure that we are not making a mistake.

Mr. FULMER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. FULMER. May I say to the gentleman that when we had this bill up the only reason that cotton was not put in was because the Department of Agriculture said it did not have the facts and the statistics but stated it would make an investigation and submit it to the Congress. The conferees then understood it would come in, and they have submitted complete information about cotton. May I say to the gentleman that it would work on cotton much better than wheat if it would work at all. Now we come in, as understood, with cotton. I may say that it may take 2 or 3 years or 5 years, but every old-line insurance company and every private company has taken anywhere from 2 to 5 years to work out a fair program.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Let me answer that observation. I believe everybody in the Congress understood at the time that we were taking wheat for experimental purposes. Whatever actuarial data was available from the private companies certainly was not sufficient as far as the Government was concerned, because their whole experience was rather tragic and disastrous. The only way the Government could approach it would be to take at least one commodity and try it, so we simply crossed our fingers and decided that if there was a loss, all well and good; we at least would document some data on the subject and know which way to move. It cannot be contended that it is still not in the experimental stage, because the manager of the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation indicated as much before the Subcommittee on Agricultural Appropriations.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The capital stock is $20,000,000?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. If the crop materializes as indicated by the manager, Mr. Smith, and we have a poor crop this year, and the entire capital stock is wiped out, does the gentleman believe the Committee on Appropriations will provide additional capital for the Corporation to continue in 1941?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I will answer that in the light of the past by saying that when the Commodity Credit Corporation had the same difficulty we followed the provision in the law whereby it was mandatory for the Secretary of the Treasury to make the report to the Congress, and then we had to repair the capital stock to the extent of over $100,000,000.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. As I understand this bill, it merely amends certain sections of the Federal Crop Insurance Act and extends the provisions of that act to additional crops.

Mr. DIRKSEN. To one additional crop.

Mr. MAY. What is the other?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Cotton.

Mr. MAY. It was wheat, and now it includes both wheat and cotton?

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is right.

Mr. MAY. If there are going to be any crops included, why not include all crops?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I have just raised that question. Why include any crop until we are sure we are on good ground? Let us be satisfied for another year, or perhaps 2 years, before we go any further. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY].

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, I happen to be on the same subcommittee with the able, distinguished, and industrious gentleman who just preceded me, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN]. I have the highest regard for his good judgment and for his industry, and likewise his conclusions when he can entirely free himself from that which shows a partisan element or bias.

We had this matter of crop insurance before us last year in connection with making the initial appropriation at the commencement of this program, and while I do not recall, and perhaps it would be improper for me to say if I did, just where the gentleman stood on it in the subcommittee. I know that when it went into the main committee a fight again was made against it, and it carried by only one vote. I know the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD will show that when we came on the floor of the House with it in the appropriations the fight was bitter against it on the ground that we were embarking upon an experiment that was so new and so strange that it was an unsafe and an unwise thing to do. However, we voted the money—$20,000,000 of capital stock for this corporation and $5,000,000 for administrative costs.

The insurance plan has been in operation 1 year. It affects my district, because I am from one of the great wheat-growing sections. The bill before us, however, does not in the slightest, and could not under the wildest stretch of the imagination, ever apply to any crop of cotton that will be grown in my district, because we are beyond the limits where cotton can be produced. I certainly would not support this bill if I thought it jeopardized the best interest of my own constituents, the wheat growers. However, 1 year's experiment has demonstrated, as I draw conclusions from facts, that it is a workable program and a desirable program and that it ought to be expanded as rapidly as possible to both cotton and corn, at least, as the program is based so largely on a nonperishable crop. It may be that they can later work out mechanics that will fit a perishable crop, but wheat, corn, and cotton fit into this program almost perfectly.

The losses last year were nearly 2,000,000 bushels of wheat, in round numbers. The premiums are collected in wheat—that is, the premiums are paid in kind and the losses are paid in kind, unless the insured elects otherwise. Last year the farmers paid something over 7,000,000 bushels in premiums and the Government paid back 9,000,000 bushels in losses.

Of course, it was not profitable. First, it was never intended to be a profit-making institution; but, second, look at this fact, and this ought to be a very controlling fact. The United States wheat crop last year was only 90 percent of the normal crop over the base period of 8 years. In the great wheat-producing States of North Dakota, South Dakota, Kansas, Nebraska, Oklahoma, and the western part of Texas the wheat crop was only a 75-percent crop over the same base period, consequently losses were unusually high. This program at least brought relief to the extent of 75 percent of a normal crop to thousands of American farmers who were insured in this first year who otherwise would have been reduced to the unhappy and unfortunate situation of being relief clients.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Does the gentleman know of any other program of greater self-help for farmers? Does he know of any other means whereby they can bear one another's burdens better than through this plan?

Mr. LEAVY. My capable colleague from Arizona has stated the matter perfectly.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVY. I want to finish my statement first, if I may.

Crop insurance has a tendency, if carried to its ultimate conclusion, to stabilize crop production of major crops. It has a tendency, and one that is desirable, of taking marginal and submarginal lands out of production. Those lands that cannot economically be farmed in wheat or cotton or in corn would naturally be taken out of production, because there the premium charge would be so much higher than it is in a region of certain production and of high acreage yield.

Now, let us come to the question of whether we are infringing upon the private insurance companies. That has been debated upon the floor here before. In the first place, let me say this is not in any sense a profit-making institution; not so intended or designed. The law itself provides that administrative costs shall be paid out of the Federal Treasury. There is no question about that. But it is an undertaking to insure to the farmer who is engaged in a business for a livelihood that is the most hazardous of all the businesses in the Nation, and that is producing a farm crop. Being taken on a Nation-wide basis this program can be made, if we have adopted the proper premium rate, an absolutely workable program.

Now, opponents say, "Let us wait another year and then put cotton into this program." In the first place, as has been indicated here, the cotton crop will not come in until 1941. If this bill is passed cotton will not be affected until next year; then, let me say further, the factors and conditions surrounding cotton production in so many of their features are entirely different from those surrounding wheat production. The same argument that was made a year ago against wheat production is now being made against cotton production. If we had refused to act in reference to wheat, we, of course, would have no wheat program today. As a result we have such valuable experience that this year there was no opposition to continuing the wheat program. There is only one way to secure experience in a new field, and that is to enter into such field.

I am willing to concede to my friend from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], and to anyone else, that if the premium base is unsound we should change it, but last year's experience in wheat does not indicate that at all, in the light of the unusual natural conditions that then prevailed.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 minute.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVY. I yield.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I just want to make sure the RECORD is kept straight. I recall no effort to strike crop insurance from the appropriation bill either in subcommittee or in the full committee. Maybe an effort was made to reduce the administrative amount somewhat, because some of the Members thought perhaps the amount was too high, but no effort was made to destroy the crop-insurance item in the appropriation bill.

Mr. LEAVY. In the first appropriation bill?

Mr. DIRKSEN. No; in the appropriation bill of this year.

Mr. LEAVY. Oh, no; there was no effort made this year; I expressly referred to last year.

Mr. DIRKSEN. And the other thing is that as early as 1938 the Secretary of Agriculture sent a letter to the Senate recommending crop insurance on fruits and vegetables. Now, if you are going to include cotton, let us go the whole hog and include them all.

Mr. LEAVY. I think ultimately we should do that, as we prove the ground as time goes on. I desire to say that the Republican Party, as well as the Democratic Party, in their platform of 1936, promised the American farmers crop insurance. [Applause.]

Mr. DIRKSEN. We do not quarrel with that, either.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. COFFEE].

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, it is with reluctance that I take the floor in opposition to this bill because of the interest of my very good friends from the South in its adoption.

I feel that this crop-insurance program should continue on wheat alone for a few years longer in order to justify the experiment before it becomes too much involved. I know that unless it can make a good showing in the future the Appropriations Committee will refuse to make the necessary appropriations and the crop-insurance program will cease to exist. This danger becomes more imminent when you add cotton to the present insurance program.

These facts should be borne in mind. In the first year 70,000,000 bushels of wheat were insured. The premiums collected amounted to 7,000,000 bushels of wheat, and the total losses were 9,300,000 bushels of wheat. This statement alone indicates that it would require 30 percent increase in the premiums to offset the total loss the first year of its operation. This, of course, would not be justified on the basis of only 1 year's experience.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. I yield.

Mr. COLMER. I am sure that my distinguished friend from Nebraska is very broad-minded and unselfish. He favors this insurance upon wheat, does he not?

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. I do. I want to see the program made as nearly self-sustaining as possible.

Mr. COLMER. The gentleman would not want to see it removed from wheat?

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. I would not until we can see whether or not it is going to be a feasible and a workable program.

Mr. COLMER. I understand that, and, as I understand, the gentleman does support it. Does not the gentleman think, in all fairness, he ought to give another basic commodity, like cotton, an opportunity to come under this program?

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. I am trying to indicate why I think it is not advisable now. If you will bear with me a few minutes, I think I can give you my views. It cost $4,800,000 in administrative costs the first year to collect 7,000,000 bushels of wheat in premiums, which, at that time, was worth approximately $3,500,000.

Is there any insurance program that is sound that would necessitate an overhead expense of $4,800,000 to collect $3,500,000 in premiums? I am not condemning the wheat program because that is only 1 year's experience. Let us give the crop-insurance program a chance to operate and see whether or not it can be made to operate on a sound basis. If it cannot, naturally it will be discontinued. In case it can be placed on a sound basis, the officials who are pioneering the field should have a chance to work this out. Then, after the program can be shown to be feasible on wheat, other commodities might logically be considered. If cotton is included now, you may be assured there will be a demand soon to include fruits and vegetables and every other commodity. Congress has appropriated $20,000,000 capital for the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation. That may be sufficient to take care of the experimental stages in this wheat program during the next few years. With wheat out on a raft in deep water, to pile cotton on it, too, may sink the whole program. If you add these other commodities at this time, you will jeopardize the possibility of carrying out this experiment in insurance on wheat.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 minutes more.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Yes.

Mr. LEAVY. The gentleman made the statement that it cost $5,000,000 to administer the first year.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Four million eight hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. LEAVY. Which is correct; but for the next year the same sum of money is appropriated to administer three times as many policies, covering more than three times the acreage and more than three times the production.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. How do you account for such a heavy overhead expense?

Mr. LEAVY. Because they were setting up the agency last year and they needed hundreds of people to set it up, just like every insurance business does in the beginning.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. For the fiscal year 1940, there was appropriated $5,423,000 with an additional $500,000 of unexpended balance, to cover the administrative expense. For the fiscal year 1941 we have provided $5,423,000 together with not to exceed $100,000 of unexpended balance. How are we going to carry out and find a true picture of this crop-insurance program unless you let that program run for a few years on wheat to demonstrate its feasibility?

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Yes.

Mr. PACE. Does the gentleman think that you can do that when you have a crop that is representative of only one part of the Nation, when the conditions are different as to productivity?

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Wheat is raised in most of the States in the Nation. There are about 30 States represented in the wheat-insurance program.

Mr. PACE. What about the other 18?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has again expired.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY].

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, according to the record I hold in my hand there were only 202 policyholders in the entire State of North Carolina under the wheat-insurance program for 1939. In the State of Nebraska, the home State of my esteemed and distinguished friend, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. COFFEE], there were 56,874 policyholders. On 1,258,643 acres of Nebraska land 13,114,000 bushels of wheat were insured. In Tazewell County, the home county of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], in 1939 there were 436 policyholders and in 1940, 826. I am advised that in his congressional district the policyholders have more than doubled for 1940.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. Yes.

Mr. MAY. I suppose the gentleman wants to make a vote for this bill if he can. I know very little about it, because I have not had any opportunity to give it consideration. I would like to have a brief explanation of the theory of the program, whether it is taking wheat out of production or insuring against failure of crop.

Mr. COOLEY. It would be diffcult for me to explain the mechanics of the bill in the brief time at my disposal.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I will.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Does not the gentleman think that the program as far as wheat is concerned will be jeopardized, in view of the $20,000,000 capital structure, in the event we add other commodities to this crop-insurance program?

Mr. COOLEY. No; I do not share the gentleman's fear in that regard. In pointing out the fact that the gentleman has 56,000 policyholders in his State, where I have only 202 in my State, I just want it understood that I do not have a great deal of personal interest in this wheat program. With regard to cotton, I live in a State that processes approximately 2,000,000 bales of cotton annually, and we produce approximately 300,000 bales. So the program does not mean a great deal to the State of North Carolina, but I do believe it means a lot to the cotton and wheat farmers of the Nation.

I am frank to admit that this program is still in an experimental stage. I do not believe anyone will contend that it is not. Evidence before the committee indicated that it would perhaps require 5 or 6 years to satisfactorily conduct this experiment. We all know that but for the failure of the Department of Agriculture to furnish us with the proper data at that time, cotton would have been included in this experiment. I do not believe the cotton farmers of the Nation should be held up for 5 or 6 years pending the determination of the successful operation of the experiment on wheat. It may be that we are losing money. Certainly we expected to lose money. We have no right to complain about or even mention the administrative costs, as I see it, because we knew we were putting on the Government the burden of the administrative cost.

Now, suppose we have lost money in the drought-stricken areas of the wheat section of this country, which, of course, includes the State from which my good friend the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. COFFEE] comes, and the distinguished minority member of the committee. Suppose we have lost money there. It has gone into the hands of distressed farmers who would, in all probability, have been forced upon the relief rolls. If we are furnishing relief in that way to the farmers of the country and at the same time conducting an experiment which may prove to be of tremendous value to American agriculture, then I do not think it is a bad program.

I wish I had time to discuss the machinery of this Crop Insurance Corporation. Never before in the history of America has such an experiment been undertaken. No private insurance company would have the resources or the courage to undertake such a program as this. I will say to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER] that it is a fact that his insurance companies do a large business down in the tobacco section in writing hail insurance for tobacco. I do not have any reason to want to invade the field which is adequately covered by private insurance companies of America, but in the tobacco section we pay a tremendous premium for hail insurance. All-risk insurance is unknown to the tobacco farmers of America.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. I suppose the gentleman knows there is no insurance company in the United States that has ever made a dollar on hail insurance, even though the rates are high?

Mr. COOLEY. Well, I did not know that. I will accept the gentleman's statement. That shows clearly the necessity for the experiment which will enable either private corporations or some public corporation to furnish insurance to the farmers of the Nation.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I am delighted to yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. I grew up on a farm and I am always in sympathy with farmers' programs and have a great deal of confidence in the distinguished membership of this House which comes from the Cotton Belt, and usually follow them when they have a bill like this; but I think we ought to get the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. COFFEE], who represents a real wheat-producing State, right in the RECORD. His argument was that we should not spread the program to any other product on account of the matter of finances until we made a test of it. That was the sum and substance of what he said. Is that not right?

Mr. COOLEY. I think that is right.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman from Nebraska was not opposing the program as it is, but wanted to experiment a little further on one crop, wheat?

Mr. COOLEY. I think that the gentleman from Kentucky clearly states the position of the gentleman from Nebraska. I understand that the gentleman from Nebraska does not want to repeal the law which makes possible crop insurance for wheat, but he feels that we should wait until the success of the program has been more definitely determined.

I have known the gentleman from Nebraska, HARRY B. COFFEE, intimately and well since 1934, when we both first came to Congress. I know that he is not selfish, and I would not for one minute leave the impression that he is unwilling to accord to other sections of the country the same relief which he is willing for his own State and constituents to receive and enjoy. He may be correct in the position he has taken in suggesting that the crop-insurance program should not embrace cotton or other commodities until the complete success of the experiment has been determined. I shall not even argue that point with him; but my recollection is quite clear and definite that our committee, of which he is an able and distinguished member, knew at the time we reported the crop-insurance bill that a request would be made for cotton to be included just as soon as the data on cotton was made available by the Department of Agriculture, which at the time we reported the bill, was engaged in making the necessary survey and collecting the necessary information. We also knew that the success of the experiment could not be determined by 1 year's operations. I am sure that no member of the committee is taken by surprise at the suggestion that cotton now be included in the crop-insurance program.

I am sure my friend from Nebraska is most vitally concerned about the cost of crop insurance, as he is and always has been concerned about extraordinary expenditures of Federal funds. This experiment will, of course, be costly; but in view of the fact that it has been undertaken and is greatly needed, and especially in view of the fact that it is an experiment which only the Government can afford to undertake, I feel that we are thoroughly justified in insisting upon the program being extended to cotton, a crop which is grown in a different section of the country from that in which wheat is produced. As pointed out by another distinguished member of our committee, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE], by including the two crops the Corporation will be able to conduct an experiment by large-scale operations in different sections of the country upon two of our major crops, and in a few years it may be possible to put the crop-insurance program on a self-sustaining basis.

I hope that we may at the earliest possible date be able to extend the benefits of all-risk crop insurance to the tobacco growers of the country. I intend to introduce a bill at this session of Congress, the purpose of which is to include tobacco in the crop-insurance program. I know that the Corporation is not in a position at this time to undertake a crop-insurance program for tobacco, but I indulge the hope that sufficient information may be collected at some time in the near future which will justify extending the benefits of crop insurance to those who are engaged in producing one of our principal export and surplus farm commodities.

I am tremendously interested in the success of the experiment. I hope that the bill under consideration will be approved, that cotton will be included, and that the operations of the Corporation will be so successful that we may at a later date be justified in extending benefits of the program to the producers of other farm commodities. [Applause.]

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MURRAY].

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman, I am not opposed to this bill because it is for cotton. I am not, necessarily, opposed to any sound insurance plan. I am opposed to this bill in general, at this time, because the people of this country do not want to put the Federal Government further into the insurance business, or any other business.

In addition: (1) The wheat-insurance plan has not been in effect long enough to give a reliable yardstick. If the present information that is available about wheat insurance is to be used as a yardstick, I am sure we should hesitate before we go further into the insurance business; (2) there is no justification for insuring only a few basic crops that have already had millions upon millions of dollars that have not been given to the other important crops of our country. All agricultural products should be included or we should vote down this kind of legislation. Kick the camel out of the tent, or lead him out and turn him loose; (3) many New Deal projects are being and will be liquidated at 30 to 40 percent on the dollar. Why not ask for evidence of some successful projects before we go out on a limb with a new program of federal insurance?

The people of this country are not asking for any new schemes for spending their money. They are getting more insistent every day for programs of common sense in all governmental activities. [Applause.]

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. LEMKE].

Mr. LEMKE. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say to the Members of this House that we always get excited over nonessentials. This bill is not going to remedy the farmers' difficulties. As a matter of fact, I do not care what kind of legislation you pass, until the Members of this House have sufficient intelligence and courage to give to the farmers of this Nation cost of production, agriculture will be a failure and so will all this class of legislation.

I wish to state further that in all this discussion there is nothing Republican or Democratic about this bill. Surely agriculture is not Democratic or Republican. I asked a gentleman on my side of the aisle just a minute ago whether he did not believe that sauce for the gander was sauce for the goose, whether sauce for the wheat farmer was not sauce for the cotton farmer. He answered that it depended upon whether the goose was Republican or Democratic. I am in hopes that Members on both sides of the aisle will get together and that we may have a nonpartisan wedding of the goose and the gander and give the same treatment to cotton that we have asked and received for wheat.

This bill does not mean very much in the solution of the agricultural problem. I want to say to my friend the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY]—and I shall be glad to yield to him in a minute—that I would prefer to have him come up and sign petitions Nos. 5 and 6 and do something real for the American farmers. Then we will not need all this fool stuff—this make-believe legislation.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEMKE. I yield.

Mr. MAY. I would like to leave the petitions where they are until we take care of these cotton farmers and wheat farmers. I merely want to say to the gentleman that over in my district both Republicans and Democrats eat wheat and wear cotton clothes, and even those who do not belong to either party do likewise.

Mr. LEMKE. I would like to say further that the eating of wheat and the wearing of clothes made of cotton the farmer produces is nonpartisan.

I am told that it takes one man an hour to produce a pound of cotton, and he gets about 8 cents a pound when he sells it. In other words, the producer gets 8 cents an hour for his work. Eight cents an hour with which to feed and clothe himself and his family and pay his landlord. I feel that when Congress permits such a condition to exist it is guilty of criminal neglect.

No matter how much insurance you provide, you cannot save that situation by putting him in the hole to the extent of the cost of his premium on the insurance. He is already sinking. To my wheat-growing farmers may I say that the same thing is true, that no insurance plan is going to solve the problem so long as the wheat farmer does not get cost of production. Although I am for this bill because it is fair, it is just, if you give this insurance to the wheat farmer you ought to give it to the cotton farmer. Yet I do not have faith that it will solve the basic problem. Let us consider this proposition for a few minutes.

The farmers have been feeding and clothing the people of this Nation. It seems to me the time has come when we should quit making a fuss about experiments. You have experimented—both parties—with the farmer until he is sick and tired of it. He wants the real thing now. I am sorry we have only 121 signatures on the cost-of-production petition, but I am sure before this week is out we shall have more—at least, we ought to. I am sure that the 435 Members of this House will have the good nature and good sense to give us an opportunity to bring the cost-of-production and Frazier-Lemke refinance bills up for consideration by signing petitions Nos. 5 and 6. Now, let us do the sensible thing and then we can take care of these side issues, because, after all, this is just a side issue. I am for it because it is no more of a side issue than the insurance on wheat.

Let me call attention to the suggestions made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] that the officers of the Wheat Insurance Division in the Department of Agriculture who testified before the committee certainly showed that under the wheat program wonderful progress has been made, more progress than has been made in any other division with which the Department of Agriculture has had anything to do.

In conclusion permit me to state there is no reasonable excuse why we should not give the same treatment to cotton that we give to wheat, but we will have done nothing worth while for either cotton or wheat when we do it. Now let me touch the wheat insurance for a minute.

In my State they insure wheat to about 6 bushels an acre. The premium is about 2 bushels an acre, and the poor farmer has to live on the other 4. The premium may even have to be increased. I repeat, therefore, the insurance program cannot solve the agricultural problem. The thing we should do—and I cannot see why we do not get down to earth and tackle the problem basically—is to assure the farmers of cost of production.

There is no question but that thousands of farmers have lost their homes because of the low prices they receive for their commodities, and there is no question but what there ought to be some insurance against that. Some of my friends say, "But that is an experiment; it is too risky for the Government of the United States to go into and help out." All the Government of the United States is asked to furnish is the machinery. The farmers furnish the risk. In closing, let me ask: If crop insurance is too risky for the Government of the United States, is not farming too risky for the farmers of the United States? [Applause.]

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of the time on this side.

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, on yesterday it appears that about two-thirds of the time on the rule was used in talking about politics. I want to state frankly that this bill does not have anything to do with whether or not Mr. Roosevelt will offer for a third term or whether or not the Republican Party will be successful next November.

I believe that if you will give me your careful attention I shall be able to prove to you that we have a good, sound, constructive proposition.

The purpose of this bill, H. R. 6972, is to amend the Crop Insurance Act so as to include cotton.

In 1938 a bill introduced in the Senate by Senator Pope was attached to the 1938 agricultural adjustment bill creating a Crop Insurance Corporation, authorizing $100,000,000 as capital stock.

This bill was considered in conference between the two Houses, and the only reason that cotton was not placed in the bill at that time was because the Secretary of Agriculture stated that it would be impossible to put a cotton-insurance program into operation for the reason that he did not have sufficient information, statistics, and so forth.

However, it was definitely understood at that time that cotton would be taken care of later, and the Secretary was authorized to make an investigation and report his findings to the Congress.

This information was submitted to the Congress in May 1939 and is contained in House Document 277.

All-risk crop insurance makes available to the wheat and cotton grower an economic device whereby he can meet the cost of crop failure in advance and on the installment plan. This means more security for the grower, and it will reduce the need for governmental expense in the form of relief. It will do much to prevent the economic and social losses which follow crop failure, such as foreclosures of farms and increased absentee ownership and tenancy. It will aid soil conservation by assuring the grower that he will reap the rewards of better farming methods and by assuring him of income to finance conservation work. It will help farmers to plan ahead with greater certainty and to gamble less with the weather. All of this will mean, in turn, greater security and, consequently, greater stability for every rural community dependent on wheat and cotton income.

In 1939 the appropriation for the administration of the Corporation was five and one-half million, of which they used $4,800,000.

During the first year of the administration of the wheat program 166,000 farmers applied for insurance, and, according to the information that we have from the Department, they have 378,519 applications for 1940, or an increase of over 200 percent.

I note that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN], also the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. COFFEE], are objecting to this bill solely on the ground that we have not had a sufficient try-out on wheat, and it appears that they would be highly pleased if we would permit the wheat program to continue, perhaps 2, 3, or 5 years, and then, after we have found out that a satisfactory and proper premium rate could be worked out, perhaps, if they were still in Congress, they would then permit cotton to come in.

I am surprised at their attitude for the reason, in Minnesota, if you will compare the applications for insurance in 1939 with 1940, you will find that they have about a 400-percent increase—totaling for 1940, 21,270.

In the State of Nebraska in 1939 they insured 12,841 farmers. However, in 1940 we have insured 56,874. This would clearly indicate that it must be a very satisfactory program, and just why these gentlemen are perfectly willing to hold on to wheat insurance and are doing everything possible to prevent cotton farmers from coming in on an equal basis is beyond my comprehension.

Naturally, this being the first opportunity on the part of the Government to carry out an insurance program on any crop, it would be impossible to be absolutely correct in fixing premium rates.

It will be stated by some Members, no doubt, that wheat insurance was not a success in 1939, in that while the Corporation received about 7,000,000 bushels of wheat in payment of premiums, the Corporation had to pay out to farmers for losses because of destruction to the wheat crop around nine and one-half million bushels—two and one-half million bushels more than the Corporation received in the way of premiums.

If you will average this wheat at $1 per bushel, it would be very apparent that the Corporation had a loss of about two and one-half million dollars in its first year's operation. The actual amount, however, was less than $2,000,000 in actual cash.

In the hearings held on this bill, page 19, you will find that Mr. Johnson, representing the Department of Agriculture, stated, in referring to certain mutual companies, that they lost, including the expense of administration, during their first year's operation, $7.78 for every dollar received.

Now, let us compare this with the showing made by the Insurance Corporation during its first year.

As stated, they received 7,000,000 bushels of wheat as premium payments. At $1 per bushel, this would amount to $7,000,000. We find that they paid out nine and one-half million bushels, or, at the same price, nine and one-half million dollars. This would indicate a net loss of $2,500,000, or a loss of 36 cents for every dollar received; or, if you will take into consideration the expense of administration, $4,800,000, the loss would be two dollars for every one received.

Now, compare this loss with the mutual companies' losses of $7.78, and you will agree that this Federal insurance program was much more successful than the private companies.

This makes a very successful showing for the administration of the act, especially in that it is a known fact that a large number of applications during the first year came from that section of the wheat country where they have frequent disastrous losses because of drought, and so forth.

I contend that this is purely a business proposition.

Suppose the Government has some losses during the first 3, 4, or 5 years, until the program could be put on a sound basis. The losses will not compare with the amount of money that we are spending for relief and in the way of grants to farmers because of the loss of their crops for various reasons.

According to the information that I have here in a document issued by the Department of Agriculture, we have spent $615,000,000 for this type of relief during the past 10 years, or sixty-one and one-half millions annually.

I imagine there are Members who, rather than vote for this bill, would prefer to go on spending millions in the way of relief, instead of actually doing a good, sound, commonsense thing by passing this bill so as to be able to eliminate that large class of farmers who annually, because of drought, flood, or for some other reason, have suffered the loss of their crops and are forced on W. P. A. or on relief rolls.

Now, here is the trouble about giving relief under such circumstances to farmers: The relief money is used to maintain themselves and their families. They do not get a sufficient amount to pay any of their taxes, interest on their loans, or any of their obligations. Therefore, because farmers are not properly protected, it is the one thing that is bringing about tax delinquency, increasing tenancy, and increasing unemployment.

Let us take a concrete case. Suppose a farmer who usually produces 100 bales of cotton is covered under this program for three-fourths the value of that cotton and cottonseed. Suppose cotton is selling for 10 cents per pound; 100 bales would mean $5,000. Should this farmer have a total loss, without insurance, there is nothing coming to him except whatever relief or money in the way of grants that he can secure—and it is secured at the expense of the taxpayers of this country.

However, under the insurance bill, he would receive three-fourths of that $5,000, which would amount to $3,750, besides the amount of three-fourths the value of the cottonseed, which would enable him to pay these obligations, or practically so; and you would have thousands of farmers off the relief rolls and thousands of farmers continuing to own their lands.

Some days ago Mr. Goss, who has been connected with the Farm Credit Administration, stated before our committee that one reason why the Farm Credit Administration had closed out 100,000 farmers since 1933 was because of the price received by farmers.

Now, he was really speaking of farmers who produced a normal crop, and certainly if that is true, what about thousands of farmers who annually lose half of their crops or all of their crops; because of some disaster for which they are not at all responsible?

I want to quote you a paragraph from a letter received from Secretary Wallace, which should clearly indicate to you just what I am talking about.

I quote:

In the States of Alabama, Arkansas, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, and Texas the Farm Security Administration expects to advance loan funds for this fiscal year in the amount of $40,974,947 and to extend grants in the amount of $9,400,000.

Now, remember, these funds are coming from the Farm Security Administration in addition to the millions that we are spending in the way of W. P. A. work and relief.

THE 1939 GRANTS

In 1939 the Rural Rehabilitation Agency made grants to 118,220 farmers in 11 Southern States amounting to $3,549,000.

I am placing in the RECORD at this point a list of these States, the number of farmers, and the amounts of the grants made in each State.

Grants made in Southern States in 1939

States	Rural rehabilitation grants by Farm Security Administration
	Grants	Amount
	Number
Alabama	15,920	$667,000
Arkansas	11,480	257,000
Florida	3,370	101,000
Georgia	8,510	300,000
Louisiana	5,930	116,000
Mississippi	45,150	685,000
North Carolina	1,160	62,000
Oklahoma	5,530	378,000
South Carolina	6,340	211,000
Tennessee	1,340	55,000
Texas	13,490	717,000
Total	118,220	3,549,000

Let me give you some startling figures as to farm-land mortgage delinquencies in 1939. This does not refer to the 100,000 farmers who have been foreclosed on since 1933. These figures refer to farmers who are still trying to hold on to their lands in the 11 Southern States:

Percentage of Federal land-bank loans and land bank commissioner loans that were delinquent at the end of 1939

State	Federal land-bank loans, 1939	Land bank commissioner loans, 1939
	Percent	Percent
Alabama	32.0	44.9
Arkansas	8.4	9.9
Florida	29.1	14.7
Georgia	35.7	32.9
Louisiana	25.7	31.4
Mississippi	33.7	48.5
North Carolina	25.6	29.6
Oklahoma	18.1	28.0
South Carolina	35.5	36.9
Tennessee	9.9	13.5
Texas	18.7	17.5

Dr. Black, who is now at the head of the Farm Credit Administration, stated some days ago:

About 1,057,000 land-bank and commissioner loans were outstanding on January 1, this year, of which some 254,000 were delinquent.

Loans with delinquent installments totaled $662,585,000.

Of course, the outcome for many seriously delinquent farmers depends on climatic conditions, crops, and prices.

Now, if this statement is true, and it is definitely true, this bill, if passed, would go a long way in offsetting crop losses brought about by climatic conditions, hailstorm, flood, drought, and insect infestation.

Let me give you a few figures representing drought-relief loans for the years 1935 up to and including 1938:

In 1935 the amount was	$65,513,583
In 1936 the amount was	60,397,062
In 1937 the amount was	57,113,320
In 1938 the amount was	54,763,757

Look up the records and you will find that very little of the drought-relief loans have ever been repaid to the Government. You remember many loans that we made to the drought-stricken farmers in the Northwest taking their notes for same, and, as stated, if you will look up the records, of these loans, you will find perhaps millions of dollars unpaid.

During this session of the Congress, as usual, several bills have been introduced authorizing large appropriations to take care of farm relief because of the loss of crops for various reasons.

I hold in my hand several bills. Here is one introduced by my friend and colleague the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. DOXEY] authorizing an appropriation of $60,000,000. Here is another introduced by my good friend the gentleman from North Dakota, Judge LEMKE, authorizing $20,000,000.

First and last, we pass some of these bills.

However, if these bills are not passed you can rest assured, as previously stated, these relief costs will be taken care of under the Farm Security Administration in the way of grants or with W. P. A. funds in the way of employment or W. P. A. relief.

Therefore, as stated, the purpose of this bill is to permit farmers to be able to secure insurance benefits by paying their own way in making premium payments.

Some days ago Mr. Baldwin, who represents the Farm Security Administration, appeared before our committee.

I asked him this question:

Is it not a fact that where you operate in areas where they have insurance on their wheat crop where you have these disasters these farmers are in much better shape than where they have not had insurance on cotton crops, for instance?

Mr. BALDWIN. I think that that is going to help them considerably. The farmers who have taken advantage particularly of wheat insurance last year will, naturally, be in a much better shape than those who have not taken it, and they are going to be in better shape, Mr. FULMER, than the farmers who are raising other crops on which there is no insurance available.

Mr. FULMER. In other words, like a good many of the cotton States. We will take down in Mississippi, my friend DOXEY'S district, where the cotton crop was practically destroyed last year, they did not have an opportunity of getting insurance like the wheat people, and the demand on the Rehabilitation Administration for relief and grants are much greater.

Mr. BALDWIN. Our job would be much easier if these people had some way in which they could insure their crops.

Now, I want to call this especially to the attention of those of you who represent city districts. The thing that you are deeply interested in is the largest appropriation possible for W. P. A. employment and for relief purposes.

A vote for this bill will be a vote for an increased amount of money to be used for relief purposes, without increasing the W. P. A. appropriations.

Now, why do I make this statement?

If you fail to pass this bill, and we have to continue to spend sixty-odd million dollars annually to take care of farmers who have disastrous crop failures causing them to have to secure W. P. A. work or go on relief, naturally, we are taking away from you that which could actually go to the unemployed and those who are entitled to work who do not live on the farm.

I contend that it will be much easier to work out a good, sound insurance program on cotton than on any other crop because we come more nearly having a uniform crop of cotton each year than is the case with any other crop.

Something has been said along this line: "Why do you not put corn, potatoes, and various other crops under this bill?"

I want to state to you frankly and conscientiously that I am just as anxious to provide insurance for other crops as I am in providing insurance for wheat and cotton; but why not, those of you who are interested in other crops, do the thing that we have done—have the Department of Agriculture get the necessary facts and information which would indicate whether or not certain crops can be covered by Federal insurance, and, if it can be done, then come in and add an additional amendment to the act to take care of these crops?

The original act provides for the Secretary of Agriculture making investigation as to other crops.

If any of you representing any district or State can secure from the Secretary of Agriculture at this time a statement that he is now in a position to add any other crop, I will vote, and the rest of the cotton Members will vote, for such an amendment.

This is not a political matter; but it is purely a business proposition, and, as I have indicated, is in the interest of economy, and I believe will do more to assist farmers to continue as landowners than anything that we have done up to this time.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULMER. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. As I understand, the cotton grower and the wheat grower are not compelled to take this insurance; it is entirely voluntary?

Mr. FULMER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. I also understand that this agency is supposed to set up rules and regulations under which the growers of wheat and cotton will pay premiums and the Government will not suffer any loss; that is the hope.

Mr. FULMER. That is right.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. How can anybody object to a bill of this kind, which is purely voluntary and is self-paid-for by farmers like any other insurance.

Mr. FULMER. May I say there are only two objections against this bill. One is, I am fearful that the wheat program will not be successful; wait 2 to 5 years until we try it. The other is, if you put cotton in, corn and every other farm product will want to come in.

If and when information can be had about other crops if this information would indicate that the program would work on other products, then I have no objection to these products coming. However, wheat and cotton are major farm products and should be under the program.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Will the distinguished new chairman of the Committee on Agriculture yield to me? As the gentleman knows, we always work together in that committee, and I do not think there has been any partisan politics.

Mr. FULMER. That is right, and I am surprised at the gentleman now, in that we have put your wheat farmers in, and you are for that, but you do not want my cotton farmers to come in.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The gentleman is proposing that that is exactly what is going to happen if this bill passes, and I am almost persuaded to vote for the bill if that is what is going to take place.

Mr. FULMER. I would be surprised if the gentleman did vote for the bill, and yet he knows it is a good proposition.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I hope the gentleman is correct that this bill, if it passes, is going to do away with the necessity of appropriating relief money for these tenants and sharecroppers.

Mr. FULMER. Well, the gentleman ought to know that his farmers who had insurance in 1939, with crop losses, received their insurance payments, and they did not even ask for and did not get W. P. A. work or relief.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. We have been doing that for a number of years in the South as well as in the North.

Mr. FULMER. We have had very little in the way of relief given to cotton farmers in the South except during this administration under W. P. A. and other types of relief.

However, this was true for the reason of crop losses which practically put farmers in the same position as the unemployed people.

We have been making seed loans for a number of years, but the cotton farmers in the South have paid back to the Federal Government practically 100 percent of these seed loans.

In the meantime, as stated, I want to impress this upon you, that the passage of this bill will mean millions which are now going to farmers for W. P. A. work and relief can be used for millions of unemployed people living in the city, and in other walks of life, who do not live on the farm. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 502 of the Federal Crop Insurance Act, as amended, is hereby amended by substituting the word "crop" for the word "wheat-crop" and by substituting the words "agricultural commodities" for the word "wheat."

SEC. 2. That section 506 (h) of said act, as amended, is amended by striking out the words "for wheat and other agricultural commodities."

SEC. 3. That section 508 of said act, as amended, is amended by striking out the first comma in subsection (a) thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "and with the cotton crop planted for harvest in 1940."

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. FULMER: On page 1, line 13, after the word "in", strike out "1940" and insert "1941."

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Chairman, may I say the purpose of this amendment is to have the bill go into operation in 1941 instead of 1940, in that it is too late at this time to have it go into effect as to 1940.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That section 508 of said act, as amended, is further amended by striking out the words "producers of wheat against loss in yields of wheat", in the first sentence, and substituting in lieu thereof the words "producers of the agricultural commodity against loss in yields of the agricultural commodity."

SEC. 5. That section 508 of said act, as amended, is further amended by substituting the words "the agricultural commodity" for the word "wheat", in the third sentence of subsection (a).

SEC. 6. That sections 508 (b), (c), and (d) and 516 (a) of said act, as amended, are further amended by substituting the words "the agricultural commodity" for the word "wheat" wherever it appears.

SEC. 7. That section 508 of said act, as amended, is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) In connection with insurance upon yields of cotton, to include provision for additional premium and indemnity in terms of lint cotton to cover loss of cottonseed, such additional premium and indemnity to be determined on the basis of the average relationship between returns from cottonseed and returns from lint cotton for the same period of years as that used for computing yields and premium rates."

SEC. 8. That section 516 (a) of said act, as amended, is amended by striking out the figures "$6,000,000" and substituting in lieu thereof the figures "$12,000,000."

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin: On page 3, beginning in line 1, strike out all of section 8.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I would like to obtain some information and ascertain whether or not my understanding of this section is correct. Does this, section 8, provide an expenditure of $12,000,000 from our almost bankrupt Treasury just for administrative purposes with reference to this cotton and wheat insurance program?

Mr. FULMER. It authorizes not in excess of that amount for the administration of cotton and wheat. As the gentleman knows, they had $6,000,000, and they only used $4,800,000 the first year.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. You have used $6,000,000 for administrative purposes when the insurance was restricted to wheat alone. What was the total volume of that insurance, so we may obtain a rough idea of the percentage of the administrative cost of this gigantic, socialistic Government-insurance program?

Mr. FULMER. May I say to the gentleman that they used $4,800,000. They did not use the entire amount.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. And how much insurance did they write?

Mr. FULMER. They wrote 166,000 applications, in comparison with 378,500 so far in this year of 1940.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Does not the gentleman believe that is a very high administrative cost for writing the amount of insurance which has been written? One hundred and sixty-six thousand policies at an administrative cost of $4,800,000 is $22.90 a policy.

Mr. FULMER. But I expect the amount of insurance to increase with the addition of cotton, and it is not to exceed that amount.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, we now have a national debt of more than $44,000,000,000, and in addition thereto about $7,000,000,000 of obligations of agencies and instrumentalities of the Government which have been guaranteed by the Federal Government. For many long years the Federal Government has been running in the red several billion dollars a year, and it is now time to act with reference to economy and retrenchment in Government expenditures as well as to talk in favor of economy, because the time is not far distant when our Federal Government will go bankrupt if we do not curb the reckless spending spree of public money. We will then have inflation, with misery, distress, despair, and chaos such as we would never believe possible.

I do not believe that the Federal Government should expand its activities in competition with private business in legitimate fields of private business endeavor. I sincerely hope that the Republican Party, which will take charge of the Federal Government after the November election, will follow the principles enunciated by the Republican Party and let the Government function along governmental lines and get out of competition with private business so that we can encourage private business to expand and prosper, to the end that the tax dollars may be furnished to keep the Government running, and to the end that unemployment may be reduced in the United States.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. COOLEY. Does the gentleman know of any private corporation that has undertaken to write an all-risk crop insurance such as is contemplated by this program?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. If we are going to write crop insurance and spend such an amount for administrative purposes to take care of writing insurance for cotton and wheat, then you should write insurance for corn and barley, and you should insure the poultry raiser and guarantee that his chickens will lay so many eggs a day, and the dairy farmer, that his cows will give so many quarts of milk a day. The Government should not operate a subsidized competition in any legitimate field of private business endeavor.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

OPPOSES SCHAFER AMENDMENT

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. The speeches that we have heard so far today from those opposing this legislation to extend crop insurance to include cotton have usually begun by saying that they favored the principle of insurance but were opposed to the pending bill. If I remember correctly, when wheat insurance was first being considered, the same opposition was voiced at that time. They were for the principle of wheat insurance but opposed to the bill. Then we were told that it was fantastic and even socialistic, according to the opposition of wheat insurance. We were told over and over that it just could not work, but I call your attention to the fact that not one Member who made the dire predictions about wheat insurance has even suggested that crop insurance as applied to wheat be repealed.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER], who has proposed the pending amendment to strike from this bill section 8, joins the other objectors in saying he is for insurance. He is for the principle of insurance, but he is opposed to section 8, which all of us know is the heart of the bill. To eliminate section 8 would destroy the bill. The most practical way to destroy any law is to eliminate the appropriation for its enforcement. No one knows that any better than does the gentleman from Wisconsin. I think it is fair to say, however, that the good-natured gentleman from Wisconsin offered the amendment in a jesting manner in order to make his usual daily outburst in opposition to anything and everything done or attempted by President Roosevelt and the national administration.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Inasmuch as I have mentioned the gentleman I yield to him.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I did not offer the amendment in a jesting manner. I offered the amendment to save $6,000,000 for our almost bankrupt Government. My amendment will not destroy the bill because you would have $6,000,000, which should be sufficient for administrative purposes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Then if the gentleman is really serious, I must say frankly I am surprised that he has his facts so twisted. Every member of the committee, regardless of whether he favors or is opposed to this bill, will agree that to take section 8 from it would definitely kill the measure. If that is not true I invite any Member to rise now and deny it.

It has been amusing to hear so many of the opponents of this measure base their opposition on the statement that wheat insurance has been such a miserable failure. Time after time the opposition has pointed to the first year's large administrative expense. No one pretends to say that administrative expense has not been high. That was naturally expected. It is still in an experimental state, but the fact that there were approximately four times as many applications from farmers, for 1940 wheat insurance as in 1939 is sufficient evidence our wheat farmers like it and that it is not the dismal failure some would have you believe. [Applause.]

Again I desire to remind members that every speaker who has taken the floor against this measure, when asked if he would favor repealing the wheat insurance, either evaded answering the question or admitted that he would not repeal the present law.

Hr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HOBBS. I will ask if the gentleman's information does not tally with that of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN], that the cost per policy was $28 on wheat insurance the first year and only $10 the second year?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That is correct.

Mr. HOBBS. And, in the second place, if it is not a fact that merely because $6,000,000 is authorized is no reason that it must be spent?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That is also correct. And I will say that in the third year the administrative cost will undoubtedly be still considerably less. And I might add that the cotton program will profit by the mistakes made in administering the wheat program.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. KEEFE. Does the gentleman conceive that the experience of 1 year under this wheat program is a sufficient guide to demonstrate that this program is a workable program, when it is conceded at the inception of the program that the whole thing was in the nature of an experiment?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Answering the gentleman, I will remind him that this cotton-insurance plan will not go into effect until 1941, at which time we will definitely have considerable additional information. There is no question but that, by 1941, it will be a decided success; not as much a success as it will be 2 or 3 or 4 years from now, but I do say that while it is still in the experimental stage, it has actually been far more successful than it was really anticipated. I further predict that cotton insurance will be even a greater success than the wheat program has been to date.

There is no question but that there was a general understanding that if wheat insurance was reasonably successful, that cotton would be added to the law. Not only that, but the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD will disclose that there was such an agreement. Now, we see the rather unusual spectacle of Members of Congress, coming largely from wheat sections, who have profited by wheat insurance, here bitterly opposing the carrying out of that agreement by extending crop insurance to include cotton. Of course, it takes gentlemen with great courage to stand here and refer to the pending bill as fantastic and socialistic, and vote against this measure when they do not produce a bale of cotton within the boundaries of their congressional districts. [Laughter.]

Some of you, who hail from the Wheat Belt and who are so active against this measure, have suggested we wait 6 years to extend crop insurance to cotton. If that were done, the opposition then would probably suggest we wait 16 years. That would be equally as logical as waiting 6 years. Six or sixteen years of the wheat-insurance program would not definitely prove or disprove anything so far as cotton is concerned. [Applause.]

In the State of Oklahoma there were only 7,079 wheat-insurance policies for the year 1939; yet in the same State, for the year 1940 there have thus far been issued 23,380 wheat-insurance policies. The same is true of other States. So it comes with poor grace and not in keeping with the facts to base the opposition to this measure on the grounds that wheat insurance has failed. Let us vote down this Schafer amendment, that has for its purpose the destruction of the pending measure, and then pass this bill and give the distressed cotton farmers a new ray of hope. [Applause.]

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I take this time for the purpose of reading a letter that I have received from one of the leading farmers in my district, because I think it represents the farmer's point of view in regard to this measure:

ATHENS, ALA., April 17, 1940.

HON. JOHN J. SPARKMAN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SPARKMAN: I want to thank you for calling my attention to your speech in regard to crop insurance. It is of much interest to me, as I have spent many unhappy hours during an extremely dry or wet season when it looked like our crops were doomed, or when a cloud was coming up and thinking perhaps we would have a hailstorm and destroy the crop.

I have often wondered why we poor farmers who have no other source of income other than our crops could not have some protection and that kind of thing would have to come through Federal Government. I have mentioned this to several county agents, but this couldn't be carried by individual counties, as the loss would cover an entire county.

I don't think any ideas I might suggest would be better than your own ideas expressed in your interesting speech.

I notice many representatives endorse your plan and I see no reasons for objections from any, whether living in the North or South.

Sincerely,

M. A. PHILLIPS.

To me, just as to that farmer, it seems that this bill is simply a good business measure to enable the farmers together to carry the burden of insurance against the hazards of crop failure.

In this connection, I want to call attention to the statement that was made a short time ago by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER], in which he referred to this as a socialistic experiment. I would like to call his attention to the fact that in the 1936 campaign the Presidential candidates for both parties endorsed the idea of crop insurance. In his Des Moines speech, reported on September 23, 1936, Mr. Landon, candidate for President on the Republican ticket had this to say:

I am now going to mention a subject that is in neither platform—crop insurance. It is a question in which we have long been interested in Kansas. In fact, some of our Republican leaders in farm legislation have been in the forefront in working it out. We realize that there are difficulties. But insurance companies are writing policies today covering risks that they did not consider feasible a few years ago. I believe that the question of crop insurance should be given the fullest attention.

In the light of that statement, I cannot see how any faithful follower of the principles of the Republican Party can claim that this is launching into a socialistic adventure. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. That said act, as amended, is further amended by redesignating section 518 as section 519, and by addition thereto of the following new section:

"SEC. 518. 'Agricultural commodity,' as used in this act, means wheat or cotton, or both, as the context may indicate."

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the Committee will now rise.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and Mr. COOPER having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. DUNCAN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6972) to amend the Federal Crop Insurance Act, and, pursuant to House Resolution 271, he reported the same back to the House with an amendment adopted in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COOPER). Under the rule the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 2635) to amend the Federal Crop Insurance Act, strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert the provisions of the House bill, H. R. 6792, as amended.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill, as amended.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I am, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Agriculture with instructions to report the same back forthwith with the following amendment: Strike out section 8.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin) there were—ayes 39, noes 98.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I respectfully object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present, and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently the count just made by the Chair shows there is not a quorum present. The roll call is automatic.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 112, nays 207, answered "present" 2, not voting 109, as follows:

WIDOWS' AND ORPHANS' BILL

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of discussing two matters that our World War veterans, their families, and other dependents are tremendously interested in.

In the first place, I desire to express my deep interest in H. R. 9000 to provide for more adequate compensation for widows and orphans and other dependents of World War veterans. This legislation, if and when enacted, will fill a long-delayed need for legislation by this Congress to, in a small measure, do its duty to the dependents of World War veterans. [Applause.]

As Members of Congress may recall, this bill was up for consideration on what is known as the Consent Calendar recently, but its passage was blocked by the objections of three Members. For several years I have been urging legislation of this kind, and I know that the American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars, and veterans throughout the country are especially interested in liberalizing the pension laws to give relief to the widows and orphans of World War veterans who up to this time have been ignored by Congress. A petition was immediately filed at the Speaker's desk in an effort to force a vote on this bill. The petition has now the required 218 signatures, which means there will be a vote on this important measure some time after May 13. I do not hesitate to predict that when the vote is taken on this important bill, that it will pass this House by an overwhelming majority. [Applause.]

Let me add that at the recent Sixth District American Legion Convention held at Chickasha, Okla., Legionnaires of the Sixth District went on record unanimously endorsing H. R. 9000 and urging that Congress enact this legislation during the present session of Congress. I feel safe in saying that the sentiment so expressed is that of a vast majority of the war veterans and their families of the entire country.

Incidentally, I was also delighted to learn that the Legionnaires of the district I have the honor to represent in Congress, in convention assembled, heartily approved of my record in Congress in support of legislation affecting the disabled World War veterans, their widows, orphans, and other dependents, according to a telegram I received from the district commander. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is one other matter I desire to discuss. I refer to a new regulation liberalizing the definition of permanent and total disability issued by General Hines, Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, which comes as a signal victory for the non-service-connected disabled veterans of the World War.

It is also a victory for the American Legion and Veterans of Foreign Wars, both of which organizations have been clamoring for such a regulation ever since the unreasonable and unjustifiable interpretation of the so-called Economy Act enacted by Congress several years ago. This interpretation has particularly been unfair to non-service-connected veterans who are rated at less than 100 percent disabled. Bill after bill has been introduced by veterans in Congress to correct these injustices, and committee after committee from the Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars have called on General Hines in an effort to do justice to these veterans who have been discriminated against under the heartless and unreasonable interpretation of the law. The new regulation not only corrects the injustices done for non-service-connected cases but it has a provision also liberalizing regulations concerning service-connected cases.

It marks another important milestone in the history of the Veterans' Administration and provides a more liberal standard for the determination of permanent and total disability as applied to veterans of the World War.

The new regulation will make it possible for thousands of unemployable disabled war veterans to be rated by local rating agencies as totally and permanently disabled, who heretofore have been unjustly discriminated against.

A service letter under date of April 2, 1940, from General Hines, which I am herewith inserting in the RECORD, will be of special interest to the World War veterans of Oklahoma and the Nation. This is especially true with reference to our disabled former service men, their widows and orphans, and dependents. The new liberalized regulation is as follows:

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION SERVICE LETTER

ADMINISTRATOR'S OFFICE,
April 2, 1940.

Subject: Total-disability ratings under Public, No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, and the 1933 rating schedule.

1. The attention of all rating agencies is directed to the following statement of policy approved this date, which is quoted herewith for the guidance of all concerned:

"Total-disability ratings under Public, No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, and the 1933 rating schedule may be assigned without regard to the specific provisions of the rating schedule, except as outlined herein, when the disabled person is, in the judgment of the rating agency, unable to secure or follow a substantially gainful occupation as a result of his disabilities: Provided, That if there is only one disability, this disability shall be ratable at 60 percent or more, and that, if there are two or more disabilities, there shall be at least one disability ratable at 40 percent or more, and sufficient additional disability to bring the combined rating to 70 percent or more. Total-disability ratings, when the above conditions are met, may be granted for deafness, the organic loss of speech, for the amputation or loss of use of either hand or of either lower extremity above the knee (as to these amputations and losses of use, when followed by continuous unemployability after incurrence), as single disabilities or for other organic disabilities or combinations, including organic disabilities. For the purpose of Veterans Regulation 1 (a), part III, only, the above specified 60-percent, 40-percent, and 70-percent percentage requirements may be reduced by 10 percent on the attainment of age 60; and by an additional 10 percent on the attainment of age 65; and there shall be no percentage requirements for total-disability ratings in the cases of unemployable veterans who have attained the age of 70. The attainment of age 70 will not of itself warrant rating as permanently and totally disabled; in addition thereto disability sufficient to produce unemployability will be required. Nothing contained in this paragraph will prevent a total-disability rating for such disabilities and combinations of disabilities, including loss of use of two extremities, or loss of sight of both eyes, or being helpless or bedridden, and other disabilities, as are assigned specific ratings of 100 percent for the severity in question, but if the disabled person is employable, compliance with the terms of the schedule for such ratings will be required. When total disability under this paragraph is under consideration, the veteran will be required to submit a statement in affidavit form covering his employment, or unemployment, over a period of at least 1 year."

2. A disabled person meeting the regulatory or schedular requirements for 100-percent ratings is entitled to a total-disability rating regardless of employment. Similarly, cases which do not meet the regulatory or schedular requirements, but which, in the opinion of the rating agency represent total disability on the average basis—i. e., whose employment represents highly exceptional effort or ability to overcome the handicap of disability—are entitled to central office consideration under R. & P. R–1142, and should be so submitted.

3. The unemployability of the individual may be established, with age, constitutional defects, limitation of occupational experience, and ability, particularly limitation to manual labor, as important contributing factors. In such cases it is important to ascertain the exact relationship between the particular manifestations of disability and resumption of work in the field of previous employment or of other types of employment. As a requirement for total-disability rating it must be established to the satisfaction of the rating agency that the disabilities are the principal cause of the continued unemployability.

4. Such inferiorities as mental deficiency, psychopathic inferiority, etc., do not of themselves indicate disability, either partial or total. When the medical industrial history and other evidence points to mental deficiency or psychopathic personality as important factors, it is essential to insure complete psychiatric examination and, if indicated, social-service report. When neuropsychiatric disease, mental deterioration, failing memory, and concentration (as with cerebral arteriosclerosis) are superimposed upon such conditions, the whole extent of social and industrial inadaptability, partial or total, in accordance with the rating schedule and paragraph 1 of this service letter, will be ascribed to the disease factor. Similarly, when injury or disease, as fracture or arthritis, is superimposed upon physical defect, the whole subsequent limitation of occupational activity resulting from the defect and the superimposed disease or injury will be ascribed to the disease or traumatism.

5. It is the policy of the Veterans' Administration to resolve the benefit of all reasonable doubt in favor of claimants, to the end that every veteran who is unable to secure and follow substantially gainful employment, with disability as the cause of such inability, will be given full consideration. Rating agencies will exercise great care in the determination of total disability and permanent and total disability to make sure that all claims are properly rated, based on the facts found. Any case in which unemployability is established, but in which the above-prescribed requirements for total-disability ratings, in service-connected cases, or for permanent total-disability ratings in non-service-connected cases are not met, will be referred to the central office, after proper development, under R. & P. R–1142.

6. Pending promulgation of the first paragraph above as a regulation, this service letter, dated April 2, 1940, will be cited as authority for ratings under its terms.

FRANK T. HINES,
Administrator of Veterans' Affairs.

MUST HAVE FLOOD CONTROL OF WASHITA RIVER BASIN

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, several days ago I inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD five resolutions adopted at a recent important meeting of the Washita Valley Improvement Association. This meeting was widely attended by leading progressive and wide-awake citizens from every county in the State of Oklahoma through which the Washita River traverses. The resolutions in question are sufficient evidence that the people along the great, rich Washita Valley and its tributaries are flood-control and water-conservation minded and that they are determined that a real, practical flood-control program must be inaugurated without further delay on the Washita River Basin.

Recently I appeared before the Flood Control Committee of the House and was accorded the privilege of making a statement reviewing some of the history of the fight of our people for flood control and water conservation in this basin, at which time I also stated my position very definitely on any flood-control program to be promulgated, and I trust started, by the Federal Government on the Washita. My recent statement before the Flood Control Committee of the House is as follows:

Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to have the opportunity of appearing before the Flood Control Committee of the House at this time in support of a flood-control and water-conservation program for the great fertile Washita River Basin.

Having served on the Flood Control Committee several years ago with your distinguished and able chairman, and having visited many of the flood-control areas, including the Mississippi from Cary, Ill., to New Orleans, I feel that I have gathered considerable first-hand information concerning the many perplexing flood-control problems throughout the country.

May I further preface my remarks by saying that during the years I was privileged to serve on this committee, I advocated persistently the construction of comparatively small dams on the upper tributaries of the Mississippi as a practical and certain permanent solution to our flood-control problems so far as the Mississippi Basin is concerned. This area, as you know, drains about 30 States.

In the past, I have appeared before this committee in behalf of an authorization for a series of dams including the Canton Dam, in Blaine County, Okla. That dam and some others have heretofore been authorized, and I am advised by the Army engineers that actual construction will start on the Canton Dam sometime during the summer of 1940. I have also in the past expressed my interest and deep concern in the Washita, which heads in the Panhandle of Texas and traverses through western Oklahoma in a southeastern direction and empties into the Red River near the proposed Denison Dam, a distance of over 500 air miles and, of course, several times as many river miles.

In the Washita Valley Basin there are over 450,000 acres of land as fertile as the Nile. This rich basin includes the most thickly populated rural area of the State of Oklahoma. The side hills along the Washita Valley are sandy and fast eroding, as these hillsides are practically all in cultivation. This erosion has become so serious that it is fast filling up the Washita River with sand, silt, and mud that finds its way to the main stream of the Washita from its hundreds of small tributaries. Within the past several years we have seen some devastating floods on the Washita and we shudder to contemplate what another major flood would mean on this river.

Several years ago while serving as a member of the Flood Control Committee of the House, I began to hound this committee and the Army engineers in an effort to secure a real comprehensive flood-control survey on the Washita River. At first the Army engineers were very cool to the suggestion. In fact, they appeared to be interested only in the lower Mississippi, but the people in the Washita Valley were flood-control minded and determined that the Federal Government should not continue to ignore the Washita.

A few years ago a meeting was called in Chickasha, Okla., by those interested in the flood control on the Washita River. I urged the then Chief of the Army Engineers to send one of the high-ranking Army engineers to this meeting who would be in a position to speak with some authority. A well-known engineer from the Vicksburg office attended the meeting.

When it was suggested by our representative citizens that a series of small dams be constructed on the tributaries of the Washita as a practical means of controlling floods on Red River and ultimately the Mississippi, the Army engineer ridiculed the suggestion and actually had the unmitigated gall to state publicly to our farmers and businessmen assembled that a series of dams on the tributaries of the Washita River, if constructed, would have no effect whatever on the floods of the lower Mississippi River.

Perhaps this Army engineer had read the report of the first alleged preliminary survey of the Army engineers of 1909 (H. Doc. 209–61–2), which was everything but favorable to a flood-control program on the Washita. Or he may have looked up the discussion of another purported survey of 1917 on Red River and its tributaries (H. Doc. 848–65–2), which was also unfavorable.

I am glad to state, however, Mr. Chairman, that the policy of the Army engineers in general has undergone a considerable change in recent years. Under the able leadership of General Schley and his excellent Corps of Engineers they are now advocating a much more practical flood-control program than they formerly did by the construction of just such dams as they or their predecessors ridiculed a few years ago.

In 1934 the Army engineers started the first comprehensive survey ever made on the Washita and its tributaries. A report of that survey is contained in the Army engineers report of the Washita under date of December 2, 1935, on Red River and its tributaries (H. Doc. 378–74–2).

Of course, there have been several surveys made by the Army Engineers and other governmental agencies on the Washita River since those alleged surveys of 1909 and 1917, which were, in fact, no real surveys at all, but more or less a statement of the then unfavorable policy of dams on tributaries of small streams. I am advised, however, by General Schley and others in the office of the Army engineers, that a recent detailed survey has been made on the Washita from the mouth at Denison to where it heads not far from the New Mexico line. I am told that this survey is now complete in every detail and that it will be in the Washington office soon. I am hopeful, of course, that it will contain sufficient information and recommendations that this committee will feel amply justified in including the entire Washita basin in any flood-control authorization bill that may be passed by this Congress.

I might add here that in the several preliminary surveys that have been made by the Corps of Army Engineers some 24 or 25 dams have been surveyed on tributaries of the Washita. I am, of course, hopeful that all of these dams will be included and recommended by this final permanent survey of the Army engineers, as well as that of another important survey recently completed by the Department of Agriculture.

Of course, I do not anticipate that it would be practical to start construction on all 25 dams at one time, but I am hopeful that final reports of both the Army engineers and the Department of Agriculture may recommend the starting of the construction of at least three or four small dams on tributaries of the Washita at once. May I further express the hope that the Army engineers' report does not recommend any large dams on the lower main stream of the Washita, for even a layman knows that such large expensive dams are impractical. Furthermore, they are not desired by our citizens.

I believe I stated a moment ago that several agencies have made surveys on this basin. I know that the Soil Conservation Service has had men on the Washita surveying the situation, not only for small dams but in an effort to formulate a program of building check dams and terraces along the entire Washita Valley. In addition to that the Soil Conservation Service has, so I am advised, taken pictures of practically every section of land along the Washita from Denison Dam to the Texas Panhandle line. The Bureau of Agricultural Economics has also had their experts on the Washita, and as I understand, have one small project in operation near Cheyenne, in an effort to experiment on erosion control.

It is my understanding that the Department of Agriculture, in its final report of the Washita Basin has or will recommend the construction of some 24 or 25 small dams on the tributaries of the Washita, and that this report will recommend starting actual construction on at least 3 or 4 of these proposed dams at an early date. One dam near Cheyenne, one on Cobb Creek in Caddo County, and another further down the stream on Rush Creek, a few miles from the Grady-Garvin County line. Included in that report I feel sure will also be recommendation of a dam on the Little Washita in Grady County. It is my understanding that all of the 24 or 25 dams, if constructed by the Department of Agriculture, would cost a total of $30,000,000. The dams proper would cost approximately $14,500,000, and the watershed treatment of erosion control about $15,000,500.

Since I have made reference to Denison Dam, let me say to this committee that I have made it plain, publicly and privately, that Denison Dam is not my pet project; nor is it a separate project with a separate appropriation, as some seem to think, but it is part of a flood-control program for the entire State of Oklahoma. However, as this committee knows, Congress has authorized $54,000,000 for Denison Dam. Since that authorization was made the Army engineers have lowered the spillway elevation several feet and in so doing have effected a saving of some $5,500,000. Since the recently discovered oil field above Denison Dam it may be practical to further lower the dam or spillway a few or several feet. I maintain that all of the $5,500,000 saving made, and any further amounts that may be saved by any alterations in the dam or spillway, should by all means be spent on the Washita and other tributaries above Denison. In this connection I refer members of this committee to H. R. 10618, Seventy-fifth Congress, third session. This act authorizing Denison Dam specifically provides that any benefits that can be assigned from the Denison project shall be reserved for projects in Oklahoma, such as the Altus project and on other tributary streams to Red River

I might say here, Mr. Chairman, that at my urgent suggestion the Reclamation Service also sent several of its experts to the Washita to make a survey of the practicability of a reclamation project in that great basin. It appears that all of the preliminary work has been done by the various Federal agencies and that it is up to this committee to make the next move, and I sincerely hope that before this Congress adjourns the Flood Control Committee of this House will include the great Washita basin in any flood-control bill that may be presented to Congress. I am sure our people are not particularly interested in which agency of the Government actually constructs the proposed dams on the Washita basin as long as they are properly located and, of course, properly constructed. As I stated a moment ago, the farmers, businessmen, and citizens generally along this great fertile valley are flood-control conscious. Our people want action before another devastating flood sweeps down that valley, bringing the destruction of life and property in its wake. They see millions of dollars spent in other areas and wonder why the Washita has been thus neglected.

Only recently there was organized at Chickasha, Okla., what is known as the Washita Valley Improvement Association. Mr. Otto Wray, of Fort Cobb, Okla., is the president of that association, and Lula K. Pratt, of Cheyenne, is secretary-treasurer. The vice presidents are Dick Longmire, of Pauls Valley; R. L. Wheeler, of Chickasha; Wesley Phillips, of Foss. Tom G. Gann, of Ninnekah, is chairman of the board of directors, which is made up of some of the leading businessmen and farmers of the Washita basin.

Judge R. L. Lawrence, of Anadarko, and George Wingo, of Fort Cobb, are among our leading citizens who have pioneered in advocating a real flood-control program for the entire Washita basin. Of course, there are many others whose names I should like to mention. I am advised by Don McBride, State engineer, who has rendered outstanding service in helping to get that valley organized, that there are now over 700 enthusiastic members of the Washita Valley Improvement Association.

This organization covers 18 counties along the Washita River Basin. May I call your attention to resolutions adopted by this association under date of February 29, 1940, which resolutions I placed in the Appendix of the RECORD, page 1663. These resolutions are very specific in their recommendations. They point out in no uncertain terms that the flood problems can be solved by the construction of small dams on the tributaries. This is especially true as applied to the Washita. I know full well that the citizens of this great valley would vigorously oppose the construction of large flood-control dams on the main stream of the Washita as a solution to the flood problem. That would be no solution at all. Such a method of flood control, which Army engineers have heretofore recommended, would defeat the purpose of the undertaking by inundating the alluvial lands in the valley and driving thousands of farmers out. I said a few moments ago that I hoped the Army engineers would not again recommend the construction of one or more large dams on the lower stream of the Washita. To actually construct 4 large dams on the main stream of the Washita and ignore the 25 small proposed dams on its tributaries would not begin to solve our problem, but would only add to the present serious problems in that great valley. It would flood thousands of acres of fertile lands and add an unreasonable burden in relocation and rehabilitation of our farm population.

Mr. Chairman, I am extremely anxious to get a real flood-control program started on the Washita at the earliest possible date, but I give notice now that, irrespective of what the Army engineers' final report on the Washita may recommend, as a Representative in Congress from one of the congressional districts affected in Oklahoma, that I shall continue to oppose any impractical, absurd, expensive, and out-of-date theory of flood control that would propose a series of four or more large dams on the main stream of the Washita River rather than a large number of small dams on its tributaries.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include therein a statement I made before the House Committee on Flood Control.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I take this time to find out what the program will be for next week.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Monday is District of Columbia day.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Does the Speaker know what bill the Committee on the District of Columbia intends to bring in?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. I do not.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On Tuesday the bill called the Army promotion bill will come up under a rule. On Wednesday the memorial services will be held, and there will be nothing else on that day. The remainder of the week will be devoted to the consideration of the so-called amendments to the Wage-Hour Act.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McKEOUGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a newspaper article with relation to the earnings of the industrial corporations of the country in 1939, which recently appeared in a Chicago newspaper.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the previous order of the House the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER] is recognized for 45 minutes.

THE WIDOWS' AND ORPHANS' PENSION BILL

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, thanks to the generosity of the House, I was permitted yesterday to address the House out of order during consideration of the rule on the bill just passed. For that reason I do not intend to take more than 2 or 3 minutes of the 45 minutes allotted to me this afternoon, as I discussed at quite some length the bill, H. R. 9000, and under permission granted I have extended those remarks and will insert them in the RECORD today.

However, I want to reply briefly to the remarks made by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation. During his remarks yesterday he pointed out or said that he knew there were a lot of large income-tax payers in Connecticut. I interrupted him and asked him if he thought that was a fair question, and his answer was, "Yes; it was a fair question, because he felt that the opposition to this bill was coming from outside influences." I regret exceedingly that the chairman of that important committee should take that attitude. I knew the chairman of that committee by reputation long before I came to the House. I have appeared before his committee as a private citizen and as a representative of the American Legion, and I think the records of his own committee will prove that I have appeared here, and I came down here at my own expense to plead before his committee for certain veterans' legislation. It is the first time since the organization of the American Legion that, because of deep and abiding conviction, I have felt compelled to oppose legislation proposed by the Legion, and it is a sorry day for the American Legion if any member of that organization is to have his motives questioned because he sees fit to oppose the provisions of legislation they have introduced, and I regret that the chairman should have no higher regard for my integrity than to imply to the Members of this House that in opposing this legislation I am concerned about any financial institutions in my own district, and I want the RECORD to show that I say on my honor as a Member of this House that no representative and no employee and, to the best of my knowledge, nobody directly or indirectly connected with any financial institution in my own district of anywhere else has ever even discussed with me the provisions of this bill or suggested in any shape or form that I should oppose this legislation. I am opposing it on my own authority and because of my own convictions. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the special order of the House, the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take just one-half minute to say that I did not agree yesterday afternoon with the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER] in his views regarding the so-called widows' and orphans' bill because I favor its passage; I do want to say, however, that the courage and the integrity of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER] cannot be questioned. He is intellectually honest, intellectually courageous, and physically courageous. He is a living example, Mr. Speaker, of courage, and a great example to all of us. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein correspondence with Mr. Kraft, of the Kraft Cheese Co.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

There was no objection.

SENATE

MONDAY, APRIL 22, 1940

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God and Father of us all, in whom is our hope, our joy, and from whom is our inspiration: Be graciously pleased to keep in the hollow of Thine hand the destiny and welfare of America. At this sacred moment of approach to Thee we invoke Thine especial blessings upon our President, Vice President, the Members of the Congress, the judiciary, and all others in authority, that they may be earnest in their personal devotion to the high demands of character, generous and free in public service and in the promotion of the noble causes of mankind. As a people give to us the vision of truth that no falsehood can defeat; of right that no wrong can crush; of goodness that no evil can overpower, for we know that Thou art on the side of every soul that seeks the righteous life and joins Thee in service for the coming of Thy kingdom. Thus, in these dark and difficult days, we acknowledge Thee to be the Lord, and bless Thee for the hope of a world redeemed, for the dream that hears again the song of the morning stars and the shout of the sons of God that shall herald the new creation of love and peace in the hearts of men. In our dear Redeemer's name we ask it. Amen.

ARTICLE BY HERBERT HOOVER ON RECOGNITION OF SOVIET RUSSIA

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, ex-President Herbert Hoover, writing in the current Collier's Weekly, defines our recognition of Soviet Russia as a gigantic political and moral mistake. I wholly agree with him. He thinks the least we should do about it is to sever our ambassadorial relations. Again I agree, as I have repeatedly stated on the floor of the Senate. But whether we all agree in detail or not, there certainly must be new acknowledgment that treachery and seduction—the old Trojan horse technique—are now glaringly seen as favorite weapons of the Berlin-Moscow axis. Such being the case, America is put on stern, sharp notice to review her own potential jeopardies in this respect, and one of the greatest of these jeopardies is our acknowledged infiltration of world revolutionists under inspiration and orders from Moscow, in direct and contemptuous violation of the Litvinoff-Roosevelt agreement of 1933.

Our national defense is not alone a matter of ships and men. It is equally a matter of excising the roots of internal treason. It "can happen here." Eternal vigilance is the price of peace.

I ask that Mr. Hoover's discussion of what he calls Russian Misadventure be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the article will be printed in the RECORD.

The article is as follows:

[From Collier's Weekly of April 27, 1940]

RUSSIAN MISADVENTURE

(By Herbert Hoover)

The safety and defense of the United States in a world armed to the teeth does not wholly consist of being properly armed ourselves nor of maintaining our neutrality in the present wars.

It depends upon maintaining the respect of other nations. It depends upon our giving vigorous moral support to decent standards of conduct between nations. It depends upon our freedom from the pitfalls of power politics. It depends upon our keeping free of propaganda and interference in our domestic affairs by foreign governments and foreign ideologies.

In other words, our safety and defense depends greatly upon the wisdom of our foreign policies.

In these lights I propose to analyze Mr. Roosevelt's recognition of the Communist Government of Soviet Russia, and its consequences to the American people and to mankind.

The events of the past 6 months have further illuminated this policy and point to two major reasons for a reexamination now.

Errors in foreign policies often cannot be fully corrected. But because errors are made is no sign that nothing can be done about it. When we see that the consequences result in continued disintegration of decent standards in the world and at home, we should at least reassert our position on these standards.

The recognition of Russia is a test of statesmanship. With two-thirds of the world at war, vast problems will arise daily, the solution of which will determine our peace abroad and our peace at home. The capacity and judgment in the past should be examined before we elect leadership for the difficult years before us.

Recognition or nonrecognition of new governments and the exchange of ambassadors or ministers is one of the protections to international decency that nations have developed over centuries. These measures are not merely to provide afternoon teas for cooky pushers in foreign service or avenues for the red tape of ponderous verbiage in communications. These are measures designed to safeguard nations from grave consequences.

At once let me make it quite clear that in analyzing the recognition of Russia and its consequences I am not advocating war with Russia. Nor am I advocating that we in the remotest degree interfere with the internal affairs of Russia. That is the business of Russia alone.

When our neighbors choose to live a life of disrepute, we do not shoot them up. But we can hold up the moral and social standards in the community a little better if we do not associate with them. Or take part in their parties. Or invite them into our homes. Or present them to our children.

Recognition of new governments is thus more than a reestablishment of legalistic or trade relations. It is a sign that we believe they are respectable members of the family of nations. It gives to them right of entry into our homes. It gives them a recommendation to our neighbors.

Further, let me say that I am not interested in "red" baiting. I have no anxiety that the Communists will pull off a Communist revolution in the United States. That is not what happens. What does happen is that a people get annoyed and indignant over Communist sabotage of national life and poisoning of the wells of liberty. Then in a rage they go Fascist and put the Communists down by cruelty and violence. Or in milder form they go vigilante. Both of these reactions are the defeat of liberty. That is the Communist contribution to the abandonment of democracy in a number of nations outside Russia. Communism everywhere has paved the way for fascism. And daily we see the two systems approach the same form of sheer tyranny and despotism.

We may summarize some first-hand history.

For a number of years before the Great War I, as an American engineer, practiced my profession in Russia. In the building of large industrial works I came to know only too well the sufferings of a people under the Czarist despotism. I came to know the gentle character of the great mass of the Russian people. I knew their strivings toward better family and community life. I saw their rising aspirations of liberty. I saw their frustrations against the repression of an intolerable aristocracy.

Finally, in 1916, due to the internal demoralization of the Great War, the Czar was compelled to recall the Parliament (the Duma) of the people to ward off rebellion. At that I rejoiced. In March 1917 the courageous men of this Parliament overthrew the Czarist government. These were not Communists—they were liberal-minded patriots. They created a representative republic under Kerensky. I felt that even the dreadful losses of the Great War might have compensations in the glow of rising liberty that dawned across the bleak Russian steppes.

In November 1917, however, the Communists, as the Bolshevik Party, in cooperation with Czarist forces, overthrew the democratic government. A bloody curtain descended upon the Russian people. The hope of liberty in Russia had been assassinated. The four modern Horsemen of Hate, Terror, Atheism, and Imperialism were started on the march in the world.

MASSACRE, NOT REVOLUTION

The Communist revolution was not a revolt against the Czarist regime. It was a massacre under the softer word "liquidation" of all the liberal men and liberal women in Russia. Nearly every member of those brave parliaments who raised the banner of liberty against the Czarist regime was executed without a semblance of justice or compassion. The remaining few still live in exile abroad.

Incidentally, this Communist Government deserted the United States in the Great War and gave support to our enemy.

We move on to 1919.

With the armistice arose the question of the recognition of the Communist Government of Russia by the United States. President Wilson requested from me a memorandum upon the matter. It contained these lines:

"* * * The Bolsheviki most certainly represent a minority * * * as such they constitute a tyranny that is the negation of democracy * * * they have resorted to terror, bloodshed, and murder to a degree long since abandoned even amongst reactionary tyrannies. * * * We cannot even remotely recognize this murderous tyranny * * * without transgressing on every national ideal of our own. * * *"

Woodrow Wilson, in fact, needed no such advice. In August 1920 his views and those of the Democratic Party were ably reviewed by Secretary of State Bainbridge Colby—which I condense:

"* * * at the moment when the work of creating a popular representative government based upon universal suffrage was nearly completed, the Bolsheviki * * * an inconsiderable minority of the people, by force and cunning seized the powers and machinery of government, and have continued to use them with savage oppression. * * *

"* * * The responsible spokesmen * * * have declared that * * * the very existence of bolshevism * * * depends * * * upon revolution in all the other great civilizations, including the United States.

"Moreover, it is within the knowledge of the Government of the United States that * * * the Third International * * * is heavily subsidized by the Bolshevist Government from the public revenues of Russia, has for its openly avowed aim the promotion of the Bolshevist revolution throughout the world.

"* * * There can be no confidence * * * if pledges are to be given * * * with a cynical repudiation * * * already in the mind of one of the parties.

"We cannot recognize * * * a government which is determined and bound to conspire against our institutions."

IN THE NAME OF HUMANITY

And now we come to 1921, and the 12 years of Republican administrations.

A great famine descended upon south Russia. The lives of 20,000,000 people were threatened. This famine was in large part due to the undermining of national productivity by the Communist Government. But the Communist leaders appealed to America in the name of humanity. They had expropriated hundreds of millions of American savings invested in Russia. They had repudiated their debt to our Government. But we, being a democracy, listened only to the cry for compassion. We had no desire to punish the Russian people for the wickedness of their oppressors. It fell to me to organize and direct the distribution of more than $75,000,000 worth of American food to those helpless people. We saved the lives of those millions.

And now, after all these years, opens a revealing incident. It appears, from disclosures before the Dies Committee, that during that famine, under a false-front organization, "The Friends of Soviet Russia," absolutely controlled from Moscow, the Communists in the United States in competition with the American relief organizations raised $1,000,000 from the American public for relief of Russia. They now confess that they never sent a cent to Russia but used it for Communist propaganda in the United States. There is no better commentary on the morals or cruelty of the Soviet Government.

During this period from 1919 to 1933 the Moscow Government was busy everywhere in the effort to destroy democratic governments. These destructions were a large part of the rise of nazi-ism in Germany and of fascism in Italy. In England Soviet officials were arrested and expelled for conspiracy against the Government.

The Republican administrations for 12 years refused to give the Soviet Government recognition, despite constant propaganda on its part and that of its fellow travelers.

During this time we held to the ground, first, that the Communist Government of Russia, with its foundations in cruelty, terror, destruction of liberty and religion, and murder, should not be given the dignity and respectability of recognition from freemen. Such recognition would increase its destructive power against all free nations and all freemen.

Second, that such recognition would open the floodgates of Russian-subsidized Communist propaganda and conspiracy upon the American people.

And third, we knew from a thousand evidences that promises were valueless from a government that openly flaunted all the decencies of men.

While it was not our business, yet such recognition would further cement the hold of 2,000,000 Communists upon 150,000,000 suffering people in their own country.

Thus four Presidents and four Secretaries of State concurred in these views.

We move on to November 16, 1933.

On that date President Roosevelt recognized Soviet Russia.

The same conditions still prevailed in Russia as when President Wilson denied recognition and they had been confirmed by 14 years of bloody terror. They had been confirmed by the constant effort of Moscow to destroy democratic government everywhere.

Upon that recognition by President Roosevelt there was this explicit agreement:

"* * * the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics (agree) to respect scrupulously * * * to refrain from interfering in any manner in the internal affairs of the United States * * * to refrain and to restrain all persons * * * under its direct or indirect control * * * from any act * * * liable in any way whatsoever to injure the tranquillity, prosperity, order, or security * * * or any organization or propaganda * * * in any part of the United States, its Territories, or possessions. * * * Not to permit the formation * * * of any organization or group * * * which has as an aim the overthrow * * * of the political or social order * * * of the United States. * * *".

President Roosevelt in announcing this great step said:

"I trust that our nations henceforth may cooperate for their mutual benefit and for the preservation of the peace of the world."

SIX YEARS OF OUR GOOD NEIGHBOR

We move on to 1940 and inspect the consequences.

We have now had 6 years of these good-neighbor relations with the Soviet Government.

Overnight we were flooded with conspiracy to overthrow our institutions. The number of actual members of the Communist Party in our country increased at once by 100 percent. But these numbers were trivial. Of more importance is that under the sympathetic attitude of this recognition a score of camouflaged fellow-traveler and front organizations grew apace, controlled by inner cells of Communists. A dozen of them have been exposed, which influenced ideas among millions of people who did not know their origins and control. I need not relate the whole horrid chapter.

As to the fidelity of the Communist Government to its agreement, the unanimous report of the Dies committee, based upon exhaustive research and testimony, says:

"* * * The Communist Party is a foreign conspiracy masked as a political party. * * * The party's activities constitute a violation of the treaty of recognition."

That is the one made by President Roosevelt in 1933. The report continues:

"* * * The Communist Party under instructions from the Comintern (Moscow) has from time to time pursued policies in direct violation of the laws of the United States. * * * Moscow has from the very beginning of the Communist Party in the United States supplied the party here with funds for its subversive activities."

Now, let us look at the Communist Government at work against nations of freemen in its "cooperating * * * for the preservation of the peace of the world."

On August 22, 1939, the world was startled by an alliance of Fascist Hitler and Communist Stalin. This was no surprise to thinking people to whom the blood brotherhood was well known. It was embarrassing to a vast number of pseudoliberals who had tried to envisage fascism as the sole living devil of civilization.

Nine days after this junction these governments simultaneously attacked independent Poland. They destroyed the freedom of a great people.

Fourteen days later the independence of Latvia and Estonia was destroyed.

We move on again for 60 days. On November 30 last came the unprovoked attack by Russia upon little Finland. Here the might of 160,000,000 Russians was thrown against 3,500,000 peace-loving and liberty-loving Finns. Do I need to describe these scenes? Where before in all civilized time has the slaughter of women and children been applied in an attempt to force the surrender of courageous men?

Is all this "cooperation for the peace of the world"?

We may explore certain other consequences of this recognition of Soviet Russia directly upon American life.

As a sop for the recognition, an appeal was made to the cupidity of the American people. We were told in 1933 that upon this recognition Russia would buy a vast amount of American goods. A good part of American business was brought to support recognition by huge promises of new business.

What is the record? During the almost exactly 6 years from the day of Russian recognition down to the day Poland was attacked we sold a total of about $200,000,000 worth of goods to 160,000,000 people in Russia. That is less than 7 percent of what we sold 10,000,000 people in Canada in the same period. It is a curious commentary that in the 6 years prior to the recognition we sold Russia almost $500,000,000, or more than twice as much.

The copybooks one time said that good does not come out of evil.

Nor should I neglect to mention another item. Prior to 1934 we refused to allow the import of Russian gold. Since recognition we have bought directly and indirectly over $300,000,000 in gold from Russia at $35 per ounce. A large part of this gold is produced by the bleeding fingers of hundreds of thousands of farmers who have been condemned to Siberia for no reason but that they wanted to farm their own farms. That gold is produced by forced labor. It helps the Soviet Government finance the destruction of small nations.

And another commentary on this whole bloody trade is that in the 5 months since Poland was attacked our sales of goods to Russia have increased 300 percent. That represents a large addition of gasoline, copper, alloys, etc., to aid in the subjugation of the liberties of the Finns and the Poles or other peoples.

LABOR PAYS THE PRICE

But there are still more overriding consequences. One result of recognition of the Soviet Government is its interference in American domestic life.

That recognition in 1933 was vigorously protested by such responsible leaders of American labor as William Green, John Frey, Matthew Woll, and others as endangering the whole American labor movement. It was protested by thinking men and women everywhere.

Benjamin Stolberg, in a notable article a few months ago, gave an illuminating exposure of the subsequent Communist penetration of American labor unions under Moscow's direction and the consequences:

"They organize whispering campaigns of unprintable character-assassination against critics. They bring pressure to bear on every worker. * * * In unions which have employment departments they never send a known anti-Communist to a job. * * * They try their best to get him fired. * * * Their two principal techniques are organized confusion and organized terrorism. * * * The Communists have never hesitated either to break strikes or to precipitate irresponsible walk-outs. * * * The Communists called almost 200 unauthorized sit-downs."

Similar evidence has been given by labor leader after labor leader struggling on one hand to maintain the fundamentals of free men against the Communists and on the other to maintain the rights of labor with employer.

The free speech and free press that are essential to liberty give the Communists the full right to expound a fantastic philosophy under which free speech would be suppressed. But they have not been content with peaceful exposition. They have repeatedly organized disturbances of the public order as a means of propaganda.

Hunger marches of well-fed men, stimulating riots, were a specialty of the Communist front unemployed councils in various parts of the country.

THE TRUTH ABOUT THE BONUS MARCH

It is now established by their own confessions that it was the Communist front Workmen's Ex-Service League that organized the bonus march of deluded veterans on Washington. After Congress had refused their proposals and the administration had paid the fare home of all veterans who had come in good faith, the Communists provoked attacks upon the police in the streets of the National Capital. At that time we identified hundreds of Communists among them who were not veterans at all.

The District authorities finally demanded troops to prevent the killing of men in these riots. After the troops took charge not one shot was fired, not one man injured.

The lie that a Republican administration had slaughtered innocent veterans of the American Army was made a part of the campaign in 1932.

These are only samples.

There has been much interference in our American political life. Not content to follow Democratic processes by organizing their own open political party and seeking change of government through the ballot, they, their fellow travelers, and their false-front organizations have been active within other political parties. I do not for a moment suggest that the New Deal is Communist. But it has neither refused their aid nor properly exorcised them from New Deal support. It is unnecessary to recite the now publicly known labors of Earl Browder, Moscow, and the Communist press to attain this end.

And not the least of their services were as distributors of sewer literature, lies, smears, slander, and libel, with which they flooded the ignorant. They emerged into the role of organized poisoners of the minds of the American people.

If it were not for the back drop of tragedy there might be grim humor in President Roosevelt's wishes and warm congratulations to the Soviet Government on its seventeenth anniversary.

Of far deeper importance than all this is the corruption of the spirit of liberalism itself. The basic philosophy of our national life is liberalism in its historic sense. The first pillars of liberalism are intellectual and spiritual liberty. That is freedom of thought, speech, press, and worship. Through representative government, equality of rights, government by law, not by men, we sought that minorities and individuals may live in security. Around this structure were built all the details of justice, of trial by jury, of regulation against oppression and exploitation.

Essential to intellectual and spiritual liberty is also economic freedom. That is the right of men to choose their own jobs, to undertake their own adventures, to receive and enjoy the reward of their own efforts, to save for their families and for their old age.

We stand for economic liberty, for free enterprise regulated to prevent abuse, not because it is a property system or a capitalist system or a profit system or a chamber of commerce slogan. We are for it because we know that it is inseparable from intellectual and spiritual freedom. It has been proved a thousand times that economic liberty cannot be suppresed without suppressing every other liberty. And the most monumental proof of all time is communism, and its great exemplar is Soviet Russia.

Liberalism calls for more than even intellectual, spiritual, and economic liberty and the security of these rights. It calls for respect for the dignity of men. It calls for the development of the individual character in men and women, free of fear and filled with hope. It calls for mercy, for compassion, for tolerance. It holds that the sum of individual accomplishments and character of men makes the sum of human progress.

Having stated these perhaps commonplaces of liberalism, does anything of this sort exist in Russia under communism?

What have been the reflexes of this clash in fundamentals upon American liberalism? We have always possessed a large group of sympathetic, idealistic minds who are impatient with the slow and ofttimes discouraging processes of democracy in remedy of injustices. They sincerely welcome each new human hope.

From the outbreak of communism in Russia, the ranks of American liberals were at once split. A considerable group gave sympathy and credulity to the Communist revolution, sincerely believing it was the new hope for Russia. Soon they were justifying every atrocity, every phase of this despotism. From the gradual drinking of this poison men who believed themselves liberals fell into support of collectivism in some form. At once went up the cry of "Recognize Russia." It became a slogan whereby those who did not bow down were denounced as reactionary.

In any event we have seen a strange hybrid that can be called "totalitarian liberalism." We have seen it in so-called liberal publications. We have seen it in some college professors. We have seen it in some misled youth. We have seen it in the Halls of Congress. We have seen statism planted in the American Government.

THE NEED AND THE REMEDY

This attitude of the mind—the belief that the expansion of Government dictation creates liberty—appears to be the philosophy of these "totalitarian liberals."

And yet many such people become indignant if one suggests they are not liberals. Some of them in the past few months have drawn back in horror from the picture now exposed. Our newspaper columns are full of explanations, and some forthright apologies.

Today the need among intellectuals in the United States is to conserve liberalism from this totalitarian aberration. For a demon has entered into the minds of many liberal men and women that, like the demon of the Gadarene swine, will plunge them and us over a precipice.

What does all this add up to?

Soviet Russia, since the New Deal formally granted recognition to Stalin's government, has been poisoning vigorously the intellectual and spiritual life of this country. Moscow has maintained in this country a vast propaganda machine, not to make us friendly to Russia, but to control and dominate the political and economic life of America. It seeks to foment race hatred among those of our own citizens whom they call the minorities—that is, the Negroes and the foreign-born. It seeks to stir up class hatred among the American people.

Soviet Russia, through this machine, seeks to influence the attitude of the United States in its relations to other countries that would involve us in power politics.

The facts that I have related become plainer every day. Yet we are holding in friendship the red hand that grabbed a part of Poland and forced a treaty that despoiled Finland.

The recognition of Soviet Russia was a gigantic political and moral mistake. It was not a mistake proved from change of circumstance. It was a mistake obvious from the beginning.

Would it not establish self-respect, would it not contribute to reestablish moral standards in a sorry world, if we took some action?

To withdraw technical recognition at this time of a world aflame might be misinterpreted as warlike. But the moral equities would be at least reasserted if we withdrew our Ambassador and left the technical representation of a chargé d'affaires. Why are we more tender of tyranny in Communist Russia than in Nazi Germany?

We criticize some of our youth because we say they are "red." We criticize certain labor unions because we say that they are dominated by Communists. We arrest certain Americans because they serve Soviet Russia in this country illegally. Yet we do not stop to think that it was our own Government that set the mark of respectability on Soviet Russia and the things these people advocate.

PHOSPHATE RESOURCES

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 199) amending Public Resolution 112 of the Seventy-fifth Congress, and Public Resolution 48 of the Seventy-sixth Congress, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. May we have an explanation of the joint resolution? It was reported by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES].

Mr. KING. Let it go over.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] wanted to make a statement about the joint resolution. He is not here. I suggest that it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

Mr. BYRNES subsequently said: I ask unanimous consent to return to Senate Joint Resolution 199, which was passed over only a few moments ago. I make that request because the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] may not return before the call of the calendar has been completed.

The joint resolution, which was reported from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, simply provides for an extension of time within which the Joint Congressional Committee to Investigate the Adequacy and Use of the Phosphate Resources of the United States can report its findings. The joint resolution does not appropriate any additional money. It simply extends the time for the filing of the committee's report.

Mr. KING. It does not continue in force the authority and power of the committees to hold hearings and make investigations, but merely extends the time within which it shall report?

Mr. BYRNES. That is all.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Senate will return to the joint resolution.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 199) was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the life of the committee provided for by Public Resolution No. 112 of the Seventy-fifth Congress creating a Joint Congressional Committee to Investigate the adequacy and Use of the Phosphate Resources of the United States, and Public Resolution No. 48 of the Seventy-sixth Congress, and the time for making its final report is extended to January 15, 1941.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the Committee on Claims, in reporting the bill, state that after looking into it carefully they believe that it is very meritorious, and should be approved. Mr. Crossman was at maneuvers held by the National Guard, and while in the line of duty he sustained these injuries.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, did the Department recommend the passage of the bill?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Secretary of War did not recommend it, but the Committee on Claims had his recommendation before it when it passed on the matter.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let the bill go over, if the Secretary did not recommend its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

EXTENSION OF COMMODITY EXCHANGE ACT TO HIDES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2377) to amend the Commodity Exchange Act as amended, to extend its provisions to hides, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the third sentence of subsection (a) of section 2 of the Commodity Exhange Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows: "The word 'commodity' shall mean wheat, cotton, rice, corn, oats, barley, rye, flaxseed, grain sorghums, mill feeds, butter, eggs, Solanum tuberosum (Irish potatoes), wool tops, and hides."

Mr. BARKLEY. May we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I shall be very glad to explain the bill. It is a measure to put hides under the Commodity Exchange Act. That is all that the bill proposes to do. It is endorsed by the Acting Secretary of Agriculture and by all the Government authorities concerned.

When other commodities were put under regulation hides were left out. Speculation developed in hides which caused a very abnormal price situation. The bill, if enacted into law, would subject hides to the same type of regulation. It would result in the consumer paying less and the producer receiving a better price, and I think would be satisfactory to all concerned.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. The fact that the bill originated in the Senate gives assurance that it does not in any way look toward free trade in hides. I am very much opposed to any movement being taken looking toward the reduction of the tariff duty on hides.

Mr. LODGE. I can assure the Senator that such an idea is furthest from my mind.

Mr. ASHURST. I was about to say, the fact that it is a Senate bill gives such assurance. But we have to be on guard for it will be recalled that a leading Republican statesman of bygone days, a man of transcendent genius and great power, was always eager to have free trade in hides. I refer to James G. Blaine. I am opposed to any movement looking toward free trade in hides or any other product of the farm. I have not had time to examine the bill, but I am glad to take the assurance of the able Senator from Massachusetts that it will assist the cattle raisers in getting a higher price for the hides he produces.

Mr. LODGE. I think that would be the result. I am not so eloquent a protectionist as is the Senator from Arizona, but I am just as convinced a one.

Mr. ASHURST. I believe that.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. If I understand the bill, it subjects hides to the same regulation with respect to the commodity markets that is now in force with respect to other commodities under the control of the Department of Agriculture and other agencies of the Government pertaining to that problem.

Mr. LODGE. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. It has no relationship whatever to duties on importations, or anything like that. It is purely a domestic regulation.

Mr. LODGE. Purely and simply.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. KING. Would the bill permit any organization of the Department of Agriculture, or of the Federal Government, to fix the prices which shall be paid in the sale of hides?

Mr. LODGE. Oh, no; I do not think that would be the effect at all.

Mr. KING. It is not intended to make any agency of the Government a price-fixing agency?

Mr. LODGE. Not in the slightest degree. Nothing is further from the thought behind the bill than that.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the bill would place hides in the category with the other commodities, and permit the corporation to make loans, that is all. It contains no price-fixing factor at all.

Mr. LODGE. It is a bill very limited in its scope.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAYMENTS TO COUNTIES UNDER THE TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY ACT

The bill (S. 2925) to amend the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933 was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let us have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, would the Senator from Nebraska be willing to explain the bill?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have tried to make a full explanation of the bill in the report. The object is to permit the Tennessee Valley Authority to pay certain amounts of money derived from power activities in lieu of taxes. It is important now particularly because of the acquisition several months ago of the Tennessee Electric Power Co.'s property.

The only provision in the Tennessee Valley Act as now written in regard to the payment of money in lieu of taxes is in section 13 of the original act. That does not permit the payment of money in lieu of taxes in any of the States except Tennessee and Alabama, and there only to a limited extent. This bill would repeal section 13 of the original act, and enact a new section 13, intended to apply to the entire territory covered by the Tennessee Valley Authority Act, and it would make applicable to all of the States a provision similar to that now applicable to the two States.

Does the explanation cover the question in the mind of the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Nebraska sincerely for his courteous cooperation with me in this particular. However, I have expressed to him in private conference with reference to the matter phases of doubt which it seems to me ought to be explored. Particularly, if we look at page 1, line 10, of the bill, we find an amendment which would authorize and direct payments to counties within the States.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator permit me to say a word?

Mr. DANAHER. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I have tried to explain to the Senator privately that there are several amendments which, if agreed to, would result in the T. V. A. paying the money raised by T. V. A. sale of power to the States, permitting the States to distribute it as they would distribute any other tax money to the counties and other subdivisions of the States.

Experts appeared before the committee, representatives of the Governors of two or three of the States, and, while they were all in favor of the bill, they wanted to have the Tennessee Valley Authority pay the money directly to the counties in the States, and thus obviate the necessity of the States' dividing the money up as they would divide up tax money. There was agreement among the experts of the States who participated in the discussion and study of the question, who did not want the States to handle the matter; and under section 13 as it now stands there is provision for the payment to the State of Alabama and to the State of Tennessee of a certain percentage in lieu of taxation. It was intended by Congress, I take it—I know it was my thought—that by State law the States would provide for dividing the money as they would divide any other money if it were paid as direct taxes, but the States did not do that, and the counties did not get any of the money.

The Senator remembers that in the bill as it was introduced there is a statement that it is the intention of Congress that the States should divide the money as if it were real tax money. But, of course, Congress has no jurisdiction to compel the States. It was simply an expression that it was the intention of Congress when it passed the law that that should be done.

The counties represented are not satisfied with that. They would be satisfied if the money were divided as the law intended it should be divided, but the States have not divided it; and what assurance have we now that they would divide it? The result is that all the money provided in lieu of taxes would go to the States, and the States would not give the counties any of it. Especially in two or three counties in Tennessee and one or two in Georgia a hardship would result if that should occur. So they ask that the law be amended so that the money would be paid directly to the counties instead of the States, and the amendments proposed are intended to carry that out.

I have no objection to the matter being taken care of in that way. It would create a little more work for the Tennessee Valley Authority; but they can do it. Two or three counties are struck very hard when the taxes are taken away from them by States. I have stated the object of the amendment. The Senator from Alabama has some amendments to offer in addition to what I have referred to, carrying out the same idea, to which I have no objection.

Mr. DANAHER. My apprehension arises from a deviation from principle, even from the principle of the original T. V. A. Act, which is contemplated by the pending bill. The Senator has in his answer to me already remarked upon the fact that Congress itself has no jurisdiction to tell the States how to apportion the money, or even to cause or force the States to distribute the money fairly. Yet, if we pass the bill in its present form, we will say that the Congress, which confessedly has no such power, will authorize the T. V. A. to do that very thing.

Mr. NORRIS. There is no question, in my judgment, and I have never heard of a doubt being entertained, that Congress can pass a law covering the situation. These are not my amendments. If I knew that the States would perform the duty which we intended and wanted them to perform, I should be opposed to the amendments. But I have no objection to having the matter taken care of in the way proposed, if that is the only hope of the counties getting the money. It is a real hardship to some of the counties to carry on their schools, because it happens that in taking over the property of the Tennessee Electric Power Co. there were a few small counties in which the major portion of the taxes came from generating plants within the counties, and the taxes collected on the remainder of the property was not sufficient to pay the running expenses of the county. All the bill attempts to do is to provide that those counties would not suffer that hardship. If the States should not pass laws providing for division of the money, they would continue to suffer, and would, I think, have to close down some of their necessary activities, such as the operation of their schools.

Mr. DANAHER. I would have more confidence in the bill and the amendments if the amendments had been offered by the Senator, but if we can delegate to the Tennessee Valley Authority the power to allocate these funds among the suffering counties rather than to have the States themselves do it, I apprehend that the next step will be for us to allocate funds from the Tennessee Valley income, as provided by the bill, to a particular county.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that if we transcend what has hitherto been established as the principle in section 13 of the original Tennessee Valley Authority Act, we extend to an inordinate degree the principle of delegating to the T. V. A. an authority which we ourselves do not have. The complaint of the counties which are affected properly should lie against their own States.

Mr. NORRIS. I admit that. They do, of course, make such complaint. But they say "The State does not perform its duty. We fear that it will not perform its duty, and if it does not do so we will continue to suffer."

Mr. DANAHER. Before we act on the committee amendments to the bill, is the Senator from Nebraska able to explain to us the purport of the amendments of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], which the Senator from Nebraska said would be forthcoming?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. DANAHER. Would the Senator please do so?

Mr. NORRIS. I think I am sufficiently familiar with the amendments offered by the Senator from Alabama, which I think are printed. They are not contained in the report. They were offered after the report was submitted. They simply carry out in two or three instances certain objectives which, in the judgment of the Senator from Alabama, the committee amendments do not carry out. The amount of payments is not increased by those amendments. The amount of payments is not changed in any way. While I think the amendments are unnecessary—and I told the Senator from Alabama so—yet they cannot do any harm. I think they are harmless. They all have a tendency only to increase the amount of labor—and that increase will be considerable—on the part of the T. V. A. However the T. V. A. is not objecting. The consumers of the T. V. A. power are paying the taxes now. That matter was all considered when the rates were fixed. There will be no change in the rates. There will be no change in the wholesale rates. The purpose is simply to give to those counties which are going to suffer, the compensation they would get in the way of taxes, if this property were privately assessed, that is all. There is nothing else to the proposal.

Mr. DANAHER. Let me say to the Senator from Nebraska that in the committee report we read this sentence:

> The experts representing the various localities and States and the experts of the Tennessee Valley Authority have worked out a solution, however, which is satisfactory to all parties concerned, and this bill is intended to carry out and give effect to the agreement so reached.

What it amounts to, as I understand, is that the affected counties and the Tennessee Valley Authority have, dehors the Congress, so to speak, entered into an arrangement of their own which we are to make effective by passing this bill, as amended. Accordingly I wrote to the Tennessee Valley Authority a few weeks ago, posing a series of questions based on that agreement, and asked them if they would give me the facts with reference to the agreement. To that letter I have received no reply.

It seems to me that if the agreement had been worked out I should have had a reply by now. I am not criticizing the Tennessee Valley Authority, for the obstacles may be greater than I supposed, but I was basing my letter on the report before us. I ask the Senator from Nebraska if he does not feel that the principle involved is such that we should have all the light possible on the matter, and therefore not act on the bill or the amendments to it at this time?

Mr. NORRIS. I shall have no objection if the Senator from Connecticut wants further time. The necessity for having the proposed legislation passed sometime during the present session is very great, because the counties will commence to suffer when they fail to receive the taxes which they otherwise would receive. The purpose of the bill is to afford relief to the counties.

This matter has been the subject of discussion and analysis among T. V. A. officials for more than 2 years, as I recall, and they have worked out an agreement. It is something that the T. V. A. lawyers intended to comply with, something that the original act intended they should do, and the purpose of the pending legislation is to relieve localities on which a severe burden has been placed by reason of the peculiar circumstances existing in several counties.

I am sorry the Senator has not received a reply to his letter from the authorities of the T. V. A., and I cannot understand why he has not received a reply. I have been in constant touch with the matter for the last couple of years. I have devoted a great deal of time to correspondence and discussion with State organizations and State authorities. They have all finally come to one conclusion. They had divergent opinions at different times, but they have all come to a conclusion as to what is the proper way to divide the money which the T. V. A. is anxious to pay in lieu of taxes. The T. V. A. is not making an agreement it has no authority to make. It was faced with a certain situation. It has met it. After long deliberation, and considerable expense, the T. V. A. reached a conclusion, and in the bill I am simply trying to carry out that conclusion, not because the T. V. A. agreed to it, but because it is a part of the intention expressed in the original Tennessee Valley Authority Act.

Mr. President, it always has been my belief that when property, which had theretofore been taxed, was taken over by public authorities for the generation and sale of power, there should be paid in lieu of taxes an equivalent sum of money. The Senator can understand——

Mr. DANAHER. I do.

Mr. NORRIS. That one of the things I have contended all the time is that Congress would never, for a moment, subject the property of the United States to taxation by local authorities. I think the Senator will not disagree with me on that proposition at all.

Mr. DANAHER. No.

Mr. NORRIS. When the Government of the United States is itself making a profit from the transaction, we want to make fair provision in lieu of taxes, and that should be done under the theory of the T. V. A. Act itself.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, let me conclude by saying for the RECORD that when confessedly the Congress has no power to tell the States how to apportion the money, and when confessedly the remedy at present lies between the counties and the States, I am apprehensive that local authorities in the future may easily make an agreement with the creature of the Congress, if you please, with reference to the allocation of taxes, and we will have no further authority over them.

Mr. NORRIS. That could not be done unless——

Mr. DANAHER. That is inherent in this proposal.

Mr. NORRIS. That could not be done unless we pass this measure.

Mr. DANAHER. I understand.

Mr. NORRIS. There is no intention of doing it without the approval of Congress.

Mr. DANAHER. I know, but if we, who lack the authority to tell the States what to do, give the Tennessee Valley Authority power to do what we cannot do, we open up the possibility of a situation which conceivably can be fraught with real difficulty. There is the argument as a matter of principle.

Mr. NORRIS. It is true we as a Congress cannot do that, and we are authorizing the T. V. A. to do something which the States could do, which we want the States to do, and what we intend shall be done. There is not anything wrong in it except that it is not so straight a route. It is a little more circuitous to provide that the money should be paid direct to the counties, instead of being paid to the States and then to the counties.

The Senator does not think for a moment, does he, that there is any intention of trying to do something here that is not square, or fair, or anything of that kind?

Mr. DANAHER. Oh, Mr. President, obviously not. My conversations with the Senator from Nebraska in private on this very matter must have convinced the Senator of the earnestness of my inquiry.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. DANAHER. My thought with reference to it is that it is so important a matter—and we have never before taken such action in our history—that we ought to know all the facts and circumstances involved before we pass the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator wants more time, or anything of that kind, I shall agree that the bill go over, provided it does not go over beyond the present session of the Congress, or remain unacted upon anywhere near the end of the session. If the Senator desires, let the bill go over.

Mr. DANAHER. Then, Mr. President, let the bill go over, and I will renew my inquiry and see what the situation is.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Senator from Nebraska.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

EMPLOYEES ENGAGED IN CONSTRUCTION OF PANAMA CANAL

The bill (S. 1162) to provide for the recognition of the services of the civilian officials and employees, citizens of the United States, engaged in and about the construction of the Panama Canal was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let us have an explanation.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I ask that the bill be passed over.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, was objection made to Calendar No. 1388?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection was made.

Mr. PEPPER. I should like to make a brief explanation of that bill if the objector would be gracious enough to withhold his objection.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I shall be glad to withhold my objection while the Senator makes his explanation.

Mr. PEPPER. I made a brief explanation of the bill when the calendar was called last week. The bill simply provides for recognition of those employees of the Panama Canal who were in residence upon the Isthmus itself, and who were actually engaged for as long as 3 years upon the construction of the Canal.

The fact that this class of employees has been discriminated against by not having had any recognition, while officers of the Public Health Service and of the Army and Navy have had recognition, is attested, in the first place, by a letter from Theodore Roosevelt. I do not know whether or not the Senator heard the letter read during the previous call of the calendar. President Theodore Roosevelt had the following to say in 1916, in a letter to Mr. C. O. Simmons, Washington representative of the Panama Canal Employees Association:

> In view of the action taken by Congress in substantially rewarding certain officers of the United States Army, Navy, and Public Health Service who served for more than 3 years in the construction of the Panama Canal by providing for their promotion and retirement upon application, I can see no reason why the civilian employees who served for a similar period and who in any event would not benefit by the liberal pension arrangements provided for the service men, should not be rewarded by a like recognition.
> As one who was instrumental in getting this work under way and who has followed its progress with deep interest and keen satisfaction, I am greatly concerned in seeing proper recognition accorded the civilian employees. General Goethals has designated these men as the real builders of the Panama Canal. I sincerely trust that prompt action will be taken by Congress toward the early enactment of legislation to this end.

I have another letter, which I shall not read in detail, from General Goethals, dated January 22, 1916, in which he says in part:

> In the organization that accomplished the result, the work was so divided as to bring the service men in competition with the civilians, and the latter can truthfully claim that they accomplished results just as efficiently as, and in some instances more efficiently than the men who were selected for reward; and yet even in a blanket provision they are denied the recognition of Congress.

I also have testimony before the Interoceanic Canals Committee by a physician who was in the Panama Canal Zone as Assistant Chief of the Health Service. He points out that every one of these employees either had malaria or yellow fever, or lived in constant hazard of one or the other of those diseases.

If the Senator will read the report of the committee which has reported the bill, I think he will be disposed to withhold his objection.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. PEPPER. I thank the Senator very much.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. REED. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEDURE

The resolution (S. Res. 248) authorizing the printing as a Senate document of certain monographs published by the Attorney General's Committee on Administrative Procedure relative to the practices and procedures of several agencies of the Government was announced as next in order.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, this resolution appears upon the calendar because when it was reported by the committee the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] said he wished to look into it. I understand he now has no objection to it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ought to supplement that statement by the observation that I have had prepared a memorandum dealing with the same subject, which at a later date I may also ask to have printed as a public document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to as follows:

> Resolved, That the monographs published by the Attorney General's Committee on Administrative Procedure embodying the results of the investigations made by the staff of said Committee relative to the practices and procedures of the Division of Public Contracts, Department of Labor; the Veterans' Administration; the Federal Communications Commission; the United States Maritime Commission; the Federal Alcohol Administration; the Federal Trade Commission; the Administration of the Grain Standards Act, Department of Agriculture; the Railroad Retirement Board; the Federal Reserve System; the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation, Department of Commerce; the Administration of the Packers and Stockyards Act, Department of Agriculture; the Post Office Depart-

HOSPITALIZATION BENEFITS FOR CERTAIN RETIRED ARMY ENLISTED MEN

The bill (S. 1461) to remove discrimination against retired Army enlisted personnel and to equalize hospitalization and domiciliary benefits of retired enlisted men of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. May we have an explanation of the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. An explanation is called for with respect to Calendar 1416, Senate bill 1461.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, the purpose of the proposed legislation is to grant to retired enlisted men of the Army hospitalization and domiciliary care on a parity with that now enjoyed by retired enlisted men of the Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard. This bill would entitle enlisted men to enter any Army or Navy hospital without cost. That is the object of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter retired enlisted men of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard, when hospitalized or domiciled in either an Army or Navy hospital or United States naval or United States soldiers' home, shall be extended such treatment or domiciliary care without cost.

That no charge, directly or indirectly, shall be made against the retired pay or allowances of retired enlisted personnel while hospitalized or domiciled in any Army or Navy hospital or United States naval or soldiers' home facility.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. An identical House bill, House bill 8508, is now before the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

Mr. VAN NUYS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments be discharged from further consideration of House bill 8508, and that the House bill be substituted for the Senate bill and be now considered.

The War Department favors the bill, and the Board of Investigators favor it. Captain Evans was held to be not guilty of negligence.

C., by such corporation for export to foreign consignees, but which were not exported due to the fact that such cigarettes and tobacco products were stolen from the trucks of such corporation en route to the intended exportation point: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. PROMOTION SYSTEM OF THE ARMY

The bill (S. 3712) to provide for the promotion of promotion-list officers of the Army after specified years of service in grade, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, will the Senator who objected withhold his objection in order that I may submit a brief explanation?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I withhold the objection for that purpose.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the efficiency of our Regular Army depends upon leadership. Today we must look to the future and provide an adequate plan for the development of leaders.

Our present system is faulty in that it retards development of leaders through stagnation in promotion.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Are leadership and promotion synonymous terms?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Without fair and proper promotion we would have a demoralizing situation in the Army.

Mr. McKELLAR. I suggest to the Senator that there are no promotions, or very infrequent promotions, in the Senate, and yet we have a pretty good body here.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I will say that the Senator from Tennessee deserves the highest promotion that could come to a Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thank the Senator.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, we are striving for an adequate national-defense system from every angle, and one of the most important features is efficient and satisfied officer personnel.

As is well-known to Congress, the so-called "hump" in the promotion list of regular officers was created in 1920 by appointment in the regular service of officers of the World War of varying ages and prior service. Visualization at that time of future requirements might have obviated the creation of the "hump."

We are now faced with a personnel problem the solving of which must include some immediate relief to remedy the situation and lay positive plans which will assure development of leadership in the future.

After long and careful study the War Department has offered a solution to the problem which, even though it will not satisfy all concerned, does not differentiate among classes; does no harm to the individual, but, on the contrary, protects the rights of the individual; and still presents a reasonable solution for the present and the future situation as to general leadership in the Army.

Let me refer to some of the advantages which would accrue by the enactment of the proposed legislation as compared to the present promotion system.

First. It would attain the objective of proper years of service in grade, viz, 3 years, second lieutenant; 7 years, first lieutenant; 7 years, captain; 6 years, major; and 5 years, lieutenant colonel.

Second. It would vitalize the two most important command grades below that of general officer, viz, those of colonel and captain. In the grade of colonel this would be brought about by the mandatory retirement of brigadier generals at the age of 62, and the retirement of other officers of lower grades at the age of 60. The grade of captain would be vitalized by assuring promotion to major after 7 years in that grade, and at an average age of 41.

Third. It would immediately end stagnation in promotion in the grades of major and captain. Promotions in these two grades is becoming increasingly serious and stagnation in these grades eventually ends promotion in all grades.

Fourth. It would provide that all officers shall reach field grades after several years of training in the lower grades and at an age that would enable the Army to receive the full value of their services.

Fifth. It would broaden the field of consideration for the selection of general officers, assure that all officers of proper age could be considered, and also that there always would be a sufficient number of officers of the proper age eligible for selection.

Sixth. It would eventually reduce the total number of field officers, and would limit the number in the grade of colonel to 705.

Seventh. It would cost less than the present system.

Specifically, the bill provides for promotion to first lieutenant, after 3 years' service; promotion to captain, after 10 years' service; promotion to major, after 17 years' service; promotion to lieutenant colonel, after 23 years' service; promotion to colonel, after 28 years' service.

The bill limits the number of colonels to 705, the present number, since appropriate peacetime assignments cannot be found for a greater number of colonels, but excepts from retirement at age 60, 5 percent of the outstanding colonels and carries them until 62.

It makes retirement mandatory in the following grades:

Brigadier generals at the age of 62.

Other officers in lower grades at the age of 60.

Under the bill lieutenant colonels with over 28 years of service are made eligible for selection as brigadier general of the line, or as chief of branch. This assures that about 3,900 of the officers in the "hump" who are less than 54 years of age will become eligible for selection as general officers.

The bill permits any officer with World War service to retire, at any time, with three-fourths pay.

The cost of the bill would be less than the cost under the present system. Additional costs would average about $300,000 the first 4 years; thereafter savings would run from $1,400,000 in 1945 to $4,300,000 in 1956, an average of $2,300,000 annually for 12 years.

The retirement of officers at the age of 60, from a military standpoint is sound. While an officer of 60 has acquired experience and judgment by years of service and training, it cannot be disputed that his physical development has not kept pace with his mental attainments. In reality his physical condition, as he approaches 60, is on the downgrade, and he has not the physical stamina which is absolutely necessary to field leadership.

Let me quote the present able Chief of Staff, General Marshall, on the characteristics of leadership:

> You have to lead men in war by requiring more from the individual than he thinks he can do. You have to lead men in war by bringing them along to endure and to display qualities of fortitude that are beyond the average man's thought of what he should be expected to do. You have to inspire them when they are hungry and exhausted and desperately uncomfortable and in great danger; and only a man of positive characteristics of leadership, with the physical stamina that goes with it, can function under those conditions.

It is to meet this idea that this new promotion bill is offered. A few years ago we vitalized the grades of second lieutenant, first lieutenant, and captain by making it certain that officers would reach those grades within a definite time; but we allowed the "hump" to remain insofar as it affects the higher grades. By this bill it is proposed to vitalize in the same way the grades of major, lieutenant colonel, and colonel. We believe that altogether the enactment of the bill would result in great good to the Army, the country, and the national defense. I hope the Senator from Colorado will withhold his objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I renew my objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, would it not be proper to ask unanimous consent that the committee to which the bill was referred be discharged from further consideration, and that it be now considered?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Such a request would be in order, of course.

Mr. HATCH. Then I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of House bill 8500, and that it be considered at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Be it enacted, etc., That in addition to those officers who may be serving in the grade of vice admiral by virtue of the provisions of section 18 of the act of May 22, 1917 (40 Stat. 89; U. S. Mr. KING. Mr. President, let us have an explanation of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill was reported by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the bill grants to the President power to name two vice admirals.

The present law permits the President to give the title of vice admiral to officers who have particular positions, such as Chief of Operations and Commander of the Fleet. We have rear admirals who are designated for foreign service. We now have one in Europe, and we have one at the Canal Zone. According to the Navy Department, these officials are embarrassed by the fact that they meet and visit and deal and confer with admirals of other countries of a higher rank. So the bill proposes that during the time rear admirals are afloat in foreign countries, two of them may be given the title of vice admiral and given the pay of a vice admiral for the time they are actually afloat and in the service, which is $500 a year more than the pay of a rear admiral. The bill is permissive, and is presented to the Naval Affairs Committee through the Navy Department at the request of the President.

From and after the date of the approval of this act Morris Hoppenheim, Lena Hoppenheim, Doris Hoppenheim, and Ruth Hoppenheim shall be deemed to be lawful residents of the United States.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I shall not object to this bill, but it seems to me to be a very bad legislative practice to consider and pass bills which, though they may have been reported by a committee, are not on the calendar. These are minor immigration bills, it is true; but such procedure may open the way for the passage of bills of more importance. I am merely saying that hereafter, if I happen to be present, I shall object to the practice.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think there is very much in what the Senator says, but most of these bills were carefully examined by the House committee, and——

Mr. ADMAS. I still think the Senate has a function to perform, and should have an opportunity to see the bills.

Mr. KING. Let me finish my sentence. And the Senate Committee on Immigration, which has been very chary in allowing immigration measures to pass, approves the bills.

Mr. ADAMS. I am objecting to a practice which I think is very dangerous and very improper.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, this is not a practice; it will happen only today, and it is done in the interest of economy. I am sure that that feature should appeal to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ADAMS. It does appeal to me greatly, especially when it comes from the majority leader.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am glad we are getting together. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I shall object to all the other bills which come up in this way. I agree with the Senator from Colorado that this is a bad practice. So I register an objection.

CONGRESSIONAL MEDAL OF HONOR TO WILLIAM SINNOTT

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, from the Committee on the Library, I report favorably Senate bill 3813, to authorize the presentation of a Congressional Medal of Honor to William Sinnott.

Mr. President, this bill provides for the presentation of a Congressional Medal of Honor to William Sinnott, who was a detective in Florida at the time an effort was made to assassinate the President-elect of the United States, which resulted in the assassination of Mayor Cermak, of Chicago. The bill merely authorizes the President to present this man a Congressional Medal of Honor. I ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3813) to authorize the presentation of a Congressional Medal of Honor to William Sinnott, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is authorized to present, in the name of Congress, a medal of honor to William Sinnott, a detective, who in guarding Franklin D. Roosevelt, then President-elect of the United States, at Miami, Fla., on February 15, 1933, was shot and wounded by Guiseppe Zangara, who attempted to assassinate said Franklin D. Roosevelt.

CELEBRATION IN COMMEMORATION OF THE TREATY OF FORT GREENE VILLE

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I report favorably from the Committee on the Library, House Joint Resolution 385, which provides for the appointment of a joint commission to look into the question of a celebration at Greenville, Ohio, for the purpose of commemorating certain events during the Revolutionary War.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I ask that it lie over for consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will go to the calendar.

VACATION LEAVE FOR CERTAIN POSTMASTERS

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I ask that the Senate return to Calendar No. 1380, House bill 5784. I desire to explain the bill, as I would have explained it had I been present at the time it was called.

This bill refers to what might be termed "career postmasters," that is, postmasters promoted from the rank and file of postal employees. The Department has no authority, under existing law, to give them credit for their earned vacation time. This bill would merely allow them to enjoy the vacation time they have already earned. It would not cost the Government any money, because when a postmaster takes his vacation his place is filled by the assistant postmaster. It pertains only to postmasters who were formerly postal employees, and who had some earned vacation time coming after they were promoted.

Mr. REED. I object.

Mr. MEAD. No expense is involved.

Mr. REED. I know, but it is bad practice.

Mr. MEAD. Let me say to the Senator that each of these postmasters has earned a certain amount of vacation time while acting as a clerk or a carrier. If they have 5 days or 6 days coming which they have earned legally, under existing law, and they then become postmasters, there is no law by which the Department could give them leave for the 6 days or 8 days. If the Department could give them the 6 days or 8 days leave it could so without involving any expense to the Department, because the assistant postmaster would carry on the work. So it is really an obligation which we owe to these men because they have worked sufficiently long to earn a few days' vacation time.

Mr. McNARY. Is the bill on the calendar?

Mr. MEAD. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. What is the calendar number?

Mr. MEAD. No. 1380.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. As I understand, the bill would merely secure to these men who have been in the postal service and who have been made postmasters the leave which they earned up to the time of their appointment as postmasters.

Mr. MEAD. That is correct; it covers leave earned up to that time. It would cost the Government no money whatever, because the assistant postmaster would fill the place while the postmaster is on leave. It pertains only to the number of days he has actually earned while serving in a minor capacity.

Mr. WHITE. It would merely make good their statutory rights?

Mr. MEAD. That is correct.

Mr. WHITE. Which they would otherwise lose when appointed postmasters?

Mr. MEAD. Exactly. The Senator has stated it precisely. It merely carries out the contract already made with them under the law.

Mr. REED. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I inquire what is the status of calendar numbers 1240, 1241, and 1242?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They were objected to.

Mr. McNARY. By whom?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not know.

Mr. McNARY. May I inquire whether the RECORD indicates who the objectors were?

Mr. BARKLEY. Some Senator asked for an explanation of those measures. The chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, who reported them, was not present, and they went over. I do not think any particular Senator objected to their consideration, but there was no way of telling what they were about.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is not advised as to who objected to all of the measures. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] objected to Calendar 1241.

Mr. McNARY. I am speaking for the senior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], who is anxious to have the bills considered. In his absence, and in the absence of the Senator from Tennessee, I shall not pursue the subject.

RECORDING OF AUTOMOBILE LIENS

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1296 to amend paragraphs (b), (c), and (d) of section 6 of the District of Columbia Traffic Act, 1925, as amended by the acts of July 3, 1926, and February 27, 1931, and for other purposes.

Mr. TRUMAN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHIPSTEAD in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Davis	La Follette	Sheppard
Ashurst	Donahey	Lee	Shipstead
Austin	Downey	Lodge	Slattery
Bailey	Ellender	Lucas	Stewart
Bankhead	George	Lundeen	Taft

Barkley	Gibson	McNary	Thomas, Okla.
Bilbo	Gillette	Maloney	Thomas, Utah
Bone	Glass	Mead	Tobey
Bridges	Green	Miller	Townsend
Brown	Gurney	Minton	Truman
Bulow	Hale	Murray	Tydings

Chavez	Holman	Pittman	White
Clark, Idaho	Hughes	Reed	Wiley
Clark, Mo.	Johnson, Calif.	Russell
Connally	Johnson, Colo.	Schwartz
Danaher	King	Schwellenbach

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on the motion of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] to proceed to the consideration of Calendar 764, Senate bill 1296, to amend certain paragraphs of section 6 of the District of Columbia Traffic Act of 1925.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Am I correct in my interpretation of the rules that the pending motion is not now debatable?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct in his interpretation of the rules.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Another parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Is not the Senate entitled to know what the bill is about before it is called upon to vote on the question whether the bill shall be taken up for consideration?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate is entitled to an explanation of the bill before action is taken.

The clerk will read the bill by title.

The CHIEF CLERK. Senate bill 1296, to amend paragraphs (b), (c), and (d) of section 6 of the District of Columbia Traffic Act, 1925, as amended by the acts of July 3, 1926, and February 27, 1931, and for other purposes.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Another inquiry, Mr. President. Is not the Senate further entitled to be advised by having the bill read before we proceed to vote on the question of considering the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That paragraph (b), section 6, of the District of Columbia Traffic Act, 1925, as amended by the acts of July 3, 1926, and February 27, 1931, be further amended by adding thereto the following:

"There is hereby established in the department of vehicles and traffic an office of record for the purpose of recording and releasing liens and encumbrances on motor vehicles and trailers, for which a certificate of title shall have been issued, or any equipment or accessories affixed thereto. Such liens and encumbrances shall be recorded and released by entering on the certificate of title such information as the Commissioners may require and shall have priority in the order in which recorded; and, unless so recorded, no bill of sale, mortgage, or deed of trust to secure payment of a debt, no conditional sale in virtue of which any of the aforesaid property is delivered to the purchaser but by the terms of which title is not to pass until the purchase price thereof is paid in full, and no trust receipt, with respect to any motor vehicle or trailer, for which a certificate of title shall have been issued, or any equipment or accessories affixed thereto, shall be valid against subsequent purchasers or encumbrancers for value without actual notice. An executed copy of the document evidencing such lien or encumbrance shall be presented to and retained by the aforesaid department. Sections 546 and 547, subchapter 3, and section 548, subchapter 4, chapter XVI, of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, relating to the recordation of bills of sale, chattel mortgages, deeds of trust, and conditional bills of sale in the office of the recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia, insofar as the same may have reference to such motor vehicles and trailers, or any equipment and accessories affixed thereto, are hereby repealed."

SEC. 2. That paragraph (c), section 6, of the said Traffic Act, as amended, be amended by inserting therein following the words "transferring of titles", the following: "recording and releasing of liens and encumbrances."

SEC. 3. That paragraph (d), section 6, of the said Traffic Act, as amended, be amended by striking out the words "titling and retitling" where they first appear in said paragraph, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "titling, retitling, and recording of liens or encumbrances"; and said paragraph shall be further amended by inserting therein, following the phrase "not to exceed the sum of $1 for each such titling and retitling", the following: "and not to exceed the sum of 50 cents for the recording of each such lien or encumbrance with no fee for releasing."

SEC. 4. The provisions of this act shall become effective 90 days after its approval by the President, but nothing herein contained shall affect existing liens on motor vehicles and trailers, or any equipment or accessories affixed thereto, recorded prior to the effective date of this act.

SEC. 5. Appropriation is hereby authorized to be made to carry out the purposes of this act, and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized to include in their annual estimates provision for the expenses incident to such purposes, and for personnel subject to the limitations of the Classification Act of 1923, as amended.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Is it not a fact that the bill relates to the recorder of deeds in the District of Columbia?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not think that is a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, a further parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Does not the bill provide for the settlement of patronage controversies between the District of Columbia on the one side and the recorder of deeds upon the other?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the opinion of the Chair, that is not a parliamentary inquiry. The Chair holds that the motion is not debatable.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I demand the yeas and nays on the motion.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have no difficulty in appreciating the ruling of the Chair. We have today a morning hour, which is somewhat unusual. After 2 o'clock this motion would be debatable; would it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the motion of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] shall prevail, the bill will be debatable.

Mr. McNARY. The motion to make the bill the unfinished business is not debatable, because the hour of 2 o'clock has not yet arrived. After 2 o'clock a motion to take up the bill would be debatable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection to taking up the bill; but I wish to address an inquiry to the able Senator before I vote on the question. I have a note from an editor——

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I shall be very glad to give the able Senator any information I have; but I understand the motion is not debatable. As soon as we take up the bill I shall be very glad to give the Senator such information as I have with respect to it. It is merely a little District of Columbia bill which has been on the calendar for a long time, and I want to get rid of it.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I do not want to interfere with the Senator having the bill considered. However, I sympathize with those who are unable to debate the motion because the hour of 2 o'clock has not yet arrived. Perhaps the Senator would be willing to waive the technicality and answer the inquiry I was about to propound, but I shall not insist if he wishes to stand on his rights.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON].

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McNARY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. OVERTON. Is the suggestion of the absence of a quorum in order, inasmuch as no business has been transacted since the previous roll call?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum was suggested, and the order for the yeas and nays has been made. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, do I correctly understand the ruling of the Chair to be that ordering the yeas and nays is such a transaction of business as to make in order the call for a quorum at this time? What was the ruling of the Chair?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. McNARY. The point I make is that the yeas and nays were requested. After the request had been sufficiently seconded the Chair ordered the yeas and nays. That order by the Presiding Officer constitutes the transaction of business by the Senate. Therefore, I suggested the absence of a quorum.

Mr. OVERTON. I make the point of order that the suggestion of the absence of a quorum is not in order, no business having been transacted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the yeas and nays having been ordered, and therefore business having been transacted, the suggestion of the absence of a quorum is in order. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Davis	La Follette	Sheppard
Ashurst	Donahey	Lee	Shipstead
Austin	Downey	Lodge	Slattery
Bailey	Ellender	Lucas	Stewart
Bankhead	George	Lundeen	Taft
Barbour	Gerry	McKellar	Thomas, Idaho
Barkley	Gibson	McNary	Thomas, Okla.
Bilbo	Gillette	Maloney	Thomas, Utah
Bone	Glass	Mead	Tobey
Bridges	Green	Miller	Townsend
Brown	Gurney	Minton	Truman
Bulow	Hale	Murray	Tydings
Burke	Harrison	Neely	Vandenberg
Byrd	Hatch	Norris	Van Nuys
Byrnes	Hayden	O'Mahoney	Wagner
Caraway	Herring	Overton	Walsh
Chandler	Hill	Pepper	Wheeler
Chavez	Holman	Pittman	White
Clark, Idaho	Hughes	Reed	Wiley
Clark, Mo.	Johnson, Calif.	Russell
Connally	Johnson, Colo.	Schwartz
Danaher	King	Schwellenbach

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON].

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Is the motion now before the Senate debatable?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will hold that under rule VIII, the motion is not debatable, as it was made prior to 2 o'clock. The rule reads:

All motions made before 2 o'clock to proceed to the consideration of any matter shall be determined without debate.

Mr. McNARY. I wish to disclose my objection to the ruling of the Chair. When such a motion is made before 2 o'clock and the hour of 2 o'clock arrives the inhibition of the rule is lost forever. It is now 2 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m. In my opinion, under the rule—and I think it was so held when I raised the point on another occasion—if such a motion is made prior to 2 o'clock and because of the lapse of time due to a roll call or a quorum call or discussion of an appeal from the decision of the Chair the hour of 2 o'clock arrives with the motion still pending, as it is in this case, after 2 o'clock, then it is debatable. That is the interpretation, in my opinion, which should be placed upon the section of the rule which has been read; indeed, I think it is the only one which should be put upon it; otherwise, if a Senator made such a motion before 2 o'clock, and the 2 hours which we call the morning hour elapsed, he could not then argue it at all after 2 o'clock, but would be bound by the fact that he had made his motion earlier in the day. That is not good sense; it is not good reason. If it has been announced as the permanent decision of the Chair, I shall be compelled to appeal from the decision, much as I regret to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In view of the lack of unanimity of the rulings on this question, the Chair will withdraw the ruling just made, and now submits to the Senate the question whether the motion of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], under the circumstances, is debatable at this time.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, is not that question debatable?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order having been submitted to the Senate, the question is debatable.

Mr. McNARY. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma. I have obtained all I want.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, this bill has been on the calendar for at least 2 years. It relates to some colored employees of the District government and that is all. By this bill a department of the District Government, the recorder of deeds office, would lose some of its colored employees, and the vacancies created would be given to white people in another department of the District government. That is the motive behind this bill.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. I trust the Senator does not assign that motive to me.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Not at all. I assure the Senator that I do not mean to intimate that that is his motive.

Mr. OVERTON. This bill has the unanimous support of the District of Columbia Committee. I did not introduce the bill; I was charged with the duty of reporting it, and I do not understand that what the Senator from Oklahoma suggests is at all the purpose of the bill.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, prior to 1935 the recording of motor-vehicle liens was under the recorder of deeds, and the recorder, almost from time immemorial, has been a colored man. Dr. Thompkins, the present recorder, comes from Kansas City, in the State of Missouri, and it is well known that he is a very high-class colored man.

In 1935 a bill was introduced to raise the fee for recording automobile liens and encumbrances. I ask permission to have included in the RECORD a copy of Senate bill 410, which is the basis of the present law. The report made on that bill was formulated by Mr. Ellenbogen, of the Committee on the District of Columbia, House of Representatives. I also ask permission at this point in my remarks to have printed a copy of the House committee report.

There being no objection, the bill and report were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[S. 410, 74th Cong., 1st sess.]

To provide fees to be charged by the recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That section 552 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 552. Fees: The legal fees for the services of the recorder shall be as follows:

" 'For filing, recording, and indexing, or for making certified copy of any instrument containing 200 words or less, $1, and 20 cents for each additional hundred words, to be collected at the time of filing, or when the copy is made.

" 'For each certificate and seal, 50 cents.

" 'For searching records extending back 2 years or less next preceding current date, 50 cents, and 15 cents for each additional year, to be paid by the party for whom the search may be made.

" 'For recording a plat or survey, 20 cents for each course such survey may contain.

" 'For recording a town plat, 25 cents for each lot such plat may contain.

" 'For taking any acknowledgment, 50 cents.

" 'For filing and indexing a bill of sale of chattels, or a mortgage or deed of trust thereof, or a conditional bill of sale of chattels or any release or satisfaction of any such, $1.50.

" 'For filing and indexing any other paper required by law to be filed in his office, 50 cents.

" 'In addition to the fees herein required, all corporations hereinafter incorporated in the District of Columbia shall pay to the recorder of deeds at the time of the filing of the certificate of incorporation 50 cents on each thousand dollars of the amount of capital stock of the corporation as set forth in its said certificate: Provided, however, That the fee so paid shall not be less than $50: Provided further, That the recorder of deeds shall not file or record any certificate of organization of any incorporation until it has been proved to his satisfaction that all the capital stock of said company has been subscribed for in good faith, and not less than 10 percent of the par value of the stock has been actually paid in cash, and the money derived therefrom is then in the possession of the persons named as the first board of trustees.' "

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 410) to provide fees to be charged by the recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, having considered the same, report favorably thereon and recommend that the bill do pass.

From time to time the fact becomes apparent that various governmental organizations in the District of Columbia are operating under antiquated laws. The present schedule of fees in the recorder's office was established over 30 years ago and at the present time does not provide sufficient funds to meet the operating expenses of the office. The purpose of the bill here reported is to provide a modification of these fees, making them more nearly commensurate with the value of the services rendered.

The bill further provides that the recorder shall not file or record any incorporation certificate without first ascertaining that its capital stock has been subscribed for in good faith and not less than 10 percent of its par value paid in cash.

The Commissioners of the District of Columbia have submitted a report on this measure which is hereto appended and made a part hereof.

COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, EXECUTIVE OFFICE,
Washington, March 28, 1935.

Hon. MARY T. NORTON,
Chairman, House District Committee, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MADAM: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia have the honor to submit the following report on S. 410 (74th Cong., 1st sess.), entitled, "A bill to provide fees to be charged by the recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," passed by the Senate, February 25, 1935.

There has been a deficiency in the office of the recorder of deeds for a number of years, and the purpose of the pending bill is to amend section 552 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia by increasing fees so as to put this office on a self-sustaining basis. The present fees have been in effect for over 30 years and it is recognized that they are wholly out of line with the actual cost of service rendered.

The total appropriations for the office of the recorder of deeds for the fiscal year 1934 amounted to $100,000. The total fees collected in that year amounted to $89,300. For the fiscal year 1936 the estimates of the recorder's office, as approved by the Budget Bureau and as passed by the House amount to $113,060.

If this bill is passed and is in operation in the fiscal year 1936, the fees received by the recorder of deeds would amount to about $168,000, if the volume is similar to that during the fiscal year 1934.

The fees provided by the pending bill differ from those required by existing law in the following particulars:

Under existing law the charge for filing, recording, and indexing, or for making a certified copy of any instrument containing 200 words or less is 50 cents, and 15 cents for each additional hundred words. Under the pending bill the fees are increased to $1.50 for the first 200 words and 25 cents for each additional hundred words.

The cost of each certificate and seal is increased from 25 to 50 cents.

Under the existing law the fee for searching records extending back 2 years or less is 25 cents, and 5 cents for each additional year. Under the pending bill the fee for searching records for the first 2 years is $1, and 25 cents for each additional year.

The fee for recording a plat or survey is increased from 5 to 30 cents for each course such survey may contain.

The fee for recording a town plat is increased from 3 to 25 cents for each lot such plat may contain.

The fee for taking acknowledgments is not increased by the pending bill.

Under sections 546 and 547 of the code as amended by the act of March 3, 1925, the fee for filing and indexing papers relating to the sale or mortgage of chattels is $1. This is increased to $2.50 by the pending bill.

The fee for filing and indexing other papers is increased from 15 cents to $1.

Under existing law a corporation at the time of the filing of the certificate of incorporation is required to pay a fee of 40 cents on each $1,000 of its capital stock with a minimum fee of $25. Under the pending bill the fee is increased to 80 cents on each $1,000 of capital stock with a minimum fee of $50.

The Commissioners know of no objection to the passage of this bill.

Very respectfully,

M. C. HAZEN, President.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The purpose of the proposed legislation was to increase the fee for the recording of automobile liens in the office of the recorder of deeds. The bill referred to became a law. I ask permission at this time to have placed in the RECORD a copy of the existing law. It is known as Public, 149, Seventy-fourth Congress.

There being no objection, the law was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Public—No. 149—74th Cong.—S. 410]

To provide fees to be charged by the recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That section 552 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 552. Fees: The legal fees for the services of the recorder shall be as follows:

" 'For filing, recording, and indexing, or for making certified copy of any instrument containing 200 words or less, $1, and 20 cents for each additional hundred words, to be collected at the time of filing, or when the copy is made.

" 'For each certificate and seal, 50 cents.

" 'For searching records extending back 2 years or less next preceding current date, 50 cents, and 15 cents for each additional year, to be paid by the party for whom the search may be made.

" 'For recording a plat or survey, 20 cents for each course such survey may contain.

" 'For recording a town plat, 25 cents for each lot such plat may contain.

" 'For taking any acknowledgment, 50 cents.

" 'For filing and indexing a bill of sale of chattels, or a mortgage or deed of trust thereof, or a conditional bill of sale of chattels or any release or satisfaction of any such, $1.50.

" 'For filing and indexing any other paper required by law to be filed in his office, 50 cents.

" 'In addition to the fees herein required, all corporations hereafter incorporated in the District of Columbia shall pay to the recorder of deeds at the time of the filing of the certificate of incorporation 50 cents on each thousand dollars of the amount of capital stock of the corporation as set forth in its said certificate: Provided, however, That the fee so paid shall not be less than $50: Provided further, That the recorder of deeds shall not file or record any certificate of organization of any incorporation until it has been proved to his satisfaction that all the capital stock of said company has been subscribed for in good faith, and not less than 10 percent of the par value of the stock has been actually paid in cash, and the money derived therefrom is then in the possession of the persons named as the first board of trustees.' "

Approved, June 17, 1935.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, in substantiation of the statement I have made, I ask permission to have read at the desk a letter just received from the present recorder of deeds, Dr. Thompkins. On Saturday I found it necessary to leave the city; I could not reach Dr. Thompkins at 12 o'clock, and I telegraphed him, asking him for a statement of the reason for the pending bill. His letter purports to give the reasons for the proposed legislation. I ask permission that the letter may be read at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read as requested.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

RECORDER OF DEEDS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, D. C., April 20, 1940.

The Honorable ELMER THOMAS,
United States Senator, Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR THOMAS: In reply to your wire of yesterday, enclosed you will find S. 410, an act to provide fees to be charged by the recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia, and report thereon, No. 1119. This report, you will note, carries a letter signed by the President of the Board of Commissioners, which proposed to increase the fees for recording chattels from $1 to $2.50 in an effort to bring this department out of the "red." It was my opinion that $2.50, as suggested by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia was exorbitant; that a fee of $1.50 would be sufficient to accomplish the same purpose. Congress passed and the President approved S. 410, which carried my suggestion, and the office has since operated without a deficit.

Now that the Commissioners are desirous of increasing the patronage of the director of traffic, and indirectly their own, by transferring some of our duties to that department, they necessarily must advance some argument for the transfer. Having overlooked the fact that the fees were increased at their own suggestion, they now contend that said fees are too high and should be only 50 cents, wherein in 1935 they recommended that the fees should be $2.50. The Commissioners have at no time suggested to the recorder of deeds a reduction in the fee for the filing of automobile chattels. All of the contention that the recorder of deeds is charging an exorbitant fee is merely a smoke screen to hide the real purpose in the Commissioners' minds.

If there is any further information you may desire on this subject, be assured that we shall be very happy to furnish same.

Respectfully,

WM. J. THOMPKINS.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the following briefly are the facts—and I shall take only a few moments: Prior to 1935 the recording of these instruments was done in the office of the recorder of deeds. The fee was very small; it was not sufficient to pay the expense of the work. So the District Commissioners recommended to the Congress that a bill be passed raising the fee for the recording of automobile encumbrances. The Commissioners recommended that the fee be fixed at $2.50 per car in order to raise sufficient funds to defray the expenses of this particular bureau of the recorder of deeds' office. The present recorder of deeds, Dr. Thompkins, remonstrated that $2.50 was too much for the recording of automobile liens, and because, partially, at least, of his objection to the fee of $2.50, the committee saw proper to reduce the fee to $1.50. The Commissioners were in favor of the law of 1935; they gave their approval to the existing law, which was passed only 5 years ago, and which fixed the fee at $1.50, a reduction from their recommendation. As a result of that legislation, the expenses of this particular bureau are now more than defrayed by the receipts from operations under the law which is now in effect. So the argument cannot be legitimately made that this department is not now paying its expenses. As the fees are sufficient to pay the expenses, there must be some reason other than a change of fees as the basis for the proposed legislation.

The director of traffic in the District of Columbia desires to take over the particular job of recording these instruments affecting motor vehicles. In order to get control of this bureau, legislation must be passed; so this bill proposes to take from the present recorder of deeds' office the department of recording conveyances relating to motor vehicles, and put it under the director of traffic. If that should be done, the present employees under Dr. Thompkins in the present recorder of deeds building will be discharged, because it is obvious that they would not be carried over into the department of the director of traffic. So, as I see the picture, this is simply a fight over patronage between the director of traffic on the one side and Dr. Thompkins, the recorder of deeds, upon the other; and as between these two departments I shall stand with Dr. Thompkins.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. REED. I notice that on page 3 provision is made for the payment of a sum not to exceed $1 "for each such titling and retitling," "and not to exceed the sum of 50 cents for the recording of each such lien or encumbrance, with no fee for releasing." Do these fees go into the Public Treasury?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. They do. None of them go to the recorder of deeds' office.

Mr. REED. That is what I want to know. None of them go to any individual?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Absolutely not. The fees are fixed by law. The fees are all collected and reported to the District treasury, which means the Federal Treasury, and the salaries are provided for by the Congress in the District appropriation bill. The salaries are all fixed by law.

Mr. REED. I beg the pardon of the Senator from Oklahoma for interrupting him. The subject is one with which I am not familiar, and I wanted to be sure on that point.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The law of 1935 was passed to raise the fees to sustain the Department. That law was passed with the approval and upon the recommendation of the officials of the District of Columbia. The Department now is self-sustaining. In order to have this law changed it is desired to reduce the fees somewhat; and if this bill passes there will be a slight reduction. It may be that because of the increased number of cars in the city of Washington a decreased fee will still maintain and pay the expenses of the Department; but, in my judgment, that is not the purpose of this bill. This bill is to get this department out from under Dr. Thompkins and put it under the director of traffic; to decrease the patronage of Dr. Thompkin's office on the one hand and to increase the patronage under the director of traffic and under the Commissioners on the other.

That is all there is to the bill, from my viewpoint. For that reason I am against the motion and shall be against the bill upon final passage.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, as the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] has stated, this bill has been on the calendar for some time. I think a similar bill was reported at the session before the last and expired with the last Congress. We have not been able to obtain action upon the measure because it had to come before the Senate when bills on the calendar were being considered by unanimous consent. It is for that reason that I have moved that the Senate proceed to consider the bill, in order that it may be disposed of.

The bill has been recommended not only by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, not only by the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia, but by the Bar Association of the District of Columbia, by various automobile associations, and by different civic bodies. No one who appeared before the committee raised his voice in objection to the bill, with the exception of the recorder of deeds.

The reason why automobile associations and automobile owners are so anxious to have the bill passed is twofold. First, the Department of Vehicles and Traffic in the District of Columbia issues a certificate of title to every automobile which is sold or resold in the District of Columbia. If this bill shall be enacted into law, that certificate of title will show what liens and encumbrances are against the automobile. A record will be kept in the Department of Vehicles and Traffic of each automobile by engine number; and as a lien or an encumbrance is filed against an automobile, it will be indexed not only by name but also by engine number, so that when the certificate of title is issued it will show not only the title itself but also what encumbrances exist against the automobile.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an inquiry?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. OVERTON. I am very glad to yield.

Mr. ADAMS. Is the certificate of title issued by the Department of Vehicles and Traffic?

Mr. OVERTON. It is.

What happens today is that a certificate of title is issued by one agency, and the recording of liens against the automobile takes place in an entirely different office. The recording is done in the office of the recorder of deeds. When a chattel mortgage or a lien is filed against an automobile in the office of the recorder of deeds it is indexed by name, so that when one gets a certificate of title to an automobile in the District of Columbia he has to get the history of the title, the names of the prior owners of the automobile, go to the recorder of deeds and look through the indexes to determine what mortgages or encumbrances, if any, exist against the automobile. The evidence before the subcommittee showed that it takes, I should say, an average of a day, and sometimes 2 days, to make a proper examination of the records to ascertain what encumbrances exist against an automobile. So the Bar Association of the District of Columbia, which is familiar with the examination of titles to automobiles, has recommended the enactment of the bill.

In respect to the fee that is charged, I do not know what occurred several years ago, when the Senator from Oklahoma states that under a recommendation by the Commissioners the fee for recording an automobile lien was fixed at $1.50, and the fee for recording a release was fixed at $1.50; but I do know that it is an outrageous fee to charge, because all that is done is that the chattel mortgage is taken and not spread of record, but is simply filed; a filing mark is placed upon it, and it is indexed by name in the record. That is all; and for that service $1.50 is charged to the automobile owner. When it comes to releasing the lien—a mere cancelation of the lien—$1.50 additional is charged by the recorder of deeds. This bill provides for a recordation fee of only 50 cents, to be paid to the Department of Vehicles and Traffic, and no charges for recording releases.

What is the situation growing out of the fact that such a large recording fee and such a large fee for recording the release of these encumbrances are charged? The record shows, and it is undisputed, that there are hundreds and thousands of automobile chattel mortgages and liens which are not recorded. The automobile dealers, rather than go to the expense of $1.50 for recording a chattel mortgage against an automobile, build up a contingent fund, and use the money they otherwise would use for recording as against any loss they may suffer by reason of the fact that the chattel mortgage is not recorded, and therefore is not notice to third persons, and they make a profit by it; and when it comes to releases, only an insignificant percentage of these chattel mortgages are released on account of the excessive charge.

Not only that, Mr. President, but it frequently happens that one desiring to purchase an automobile goes to the Department of Vehicles and Traffic and gets a certificate of title, which shows the title and shows only one encumbrance, the vendor's lien. The innocent holder of the certificate of title believes that that represents all there is against the automobile, and he purchases it without any further examination of the records and without any examination of the records of the recorder's office. After a while he wakes up and finds that there are chattel mortgages against the automobile, and as a result he may lose his automobile; and purchasers under such circumstances have lost their automobiles by reason of the fact that they relied upon the certificate of title, while the record of the lien was in another office.

The purchaser of an automobile absolutely relies upon the certificate of title not only as to ownership but as to all liens and encumbrances which are recorded against the automobile. Under the bill the whole transaction would take place in one office. The records would be kept in the Department of Vehicles by engine number, as well as by the names of the automobile owners who have owned the car; so there would be a complete history of the title, showing all the encumbrances, and it would be done for 50 cents an automobile, so far as encumbrances are concerned, and there would be no charge for releasing, thereby saving the automobile owners $2.50 an automobile, which would amount to thousands upon thousands of dollars.

Mr. President, this is a simple explanation of the bill, and this is why the different civic organizations, the automobile owners, the automobile dealers, and, so far as I know, every one in the District of Columbia, with the exception of the recorder of deeds, want the bill enacted into law.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Will the Traffic Bureau issue a certificate of title despite the fact that there are encumbrances on file in the office of the recorder of deeds?

Mr. OVERTON. Yes. The director of traffic is not called upon to show the encumbrances. He issues a certificate of title, since there is filed with him the deed of transfer of the automobile. In case there is a vendor's lien, a chattel mortgage retained in the original sale, it is shown upon the certificate of title. He makes a statement that, so far as he knows, there are no further mortgages or encumbrances against the automobile. But today the Traffic Bureau is not an office for the recordation of chattel mortgages against automobiles, and the purpose of the bill is to make it the record office for the recordation of such chattel mortgages, so that the certificate of title and the information as to encumbrances will be issued from one and the same office.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Let me put it in this way: If I buy a second-hand automobile against which there are two or three mortgages or liens of some kind or other, which are recorded in the office of the recorder of deeds. I can still go into the traffic office and get a certificate of title showing that whoever sold the machine to me had title, without any liens, and the title which I get is of no value against the liens which are recorded?

Mr. OVERTON. None at all. When the Senator got a certificate of title, as he would, he would go to the office of recorder of deeds and examine to see whether any mortgage was recorded in the name of John Jones, who was the last owner of the car, and if someone had sold it to John Jones, some other individual, he would have to get his name by some hook or crook and find out who was the prior owner. Then the Senator would look up in the indexes to see whether any chattel mortgage was recorded against Henry Brown, we will say, and so on. It is a very cumbersome proceeding. It takes time, and it is a very costly procedure from the standpoint of the recording office.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. OVERTON. I am very glad to yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I do not think there is anything extraordinary about having to go to two places to look into a question of title. In my State the license is issued by the State director of licenses, and we do not think it extraordinary to go to the county auditor's office to ascertain whether there are liens against a car. But where there is a certificate of title law it seems to me that a certificate of title should be of some value. As we now have it, it is merely a snare and a delusion so far as the purchaser of a car is concerned.

Mr. OVERTON. I think the Senator's observation is correct; it is a snare and a delusion when people buy automobiles and seek to find whether there are any encumbrances. That is all I desire to say.

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President I should like to make a remark or two on the bill. I do not know anything about the patronage situation in the District of Columbia and I am not interested in it, but it is customary in nearly every State in the Union for chattel mortgages to be filed with the recorder of deeds. If the price for filing chattel mortgages on automobiles in the District of Columbia is too high, there is no one to blame but the Congress of the United States, because they passed the law covering the matter and the situation is easily remedied.

It is customary in most States either for the secretary of state or some other State officer to issue titles to automobiles. In my State the secretary of state issues the title. Chattel mortgages and liens against automobiles are filed with the recorder of deeds, just as chattel mortgages on furniture and other chattel mortgages are filed. It costs 15 cents to file one with the recorder of deeds in my State. It would be easy enough to remedy the situation here by merely cutting the fee which must be paid. I cannot see any reason in the world for creating another bureau in which to file chattel mortgages on automobiles. Why not create a bureau for filing chattel mortgages on furniture and on everything else on which chattel mortgages are given.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TRUMAN. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. The bill does not attempt to create another bureau. The bureau is already in existence, the Department of Vehicles and Traffic.

Mr. TRUMAN. There is a customary filing place, that is, the recorder of deeds' office, where all chattel mortgages are filed. The bill would provide for a special filing place for chattel mortgages on automobiles, and I cannot see any reason for it in the world. If the price for filing such mortgages is too high, we can reduce it. It is customary also to file liens and chattel mortgages with the recorder of deeds. There is no reason in the world I can see why we should make the director of traffic in the District of Columbia a special officer for this purpose.

Mr. President, I think the bill should be defeated. I hope that the ruling of the presiding officer regarding debate on the motion to consider the bill will be overruled, and I hope the motion will then be voted down.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Louisiana a question regarding the bill. If the bill should become a law, would all instruments affecting title and affecting liens against automobiles find lodgement in exactly the same place?

Mr. OVERTON. Yes.

Mr. BONE. I would be constrained to favor a bill which would simplify procedure and put all documents affecting title in the same office. I think it is ridiculous, regardless of what effect it might have on some man's idea of how to run his office, to have documents affecting liens and affecting title scattered all over a series of offices. I wanted to be sure this bill would simplify the procedure.

Mr. OVERTON. I am happy to have the Senator make his observation. He has a correct understanding of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the question.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. Is the motion of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], made before 2 o'clock, to take up Calendar 764, Senate bill 1296, now debatable, in view of the fact the motion was not acted upon prior to the hour of 2 o'clock, there being no unfinished business before the Senate?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

ORDER FOR CONSIDERATION OF RIVER AND HARBOR BILL

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that after the completion of the unfinished business on Wednesday of this week the Senate shall take up for consideration House bill 6264, which is the measure known as the river and harbor bill. I hope there will be no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Carolina? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL CROP INSURANCE ACT

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2635) to amend the Federal Crop Insurance Act, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That section 502 of the Federal Crop Insurance Act, as amended, is hereby amended by substituting the word "crop" for the word "Wheat-crop" and by substituting the words "agricultural commodities" for the word "wheat."

SEC. 2. That section 506 (h) of said act, as amended, is amended by striking out the words "for wheat and other agricultural commodities."

SEC. 3. That section 508 of said act, as amended, is amended by striking out the first comma in subsection (a) thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "and with the cotton crop planted for harvest in 1941."

SEC. 4. That section 508 of said act, as amended, is further amended by striking out the words "producers of wheat against loss in yields of wheat" in the first sentence, and substituting in lieu thereof the words "producers of the agricultural commodity against loss in yields of the agricultural commodity."

SEC. 5. That section 508 of said act, as amended, is further amended by substituting the words "the agricultural commodity" for the word "wheat" in the third sentence of subsection (a).

SEC. 6. That sections 508 (b), (c), and (d) and 516 (a) of said act, as amended, are further amended by substituting the words "the agricultural commodity" for the word "wheat" wherever it appears.

SEC. 7. That section 508 of said act, as amended, is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) In connection with insurance upon yields of cotton, to include provision for additional premium and indemnity in terms of lint cotton to cover loss of cottonseed, such additional premium and indemnity to be determined on the basis of the average relationship between returns from cottonseed and returns from lint cotton for the same period of years as that used for computing yields and premium rates."

SEC. 8. That section 516 (a) of said act, as amended, is amended by striking out the figures "$6,000,000" and substituting in lieu thereof the figures "$12,000,000."

SEC. 9. That said act, as amended, is further amended by redesignating section 518 as section 519, and by addition thereto of the following new section:

"SEC. 518. 'Agricultural commodity,' as used in this act, means wheat or cotton, or both, as the context may indicate."

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS ACT AND THE CATTLE INDUSTRY

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, since the passage by the Senate of the joint resolution extending for 3 years the authority of the President of the United States to negotiate trade agreements with foreign nations, I have received from Wyoming many letters commending me for my supporting vote for that program. I have received others criticizing my actions. For the record I wish to make a short statement.

In the 1936 Wyoming Democratic primaries an able and sincere opponent of mine criticized me for my support and defense of the reciprocal trade agreements law and the Canadian agreement, which reduced the Smoot-Hawley tariff rates on a limited number of cattle. However, I was nominated in that primary contest. In the general election campaign I was opposed by the late Senator Carey, who was one of Wyoming's most popular citizens, a former Governor of the State and the son of a former Governor and United States Senator, each in his time a prominent Wyoming cattleman. The trade-agreements law and the Canadian treaty were prominent issues in that campaign. They were defended by me and other Democratic speakers. I was elected to the Senate. I then thought, and I now think, that many of the Wyoming livestock men and women feel that their industry has not been hurt and will not be damaged in the future by any trade agreement negotiated under the reciprocal-trade law. Of course, I then knew, and I now know, that many cattle and sheep men are sincerely and earnestly opposed to the whole program. I am constrained to believe that some of this group are inclined to take counsel of their fears rather than consult their experiences under the trade program. There are others prominent in livestock councils in Wyoming who have always opposed and will always oppose anything and everything done by a Democratic administration. The latter, with a political ax to grind, are the apostles of fear. They seek to inculcate immediate fears in the minds of Wyoming citizens. They conjure up future evils which never come. In the argument and debates on economic questions these gentry furnish the loud alarms and the fearful whisperings.

But, Mr. President, it is not my purpose to criticize the political technique of anyone, not even Senators from other States who in the nighttime sow tares in my own political fields in the great State of Wyoming.

Mr. President, a few weeks ago I voted against the Pittman amendment, and I voted for the 3-year extension of the reciprocal trade agreements law. When the joint resolution for such extension was first introduced in the House, I entertained some doubts as to the advisability of further extension of the program. That doubt arose from the fact that I had received several letters from prominent Wyoming Democrats and Republicans who are not politicians in any sense, expressing opposition to a further extension, and fears that ultimately agreements might be negotiated which would result in bringing the hoof-and-mouth disease into the United States. Under the circumstances I gave new study to the whole matter. I read much of the voluminous testimony given in the House and Senate hearings. I sat in the Senate and listened to all the arguments and debate, although most of the debate dealt with constitutional and other law questions. I read again the proposed compact negotiated between the United States of America and the Republic of Argentina, sent to the Senate in 1935 as a treaty requiring Senate ratification, and also the President's letter of transmittal asking Senate ratification, as well as Secretary Hull's subsequent letter to the chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee explanatory of the proposed treaty. The fact that that treaty has remained in the files of the Foreign Relations Committee without action for the past 5 years is not germane to what I am saying today. I also asked for and received from the Secretary of State information concerning the 1939 modification of the original Canadian treaty of 1936. I also made individual study of official statistics on markets, farm income, and, particularly, of prices recent and current of livestock and wool.

Let me say here I have never attributed the 1932–33 four and five cent price of beef, nor six to eight cent prices of wool wholly to the unfortunate operation and effect of the Smoot-Hawley bill; neither do I attribute the present and recent higher prices of these productions wholly to the reciprocal-trade agreements, although manifestly the agreements have aided in recovery from the low depression prices. In the end I became convinced that the trade-agreements program and operation thereunder had been beneficial to the Nation as a whole, including Wyoming livestock and other industries. That was the situation, so far as I was concerned, until just before the vote on the Pittman amendment.

Mr. President, just prior to a vote on the Pittman amendment, I suddenly received a large number of telegrams from Wyoming urging, or demanding, that I vote for the Pittman amendment and against the extension of the reciprocal trade agreement law. Half of these telegrams came from three counties. I also received a few telegrams advising me of an aroused local interest in the matter, but not suggesting a course of action for me to follow. Other telegrams came from persons who wished to see the trade-agreements program extended. Naturally I was curious to know who had inspired the sending of these communications. My curiosity was satisfied upon receipt in my office of the April 4 issue of Cow Country, the official organ of the Wyoming Live Stock Association, published at Cheyenne, Wyo., the reading matter in which is usually the product of an astute group of Republican politicians who are also cattlemen, although there are some fine Democrats among the officers and leaders of that association.

Mr. President, I now quote from an appendix of the April 4 issue of Cow Country, as follows:

Senator EDWIN C. JOHNSON, of Colorado, wired Secretary Mollin from Washington on March 28, "Suggest supreme effort on part of cattle interests be exerted urging Senator SCHWARTZ to support Pittman ratification amendment." He further stated in his telegram, "Under practices now in vogue State Department is modifying treaties and almost certain they will modify treaty with Argentina pertaining to sanitary embargo. Cattlemen in Wyoming and Montana should realize perilous situation."

We immediately wired leading stockmen in every county in the State—

That is the State of Wyoming—

urging prompt action, as the amendment would be up for vote in the Senate the following day, Friday, March 29. Democrats and Republicans throughout the State made prompt response, wiring Senator SCHWARTZ urging him to support the Pittman amendment to the Reciprocal Trade Agreement Act, requiring Senate ratification by two-thirds majority. Failed by a margin of only two votes.

Just what Mr. Mollin and his associates telegraphed or telephoned to the prominent cattlemen in every county in Wyoming I do not know, but I am sure they not once mentioned the following facts:

First. That any compact abrogating or modifying the sanitary embargo law for protection of the United States from importations which might bring into this country the foot and mouth disease, or other diseases affecting human, animal, or plant life must be in the form of a treaty requiring ratification by a two-thirds vote of the Senate.

Therefore, on that basis, the Pittman amendment was not needed.

Second. That, while many agricultural products are now below parity by reason of vast surpluses and present war conditions, yet cattle prices were above parity every month in 1939 and remain above parity to this date in 1940.

Third. That more than half the imports of cattle in 1939 were not imported under the trade-agreement quotas but came in under the Smoot-Hawley Act of 1930, paying the full 2½-cent-per-pound duty fixed in that act; and that these imports were thin cattle weighing less than 700 pounds, and went to American ranches and American feed lots for growth and fattening.

Fourth. That in the negotiation of a trade agreement the items to be considered are first studied by a group of experts from the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Commerce, the Department of State, the Tariff Commission, and other interested agencies; and that after public notice there is a hearing before the Committee for Reciprocity Information.

Fifth. That where trade agreements permit a reduction of our existing tariff rates on competitive articles it is the policy of our Government and of the experts from the four Departments to avoid action which will adversely affect American producers and prices, and to secure a larger export of our own products in order to increase American employment and consequent increase of purchasing power among American consumers.

Sixth. That the trade agreements negotiated are for 3-year terms, subject to cancelation by either party on 6 months' notice thereafter and, under some conditions, may be terminated sooner.

Seventh. That after the enactment of the Smoot-Hawley Act in 1930, with its many high tariff rates prohibiting any imports from foreign nations, those foreign nations retaliated with tariffs which shut our products out of their markets, with the result that many of our major industries built plants with American capital in foreign countries, and thus threw out of employment thousands of American workers; and that the trade agreements have sought and measurably succeeded in tearing down some of these barriers to our exports.

Eighth. That the trade agreements are, after all, emergency measures designed to secure the beneficial results I have above indicated; and that at present they constitute a powerful aid to the American people in fostering friendship and solidarity among all nations in the three Americas, to the end that the nations of the Western Hemisphere shall present a united front in the cause of peace and defense against enemies from any source and to hold in line any who might otherwise trade security and democratic liberty for imaginary temporary expediency and illusory economic advantage.

Mr. President, in conclusion let me state that no one claims that the trade-agreements program is perfect and that occasional mistakes may not occur. The only people in Wyoming who imagine they are blessed with the attributes of deity and think themselves the divinely anointed high priests and custodians of American patriotism and wisdom are certain Republican politicians. The trouble they encounter is an inability to convince the Wyoming public. When the time comes, and from whatever source the demand may come, I shall be ready to justify my votes and actions on this matter, confident that no reasoning mind and no attentive ear will think that I have failed in my obligation to the people of Wyoming.

What I can do to support the President in his efforts to preserve peace, to strengthen our material and spiritual defense, and keep our sons away from the shambles of modern warfare, that I will do.

Finally, Mr. President, that none may be in doubt as to the fixed policy of the American Government to protect human, animal, and plant health or life from any possible danger through treaties or trade agreements with foreign nations, I now read into the RECORD a letter addressed to me under date of April 15, 1940, by the Honorable Cordell Hull, Secretary of State, as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
Washington, April 15, 1940.

The Honorable HARRY H. SCHWARTZ,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR SCHWARTZ: I am in receipt of your letter of April 10, in which you state that prior to the passage of the resolution extending the Trade Agreements Act of 1934 cattlemen in the State of Wyoming (were) advised that:

"Under practices now in vogue, State Department is modifying treaties, and (it) is almost certain they will modify treaty with Argentina pertaining to sanitary embargo. Cattlemen in Wyoming and Montana should realize perilous situation."

The policy of this Government since inauguration of the trade-agreements program in 1934 has been precisely to the contrary, and it could not have been more definite and uniform in exactly the opposite course from that set out in the propaganda statement above quoted. Not only has there been no attempt to modify or override our sanitary laws in the administration of the trade-agreements program, but on the contrary the executive department negotiated a treaty with the Argentine Government relative to one phase of the sanitary laws applicable to Argentina and sent that treaty to the Senate for its ratification or rejection under the usual procedure.

And, secondly, it has been customary to include in trade agreements negotiated since 1934 a provision making clear that sanitary measures are not affected. For example, article XII of the present trade agreement with Canada provides, in part:

"2. Subject to the requirement that, under like circumstances and conditions, there shall be no arbitrary discrimination by either country against articles the growth, produce, or manufacture of the other country in favor of the like articles the growth, produce, or manufacture of any other foreign country, the provisions of this agreement shall not extend to prohibitions or restrictions * * *.

"(b) Designed to protect human, animal, or plant health or life * * *."

Other trade agreements contain substantially similar provisions.

It, of course, would be difficult to offer stronger assurance as to the future policy of the executive department than to point to the fixed and uniform policy and practice of that department on its own initiative during the past 6 years. I need not therefore enter upon any hypothetical phases relating to requirements of approval by the Senate.

Sincerely yours,

CORDELL HULL.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, with regard to the remarks made by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SCHWARTZ], I desire to state that the telegram to which he therein refers, was in answer to one received by me from Mr. Mollin. Mr. Mollin's telegram addressed an inquiry to me concerning the likelihood of the adoption of the Pittman amendment by the Senate and whether the Senator from Wyoming was supporting it. Mr. Mollin used my telegram in reply to his without authority. I desire to have my letter of April 9 to Mr. Mollin in regard to his improper use of my telegram placed in the RECORD if there is no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, I certainly have no objection to the request of the Senator from Colorado. I will be delighted if I find that it did not have its genesis with him but with Mr. Mollin. However, it is a pediculous piece of political procedure.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, it might even have originated somewhere else. Mollin testified before the House Ways and Means Committee he had conferred with Mr. Franklyn Waltman, publicity agent for the Republican National Committee, shortly before his testimony. It might even have originated there.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mollin also testified he was a good Republican, but I do not want to raise either the merits of the question or anybody's politics.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter presented by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter is as follows:

APRIL 9, 1940.

Mr. F. E. MOLLIN,
Secretary, American National Livestock Association, Denver, Colo.

DEAR MR. MOLLIN: I was dumfounded to read in the Cow Country Stock Growers my private telegram to you relative to Senator Schwartz's support of the Pittman amendment. All letters and telegrams hereafter received by you from me are strictly private and strictly confidential.

Senator SCHWARTZ is one of the most sincere and honorable men with whom I have ever been associated, and it was not my thought to cast any reflection upon him or question his sound judgment or to give his political enemies ammunition or comfort.

He does not agree with me that the Argentine Sanitary Convention stands in danger of being modified by the reciprocal-trade agreements. He is very sincere in that belief, and he may be absolutely right. I hope that he is.

It is not the concern of one Senator how another Senator votes and in what way he serves the people of his own State. In my enthusiasm for the Pittman amendment, however, I went far beyond the bounds of reason, courtesy, and decency in our discussion by telegraph of the attitude of Senator SCHWARTZ toward the sanitary convention.

It was my thought that that phase of the problem might be emphasized by Wyoming stockmen to Senator SCHWARTZ, because I knew that the Senator did not share my fears. I felt certain that if he thought that there was the slightest danger that foot and mouth disease from the Argentine might enter this country through the reciprocal trade agreement route that he would change his position on the Pittman amendment.

Henceforth I shall be more cautious in replies which I make to inquiries about votes in the Senate. My enthusiasm for a cause shall not lead me astray again.

In the circumstances, I deem it best not to stir the matter up, and I will not insist that you do anything further about it.

Sincerely,

ED. C. JOHNSON,
United States Senator from Colorado.

BUREAU OF MARINE INSPECTION AND NAVIGATION, MIAMI, FLA.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2661) to create a board of inspectors, Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation, at Miami, Fla., which were to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of Commerce is authorized, as the exigencies of the service may require, to rearrange from time to time, by consolidation or otherwise, the location of the several boards of local inspectors and to discontinue boards of local inspectors by abolishing the same or establishing others in their stead: Provided, That the whole number of boards of local inspectors shall at no time be made to exceed those established and authorized on the date of the enactment of this act, except as the same may thereafter be provided by law: Provided further, That the Secretary of Commerce shall, at the beginning of each regular session, submit to Congress a statement of all acts, if any, done under the provisions of this act and the reasons therefor.

And to amend the title so as to read: "An act to provide for rearrangement of the location of the several boards of local inspectors."

Mr. PEPPER. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

OLD-AGE ASSISTANCE, ETC.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, for the RECORD, I desire to call attention to a resolution adopted by the Senate Finance Committee on April 16, 1940, because I think it is a matter of substantial and fundamental importance.

By way of brief introduction, let me say that the Senate Finance Committee has found itself constantly wrestling with the problem of old-age pensions and social security for our senior citizens under the Social Security Act and under various other methods and proposals, such as the Townsend Plan and the general-welfare bill, which have been offered not only for congressional consideration but for the consideration of the country. The Finance Committee heretofore has made great progress in dealing with the general social-security problem by the creation of special study committees. I am very happy to welcome this resolution, which was adopted by the committee on April 16, 1940, because it represents the creation of another special study group. The action was taken primarily at the instance of the distinguished Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the chairman of the committee. I was very happy indeed to cooperate with him in connection with it.

The resolution read as follows:

Resolved, That the chairman of the committee is authorized to appoint a subcommittee of eight members, of whom three shall constitute a quorum, to make a full and complete study with respect to (1) the provisions of the Social Security Act, as amended, relating to old-age assistance and Federal old-age and survivors' insurance benefits, and the Federal Insurance Contributions Act, (2) any bills relating to such matters referred to the committee during the Seventy-sixth Congress, and (3) any proposals dealing with related subjects which may be submitted to the subcommittee during the course of its study. The subcommittee shall report to the full committee as soon as practicable, together with its recommendations.

The Senator from Mississippi has appointed the following committee to serve under the terms of the resolution: The distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] is the chairman. The additional personnel consists of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HERRING], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND].

I am emphasizing the fact of the creation of this committee under the terms of the resolution because I think it is of supreme importance to those sectors of our country which are earnestly discussing the question of old-age security. Here, at last, will be created a forum in which the entire subject may be judicially and comprehensively explored; and, for myself, I have every hope that as a result of the work of the committee under this resolution, which was sponsored primarily by the able Senator from Mississippi, we may ultimately find an old-age program which will really meet the necessities of the situation, and which will be acceptable to the people of the United States.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, the remarks just made by the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] prompt me to ask leave, out of order, to present for appropriate reference—and I hope that appropriate reference will be to the subcommittee just mentioned—various petitions addressed to my colleague from Maine [Mr. HALE] and to me by citizens of Fairfield and other towns in Maine, urging favorable action upon the so-called Townsend recovery bill.

I ask that these petitions may be so referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The petitions will be referred to the proper subcommittee of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, may I ask the distinguished Senator from Michigan if the measures pending before the Finance Committee relate to all features of the Social Security Act or only to the old-age pension feature of the act?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Only to the old-age pension and the old-age-benefit section and anything related thereto by way of alternative proposals to the sections of the Social Security Act. I mean an exploration of the Townsend plan in good faith, an exploration of the so-called general-welfare plan in good faith, a complete and serious effort to determine what is the best plan for the senior citizens of the country in respect to old-age security. We are not authorized to enter upon a study of the other sections of the Social Security Act dealing with unemployment insurance, and so on.

Mr. WALSH. I have an amendment dealing with unemployment insurance and also extending the social-security benefits to persons who are not now embraced in the Social Security Act. I understand from the Senator that the committee is not to deal with that phase of the subject.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is correct.

I apologize to the able Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] for taking the liberty of bringing this matter to the floor myself, but I thought it was of such great importance that it ought to have more emphasis than it has thus far been given.

Mr. HARRISON. I am very glad the Senator has given it.

Mr. PEPPER obtained the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for an observation?

Mr. PEPPER. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. In connection with the matter to which reference has been made, I think we all realize that the subject of old-age pensions is one which requires more comprehensive study than has so far been given to it because of the more or less disjointed way in which it has been presented. I am becoming more and more convinced that we must bring about some method by which old-age pensions and old-age subsistence will be made more uniform throughout the country than they now are. If the problem is a Federal one, it ought to be dealt with as such, and it seems to me that the way in which the Federal Government deals with it ought not to depend upon the exigencies or the whims that may control any State legislature or any State government.

For that reason, I think we must realize that the investigation which has been authorized by the Committee on Finance must take into consideration the whole subject as a national problem, as distinguished from its purely local aspects. I am satisfied that whatever committee the Senator from Mississippi appoints to look into the question will deal with the entire subject, and deal with it in a thorough and comprehensive way.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield to me?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I should like to make one further observation.

The general understanding is that the special committee—and I again apologize for speaking for it, but none of the other members is present—will not undertake its formal work until the first of December. We are seeking entirely to eliminate the subject from any political considerations or aspects. We are prepared to come to Washington ahead of the next session and give ourselves completely to the subject at a time when there is no competition from other matters, so that it may have the type of attention to which the Senator from Kentucky refers.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I was very happy to hear the statements made by all the Senators who have commented on this proposal. I hope the committee will bear in mind, when they are making the investigation, the ascertainment of what amount is adequate by way of pension or benefit, as well as what is the best method of dealing with the matter. In other words, when the committee is investigating this whole subject, as it contemplates doing under the resolution, I hope it will also consider an appropriate recommendation as to what amount is the minimum that every citizen in America who falls in this category should have.

The able leader of this body has just referred by suggestion to the possibility or the probability that the problem is a national one. It seems to me all of us will agree that there must be a minimum amount that will accomplish the things we all have in mind. I hope the committee will not be satisfied to complete its investigation until it considers that phase of the matter, as well as what method is the desirable one to pursue.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Again I do not undertake to speak for the committee, but I think I can speak for what was in the minds of the able chairman of the committee and myself when we were urging this action upon the committee. I completely agree with the Senator from Florida that the fundamental question is first to determine the adequacy of the formula for meeting the human need which is being developed in this technological civilization of ours. Except as we have first determined that factor, nothing else matters.

For instance, the Social Security Act is very beautifully balanced in its actuarial calculations, but unfortunately it cannot remotely meet the necessities of the situation in years to come. That is perfectly obvious. Furthermore, it has an enormous contradiction within itself, inasmuch as it provides greater old-age benefits for noncontributors than it provides for contributors, as the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] pointed out the other day.

I am very sure it is the intention of the committee to start at the bottom and build solidly a complete formula which shall meet adequately the old-age pension aspirations of the United States.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I am gratified that the Senator mentioned the Townsend plan as one of those which would be considered by the committee in its investigation. I know that the wisdom and the virtue of that plan will appeal very strongly to the committee when it goes into a consideration of the subject.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, of course the bill embodying the Townsend plan could not originate in the Senate. It is a matter which must originate in the House of Representatives because of the tax features involved. This is a question which is all important; it involves a very complicated subject which necessarily requires thorough study and consideration. Before the Finance Committee adopted the resolution authorizing the appointment of a subcommittee to study the questions of old-age assistance, old-age insurance, and other related matters, I conferred with Mr. McNutt, and with Mr. Altmeyer, and other members of the Social Security Board. I may say that the conclusion reached by the committee to appoint a subcommittee for the purpose of studying and reporting on this important question met the approval of those gentlemen. I hope and believe that something constructive can be evolved which will improve the present social-security program. I can assure the Senate that the committee will go into every detail of this problem.

SOUTHERN FREIGHT RATE DIFFERENTIALS

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, in comparatively recent years we have heard much talk about southern freight differentials, and we have seen a good deal in print about them. In this morning's Washington Post I noticed an article from the pen of Mr. Roger W. Babson in which he again referred to southern freight rate differentials. The article is headed Fair Deal for Rails. Mr. Babson discusses the Wheeler-Lea railroad reorganization bill, and makes a great many suggestions which have for their purpose the cure of conditions with respect to railroads.

I am particularly interested in this article due to the fact that in discussing the railroad reorganization bill and treating this question Mr. Babson makes the observation that differentials in the South must be wiped out.

I ask unanimous consent that the article by Mr. Babson be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post of April 22, 1940]

FAIR DEAL FOR RAILS

(By Roger W. Babson)

REORGANIZATION SPEED URGED

Only reorganization of the railroads' capital set-up and policies can prevent the air lines, busses, and trucks from eventually making nearly one-half the railroad mileage useless. For that reason, I believe the Wheeler-Lea bill, or some similar friendly legislation, should be pushed hrough this session of Congress. The railroads should be unshackled to give them an even break in their life and death battle with other carriers.

The railroads are the Nation's second biggest taxpayers, biggest customers, and biggest investment. If the railroads could get back on their feet, they could provide thousands of new jobs, put millions of dollars in investors' pockets, and give business a tremendous hypodermic. Today, hampered by I. C. C. regulations, top-heavy capitalization, short-sighted labor leaders, and antiquated rate schedules, the railroads are being battered into a pulp by their aggressive competitors. Pullman traffic is going to the air lines; coach traffic to the busses; lucrative freight and express business to the trucks.

I have no particular love for the railroads, but I hate to see a $20,000,000,000 industry die; I hate to see a million-dollar-a-day taxpayer sandbagged; I hate to see an employer of a million men hog-tied. But that is exactly what is hapepning every minute. In the last 2 years the air lines more than doubled their passenger load.

Their rates are dropping steadily—now are on even terms with Pullman rates on many a jump. Like the railroads, they are soon to segregate their mail, express, and passenger business. A year or two more and we will see freight trains of the air. This is the subrosa idea for using the thousands of military airplanes which, after the European war, will be available for commercial purposes.

The planes are great time savers. Their safety record gets better every year—actually beat the railroads in 1939. They are clean and comfortable; give wonderful service; every passenger is a king. The railroads have improved in this respect, but are still far behind the air lines. They need new blood, younger personnel, men trained in public relations. Instead of disagreeable ticket agents, cold and impersonal train crews, they need employees who like making passengers and shippers comfortable and happy. The colored porters come closer to filling the bill than the high-paid conductors.

The roads must put on more streamlined equipment—not on a few runs—but on many runs. Pullman rates must be slashed drastically, perhaps eventually eliminated. Running time must be continually speeded up. Duplicate runs must be stopped—trains pooled, branch lines eliminated. Freight rates must be flexible—quick to drop when competition threatens. Differentials in the South must be wiped out. Trucks cannot possibly haul heavy freight as cheaply and efficiently as the railroads if the carriers really want to compete.

Chief difficulties of the railroads are fourfold: (1) I. C. C. regulation. (2) Top-heavy capitalization. (3) Job-holding managements. (4) Unfair labor unions. Of these, problem No. 2 seems most urgent. Thirty percent of the Nation's mileage is in receivership—some of it has been for nearly 10 years. Thirty percent more has been only one jump ahead of the sheriff for a similar length of time. A railroad in receivership is not my idea of sales appeal nor good advertising, either for freight or passengers. Certainly it does not help the bondholders nor the stockholder.

Receiverships do, of course, provide big fat salaries for lawyers, insiders, and receivers. The latter actually have more power in running a road in receivership than the president and board of directors had when the road was solvent. These fellows stall and connive to prevent reorganization.

When a railroad comes out of receivership they naturally lose their jobs. Final plans were just announced, for instance, for the Minneapolis & St. Louis, which had been in receivership since 1923—nearly 20 years.

Under such circumstances, security holders lose hope that their road will ever be reorganized. Hence, they sell their defaulted securities at enormous losses—far below their intrinsic value. Meanwhile, the receivers, lawyers, bondholders' committees all suck the blood out of the road. Solvent but sick roads are in the same boat. They try desperately to keep out of receivership. They are forced to scrimp and cut corners to meet their bond interest. Their locomotives and cars wear out. They cannot afford to buy new equipment, to cut rates, to meet competition.

The best thing in the world for the railroads—and that means for every honest person connected with them—would be a sane, wholesale reorganization plan as proposed in the Wheeler-Lea bill. No securities need to be junked. Junior bonds could be put on an income basis. Preferred and common stocks need not be wiped out. They could buy new equipment right and left. They would provide thousands of new jobs in car shops, textile mills, steel foundries, ore mines, lumber camps.

And they would keep on paying taxes. Of course, problem No. 1—regulation—must be attacked at the same time. The carriers must be given more freedom to run their business as they think wise. Once, when the railroads had a monopoly on transportation, I. C. C. regulations were necessary. Today, however, with airplane, bus, and truck competition, many of the I. C. C. regulations are harming both the public and the shippers.

If the roads win their battle, their employees and bondholders—perhaps even stockholders—may win. As it is now, they are a cinch to lose. If the Wheeler-Lea bill is not just right, Government, management, labor, and security holders should be able to find some other working arrangement which could solve the problem. Certainly, we ought not to sit by and see all connected with the railroads—worker, tax collector, investor—get an unnecessary licking. The time has come when the Golden Rule should be applied to all interests. Discrimination is a cardinal sin.

PROCEDURE BEFORE FEDERAL AGENCIES

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I am informed that earlier in the day, at a time when I was not present in the Chamber, there was some discussion of the bill which has come to be known as the Walter-Logan bill. I do not think any agreement was reached about taking up that particular measure. I rise at this time to express the hope that shortly the Senate will proceed to its consideration. It is not my purpose today to comment at all upon the merits of the bill. I think it is a good bill, and I am supporting it. I realize that there are a great many who oppose it, and some do not think it has any merit whatever.

The point I make is that the bill has been on the calendar of the Senate for over a year. Last week a House bill on the same subject passed the House of Representatives after long and vigorous debate by an overwhelming vote, a vote of almost 3 to 1.

I have on my desk in my office a list, furnished me Saturday, showing the names and groups of various organizations throughout the country, bar associations, some labor organizations, some farm organizations, many organizations from every section and part of the country, all expressing the hope that action may be had on the measure at this session of the Congress.

I ask unanimous consent that I may file and have printed in the RECORD the list of organizations supporting the Walter-Logan bill.

There being no objection, the list was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LEGAL ORGANIZATIONS

The American Bar Association, the National Association of Women Lawyers, and the State Bar Associations of California, Colorado, Georgia, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Missouri, Montana, Maryland, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Nebraska, North Carolina, Texas, Vermont, New Hampshire, Virginia, Washington, West Virginia, and Wisconsin. Also the city bar associations of Boston, Chicago (in principle), Cleveland, Dallas, New Orleans, Philadelphia, Phoenix, Erie County or Buffalo, N. Y., and a large number of county bar associations in Michigan, New York, Maine, and other States.

LABOR ORGANIZATIONS

The American Federation of Labor.

FARMER ORGANIZATIONS

The National Grange.

BUSINESS ORGANIZATIONS

The National Association of Electrical Contractors, the National Manufacturers Association, the National Association of Master Plumbers of America, the National Association of Piping, Heating and Air Conditioning Contractors, the National Association of Ornamental Metal Manufacturers, the American Iron and Steel Institute, the Ohio State Chamber of Commerce, the California State Chamber of Commerce, the St. Louis City Chamber of Commerce, the Manhattan Civic Club, the Sentinel Women's Club of Salt Lake City, the National Publishers Association, the National Association of Mail Users, Inc., the Alabama Association of Cotton Manufacturers.

PATRIOTIC ORGANIZATIONS

The American Coalition of Patriotic Societies, the Citizens Emergency Council.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, it has seemed to me today, because of the lack of business ready to be considered by the Senate, that possibly this week, even today or tomorrow, might be a very good time to take up the Walter-Logan bill. I am not in charge of the measure, and would not say anything which might complicate the situation, since I do not know what is proposed, but I express the hope that very shortly the Senate will be permitted to at least consider the measure, and that Senators may have the opportunity of expressing by their own votes whether or not they favor a measure which seems to me to be perhaps the most important legislation to come before the Senate at the present session of Congress.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, the bill to which the Senator has referred as probably the most important piece of legislation to come before the Senate at this session has been on the calendar, as the Senator has stated, for several months, but the strange thing about this all-important piece of legislation is that, important as the Senator says it is, no hearings were held upon it before the Senate Committee on the Judiciary. I myself have been somewhat interested in this bill, and I sent to the Judiciary Committee for a copy of the hearings before the committee, and not a day's hearing was held on this bill, which affects every agency of the Federal Government. There were no hearings before the Senate Committee on the Judiciary. Yet they bring to the floor of the Senate this important bill, which the press is heralding to the country as a bill to save democracy from bureaucracy, applying to it many pious phrases, in order to give it a build-up with the people of the country, and make them think it is all-important to the very existence of the Government. Yet the committee which had it under consideration did not think enough of its importance to hold any hearings on it.

What hearings were held before the House committee on this all-important bill, which, as I have stated, affects every agency of the Federal Government? The hearings consumed about three hours and a half. If a Senator sends for a copy of the hearings, he gets a very small pamphlet. The House committee did give a little consideration to the measure. They, at least, held some hearings on it; but the Senate committee, important as this proposed legislation is said to be, did not hold any hearings on it at all.

I think that when Senators get a chance to look at this important bill, and see how it does affect every agency in the Government, and how it attempts to put them all upon a procrustean bed, how it attempts to fit them all to the same pattern, and how it transfers the functions of every agency in the Federal Government, with a few exceptions which are made in the bill, to the courts of the country——

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Would not one of its effects be simply to provide another long trip through the courts?

Mr. MINTON. Oh, not only one trip; it would cause a dozen trips to the courts. If the bill were properly characterized, it would be called a "make-work bill for lawyers," because that is what it would mean. If there ever was an answer to a defense-lawyer's prayer, it is all wrapped up in the so-called Walter-Logan bill. There are more ways provided in the bill for getting into court and tying up and hamstringing and shackling the various administrations of the Government than was ever conceived or devised by anyone in any kind or form of legislation. The bill should be sent back to the committee whence it came with instructions of the Senate to do its duty by what it considers to be important legislation.

The Attorney General has had a committee which has been studying this matter for almost a year, a committee composed of some of the ablest and most distinguished lawyers in this country. The chairman of the committee is Dean Acheson. One of the members of the committee is Chief Justice Groner, of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia. Another member of the committee is Mr. McFarland, a well-known writer on legal subjects in the District of Columbia. Another is district judge James Morris. There are also three professors from three of the leading law schools of the country on the committee. For months this distinguished committee has been making a study of this all-important subject of administrative law and what to do about it, but they are not yet ready to report, and have said so in a letter to the Attorney General of the United States.

They want more time to study the problem. They want to give some consideration to it. They do not want to have a bill come to the floor of the Senate of the United States without any hearings having been held upon it. They want some hearings to be had upon it, and that some consideration be given to this important measure. However, they have not had the time to complete their study. They have had a distinguished professor of administrative law from the law school of Columbia University making a study, and directing the research upon this important question. As I have said, without proper consideration having been given to this measure and to this kind of legislation, they are not yet ready to report; but the Senate Judiciary Committee were ready to report the bill without having had any hearings on it at all, simply because the American Bar Association wrote the bill and endorsed it. The committee reported it favorably and had it sent to the floor of the United States Senate. Then the American Bar Association undertook a great campaign all over the country and got the bar associations of various States to endorse the measure and had lawyers write to Members of Congress about it, and various organizations to endorse it and propagandize for it.

So Senators in their mail have been receiving communications from organizations which discuss the bill as if they had read it. One great columnist wrote a syndicated column in newspapers which circulate all over the country, about this great bill, and told how important it was, and what it meant to the country, and said, as the Senator from New Mexico did, that perhaps there had been no more important legislation offered in the present session of Congress, if indeed any more important legislation had ever been offered in the Congress of the United States. Then the columnist pointed out at the tail end of his article that the bill would create an administrative court to try questions of administrative law. There is no such provision in the bill at all.

That distinguished columnist—his name is Mark Sullivan—had never read the bill. He had read the report. What report? The report submitted by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, and the committee had made that error in its report, which shows that they did not know what was in their own bill.

That is why I say that before the bill comes before the Senate, with all these pious phrases tacked onto it, with all this propaganda behind it, with so many crying out that it must be passed in order to save democracy, the people of the country and the Senate of the United States ought to know that the committee of the Senate which reported the bill gave scant consideration to it—so little consideration that the report of the committee contained this glaring error which the columnist carried in his column in newspapers which go out all over the country.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ELLENDER in the chair). Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. CHANDLER. Was the Senator from Indiana present when the Senate, without any objection, passed that bill on the call of the Calendar?

Mr. MINTON. No; I was not.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senate passed it without objection.

Mr. MINTON. Senators know how those things happen. If the Senator from Kentucky had been here a little longer he would have learned, as I learned in a short while, that the Unanimous Consent Calendar is for the purpose of getting through the Senate bills which no one is against. Obviously we cannot all be upon the floor of the Senate at all times. It is generally understood that when a Senator is off the floor while the Unanimous Consent Calendar is being called, and a bill in which he is interested and against which he wants to enter his objection is reached and is passed by unanimous consent, that Senator is always permitted to have the Senate's action reconsidered, and enter his objection to the bill, and have it go over.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. As the Senator knows, I objected to that bill on the call of the calendar every time it was called for months, ever since the bill had been reported by the Committee on the Judiciary. On the day it was passed on the call of the calendar I was called to the telephone, and was not on the Senate floor at the time it was reached, and for that reason was not in the Senate Chamber and able to object to its passage, as I had repeatedly objected before.

When I returned to the Chamber, after answering the telephone call, I discovered that the bill had been passed without any objection, and immediately brought the matter to the attention of the Senate, and my former colleague, the late Senator Logan, agreed that the bill should go back to the calendar. As a matter of fact, every Member of the Senate knew that that sort of bill ought not to be passed on the call of the calendar. I was opposed to the bill then, and I am opposed to it now, and I shall oppose it whenever it is brought up for consideration. I would not vote for the bill in its present condition under any circumstances, and should it pass, if I had any influence with the President I would ask him to veto it.

Mr. President, I have no objection to the consideration of the bill at the present time, but certainly such consideration as it could now receive would not be the kind to which it is entitled. I doubt if one-tenth of the Senators have given it the study that is required to understand its ramifications and effects upon departments and bureaus which the Congress itself has created. Congress is responsible for all these bureaus. They would not be in existence if Congress had not created them. Congress has in the laws creating them described the authority and the power of the various bureaus and departments and agencies.

In this bill, in its present form, Congress is asked to say that it made a mistake in creating the bureaus and, therefore, in order that they may be curbed, Congress may not restrict their power or amend the laws under which they exist, but Congress shall say to the courts that they can undertake to say what bureaus which have been set up by the Congress shall or shall not do. That is one of my chief objections to the bill as drawn at the present time.

Mr. MINTON. I thank the Senator from Kentucky. I happen to know that the Senator from Kentucky was off the floor when the Unanimous Consent Calendar was called, and when the bill went through the Senate without any objection being raised. I happened to be with the Senator from Kentucky at the time, considering another matter in which we were both interested.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have not been in the Senate very long, but I have been here sufficiently long to learn that when bills in which I am interested are called upon the calendar I should be present.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator has not been here sufficiently long to be very busy. Much as we should like to do so, we cannot be on the floor of the Senate all the time. Obviously it is not in the cards for all Senators to be present all the time. Look around the Senate Chamber now. Here I am making an important speech, and there is hardly anyone present. [Laughter.] Where are the Senators? I suppose they are working hard either in their offices or in committees, or before Government departments, doing their manifold duties as United States Senators. They cannot be here all the time, as can the junior Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, the Senator is mistaken. When I know the Senator from Indiana is speaking I wish to be present and hear what he has to say.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator from Kentucky always honors me with his presence, and I am always glad there is someone present who needs enlightenment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I may say also that when Senators have repeatedly objected to the consideration of bills on the call of the calendar, and it is well known that they have objected repeatedly, it is, and almost universally has been the custom that when such bills are called while Senators who are opposed to them are temporarily absent, as was known that day when I was called temporarily from the floor, other Senators would not insist on the measures being passed, but would themselves ask that they go over until the opponents of the bills could return to the floor. As I said a while ago, no one would contend that a bill of that sort should be passed by unanimous consent, and without proper discussion, which the bill could not receive on the call of the calendar.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator from Kentucky is correct. We all know that on the call of the calendar the procedure is supposed to be that suggested by the Senator from Kentucky. Senators cannot all be here all the time. It cannot be said that simply because a bill goes through by unanimous consent it has unanimous consent of all the Members of this body, because we know that frequently bills are passed on the Unanimous Consent Calendar which many Senators do not want to have passed, but they simply cannot be present all the time to enter their objection on the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. That incident, however, has nothing whatever to do with the merits of the bill.

Mr. MINTON. None whatever.

Mr. BARKLEY. And the fact that at a particular time the bill slipped through merely because no one called attention to it is no argument why it should now be passed. It has been said over and over again that the bill passed unanimously. It was passed unanimously simply because those who objected to it on the call of the calendar happened not to be present. It was passed under conditions when those who objected to it were temporarily called from the Senate Chamber. I will say to the Senator that after it had gone through in that way my late colleague, Senator Logan, very generously and properly agreed that it ought not to have been passed under those conditions and agreed that it should go back to the calendar.

Mr. MINTON. I remember that very distinctly, because I was present at the conference which was held with the late Senator Logan when he agreed that the bill should go back to the calendar, and I moved that the bill be reconsidered and go back on the calendar.

So, Mr. President, I do not want the bill to be called to the attention of the Senate by my good friend the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], with the implication that, after all, it is an important piece of legislation which everyone favors, and that, because the House passed it 3 to 1, it ought to be brought up here and perhaps receive the same treatment on the floor of the Senate. I wanted the Senate to know at the outset that that bill received very scant consideration at the hands of the Senate committee—so scant, in fact, that the report of the committee which accompanied the bill carried the glaring error that the bill set up a court to determine administrative problems.

As a matter of fact, there had been a bill introduced, which had also been drawn by the American Bar Association, as I understand, which looked to the establishment of a court for the consideration of cases growing out of administrative law. There was a bill of that kind, but that bill was discarded and laid aside. The present bill was written in its place. It does not contain a line which creates or attempts to create a new court to deal with problems of administrative law. So it was because the bill had received such scant consideration, because I admit it is an important bill, and because it affects so many departments of government, that I thought it worth while at this time to direct the attention of the Senate to the fact that the bill has received such scant consideration, and to say that when it comes to the floor of the Senate it ought to receive the most careful consideration of every Member of the Senate.

We ought not to be led astray by the inspired propaganda which is proceeding throughout the country in behalf of the bill, marshaling behind it many pious phrases under the banner of "Democracy against bureaucracy," and leading the people to believe that this bill is the last chance they will have to make a stand against bureaucracy and for democracy before totalitarianism seizes the country and perhaps Hitler takes it over.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. I wish merely to submit a collateral suggestion coming to my mind by reason of the experience with this bill. I wonder if it might be feasible to modify our rules so that if a Senator were definitely opposed to a bill he could enter on the record an objection to the bill, so that if he should find it necessary to go to the telephone there would be upon the record his definite responsibility for objecting. It seems to me that otherwise we are left exposed. If a Senator is willing to take the responsibility of entering his name on the record, as objecting to a bill, it should not pass by unanimous consent. I am wondering whether or not something of that kind might be done by a change in our rules.

Mr. MINTON. I think the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado is very constructive. Something like that ought to be done. We know that frequently when we must leave the floor, if we are able to do so, and do not have to leave too hurriedly, we ask some colleague to be on guard for us and enter our objection to bills which we know are coming up on the call of the calendar.

Mr. President, I hope that when the bill comes up it will receive very careful consideration at the hands of the Senate, such consideration as it did not receive at the hands of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, when I broached this subject in the beginning, I said it was not my purpose at this time to discuss the merits of the bill. I do not intend to discuss it today.

I stated that I was not on the subcommittee which considered the bill. That is quite true. However, I am a member of the Judiciary Committee, and I know quite well that the subcommittee under the leadership of the late Senator Logan, of Kentucky, while it might not have held formal hearings, gave consideration to the bill. It considered the bill, not in one short meeting, but for weeks and months. As the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], who is a member of that committee, will well recall, Senator Logan worked on this bill and another, which did set up a special administrative court. Neither of those measures is new before our committee. They were discussed more than once, and quite frequently.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. The bill pending before the Senate does not set up any administrative court.

Mr. HATCH. None whatever.

Mr. MINTON. But the report which accompanies the bill states that the bill creates such a court.

Mr. HATCH. I am quite sure that Senator Logan erroneously drafted the report in that connection; and if there is any Senator who never made a mistake in writing a report, never misdescribed a bill, or never failed to dot an "i" or cross a "t," I should like to see the color of his hair. Senator Logan knew perfectly well what the bill was about. He spoke on it more than once on the floor of the Senate. The explanation given by Senator Logan on the floor of the Senate was what aroused my interest in the bill.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Does the Senator think that the statement in the report that the bill sets up an administrative court, when as a matter of fact there is not a line in the bill about it, is an insignificant matter such as the crossing of a "t" or the dotting of an "i"?

Mr. HATCH. I think it is of no importance whatever. What I want is exactly what the Senator from Indiana requests, and that is that the Senate consider the bill. That is all I ask. I want the Senate to take it up word for word, line by line, and paragraph by paragraph, so that Senators may ask themselves, "Is this a good bill or a bad bill?" That is all I ask.

I am not raising any cry of dictatorship or totalitarianism. I realize that there is a place in our Government for administrative law. I realize that the complex order in which we live perhaps requires a deviation from some of our old-time customs; but I also realize—and I do not need the testimony of a professor or anybody else to tell me—that every citizen of this land, be he rich or poor, high or low, is entitled to his day in court. That is the theory of the bill.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. I agree with the Senator that every citizen of the country is entitled to his day in court on questions which are justiciable, questions with respect to which there is a case or controversy, and cases in which there are parties. However, I do not think anyone ought to have the right to drag an administrative agency into court in matters which involve rules and regulations of the agency simply because he does not agree with the particular rules or regulations which the agency may have set up. That is what the bill would permit. One would not have to be a party to a lawsuit or controversy. He would not even have to be interested. The matter involved would not have to have any of the elements of justiciability about it, or any of the elements of a case or controversy, or any of the things which entitle a man to his day in court. Any busybody, if he so desired, could drag any one of the Government agencies all the way to the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia if he did not agree with some rule or regulation of the particular board or commission, regardless of whether or not he had any business with the board or commission. Would not the bill permit him to do so?

Mr. HATCH. I shall not discuss the merits of the bill today.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator did discuss the merits of the bill.

Mr. HATCH. I only replied to what the Senator from Indiana started.

I was happy to hear the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] say—and I am sure I correctly understood the Senator—that we should have an opportunity to take up the bill and consider it during this session. That was my main reason for rising.

My friend the Senator from Indiana has mentioned the matter of challenging the rules of an administrative agency. What sort of challenge is permitted under the terms of the bill? Only two questions are pertinent in connection with challenging the rules. One is, Is the rule in accordance with the statute creating the agency? The other is, Is the rule in accordance with the Constitution? Is there something terribly wrong in asking whether or not a rule is in accordance with the statute creating the agency or in accordance with the Constitution?

Mr. AUSTIN and Mr. MINTON addressed the Chair.

Mr. HATCH. I yield first to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Indiana if he can tell me where, in the report he has mentioned, there is reference to the creation of another court.

Mr. MINTON. I think it is on page 12, if my memory serves me correctly. Has the Senator the calendar number, so that I may turn to the report?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; it is Calendar No. 475. I have been trying to find the reference.

Mr. MINTON. I have seen it. I have on my desk a copy of the report.

Mr. AUSTIN. The remainder of the report clearly shows that when Senator Logan was considering this matter he regarded the existing circuit courts of appeals as the courts which would review questions between citizens and the Government. He was not considering the creation of a special court.

Mr. HATCH. I thank the Senator from Vermont. I had not read the report with that thought in mind, and did not recollect just what the report stated on the subject. However, I knew that if Senator Logan made any such statement as that attributed to him by the Senator from Indiana, it was clearly an error—an error such as many of us have made.

Mr. AUSTIN. Of course, in handling the same subject in different ways over several years, as Senator Logan did, a man might duplicate some of his work and inadvertently transfer something from one report to another report on a bill on the same subject. However, I am sure any fair consideration of Senator Logan's report on the bill will clearly show that he was not dealing with a special court, but was dealing with a review by existing courts. If the Senator from Indiana can show me the reference to which he refers, I shall be glad to have it.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, APRIL 22, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O infinite Father of mercy, breathe through our humble prayer. We beseech Thee to reach forth Thy arms of power and encircle the earth that it may feel the nearness and the might of God. Great gulfs of discord and the clanging cymbals of war are crashing around us; according to Thy love and mercy, hear and answer us. Dear Lord, our hearts grow sick as the pagan struggle rages near and far. O speak Thy word in the ears and lay Thy cooling hand upon all marching legions. Haunt them with the thought of the homeless, pain them with the hunger of the poor innocents; crush them with the cries of the children; minister unto the heavy laden and bind up the wounds of the brokenhearted. O Spirit of the Most High, move upon the turbulent waters and let peace come upon the bosom of the tempest, and there shall be light. Bless our Speaker and the Congress; prepare us for the duties of the week; may Thy spirit be with us, lightening the tasks and directing our ways. In our dear Redeemer's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, April 19, 1940, was read and approved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The Chair appointed the following conferees: Mr. MAY, Mr. THOMASON, Mr. HARTER of Ohio, Mr. ANDREWS, and Mr. ARENDS.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Speaker, after the disposition of all legislative matters and matters on the Speaker's desk, I ask unanimous consent to address the House today for 30 minutes, at which time I propose to discuss amendments to the wage and hour bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I have a special order of 30 minutes for today, and I am willing that the gentleman from North Carolina should precede me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Speaker, my good friend and colleague the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HARTLEY], in a mighty fine address given before this House on April 10 on the effects of patents on people of the United States, among other things mentioned one of the greatest inventors of all time, Thomas A. Edison, and inadvertently mentioned in relation to Mr. Edison, Menlo Park.

I rise to remind my good friend and colleague that while Mr. Edison spent considerable of his early years in Menlo Park, nevertheless, the industries which bear his name and where he has carried on the greatest part of his inventive work was in West Orange, N. J., in my district, and where they are now, in commemoration of his achievement, presenting the world premiere showing of Metro Goldwin Mayer's Edison, the Man.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

DRAFT CONGRESSMEN FIRST

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I am informed statistics show that a real genius is born only once out of every 375,000 persons. That being the case, in the 10,000,000 youths who lost their lives in the foolishness of World War 1, we lost the benefit of nearly 30 prospective geniuses. Perhaps that explains why the world is so lacking in sensible leadership today, and has to suffer along with war-mongers and do-nothings in the saddle. Perhaps if the truth were known, we lost many more than 30, because war has a way of taking the best and bravest and strongest first.

To a trained and careful observer it was evident for years prior to 1939 that Europe was developing another war. It is also equally evident to the person who will take time out to ponder and study the trends that the United States is now gradually and perceptibly being brought into the arena of hostilities. I have constantly done everything in my power to point this out and to call for an about-face before too late.

So serious is the situation becoming that I want to serve notice on the powers that be right here and now that I, for one, shall refuse to lend my vote to any move or declaration which will send America's youth to be slaughtered on foreign shores.

Before I would do that and endanger the lives of my three stalwart sons and the sons of other parents I would offer my own life and services, and I call on every Member of Congress to make a similar pledge. Before we declare war let us all agree and vote to insert a proviso that Members of Congress will be the first to be drafted.

In today's mail I am in receipt of the following letter from a brave, disabled soldier of the last war, who puts the challenge up to us in the following letter, as does Col. William J. Donovan in his article entitled "Should men of 50 fight our wars?" and which I ask unanimous consent to insert herewith:

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., April 18, 1940.

Attention Members, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

GENTLEMEN: The articles published in This Week magazine and written by Col. William J. Donovan, World War commander of the fighting Sixty-ninth, deserves the immediate consideration of all Members of Congress, the President, and the War Department. Colonel Donovan, This Week magazine, and the Minneapolis Tribune are to be congratulated for their effort.

We who have seen the enemy army approaching with fixed bayonets, who have, briefly told, had a ringside seat when the devil takes a holiday and we mortals call it war, should accept this challenge and thereby prove to youth that patriotism is not merely the enthusiasm of childhood but a serious responsibility of all citizens. Let every man of 40 offer his services to the War Department, and in event of war the draft of youth will not be necessary. This writer has already made such an offer and received acknowledgment that my name is on file.

It is the belief of the average man that Members of Congress are too old for service and would not vote for war if they themselves had to see front-line action. Colonel Donovan has made a challenge. May I ask how many accept it?

EMIL E. HOLMES,
National Deputy Chief of Staff, Disabled American Veterans of the World War.

[From the magazine This Week]

SHOULD MEN OF 50 FIGHT OUR WARS?

(By Col. William J. ("Wild Bill") Donovan, World War commander the "Fighting 69th")

In the midst of the gigantic preparations we are now making to protect this country and this hemisphere from any threat of aggression, our draft laws are a blind spot which might cost us our very existence as a nation, despite any military victories that might be won by modern war mechanisms.

For, if war should come with whatever nation, our manpower—the most vital factor in our national defense—apparently would be mobilized according to a system that bears about as much relation to our present national-defense needs as a Civil War musket to modern, mechanized warfare.

This system, under which America has drafted its fighting men since the Civil War—and which presumably would be put back in force should we enter another war—would exclude from active service all men over the age of 45. The burden of the fighting would be thrown on youth—from 18 to 30.

America's first great war, the Revolution, was won by men up to 60. But in the Civil War the age limits for military service ranged from 20 to 45. The draft law of 1918 expanded the limits on the side of youth—to 18 years of age.

This law assumed (1) that a stripling of 18 is better prepared to defend his country than a vigorous adult past the 45-year mark; and (2) that the country can better afford to lose a youth on the battlefield than a mature adult.

The march of events since the Civil War has made the fallacy of both these assumptions more and more apparent. Better living conditions and improved medical technique have multiplied the years of the average man's span of usefulness. Our falling birth rate and the cessation of immigration have put on youth the premium of scarcity. The mechanization of modern war has proceeded to a point where the qualities of middle age (mechanical training, general experience, and calm judgment) are more important than the extraordinary physical endurance and the reckless courage of youth.

TO SURVIVE A VICTORY

There is no longer any good reason—if ever such reason existed—why the third of our population between 40 and 60 should not share equally the burden of war with the third between 20 and 40.

With the dynamics of world power as unstable as they are, we must take a long-range view of our manpower reserves. The American hemisphere is fabulously rich and invitingly underpopulated. We have pledged its security from invasion. We are the only world power on this side of the Atlantic, and if we are to fulfill our pledges, the time may conceivably come when our manpower will be inadequate unless we take steps to conserve it.

That is one of the fundamental military reasons why our draft laws must be changed. On the side of humanitarianism, or sentiment, if you will, there are other reasons for sparing the young. A tragedy of the last war was the loss of so many able, talented young men. We can never know how many potentially great men the war destroyed nor what the world would be today if they had been spared.

The older we grow the greater becomes our debt to society. It is not a pretty thought that old men make wars and young men fight them. A patriotic father is in a better moral position when he can say to his son "Come!" rather than "Go!"

But the overpoweringly decisive reason why we must amend our draft system springs from the brutal facts of our population trends. We simply cannot afford, from the standpoint of national survival, to toss away several hundred thousand young men in a war. America is growing old at an alarming rate and we must avoid anything that accelerates that pace.

In the 1860's, or even during the World War, we might, from certain points of view, have been able to afford that extravagance. But we must economize in the next war if we are to survive even victory. There is such a thing as winning a war—and losing a peace.

Our birth rate is declining precipitately (from 30 per thousand in 1900, to 25 in 1915, to 16 last year), while the fecundity of the aggressive European powers and of Asia remains high. In 1850 children and youths below 20 made up more than half our population; today they constitute only a little more than a third. Our present generation is not reproducing its own numbers, and unless countercurrents set in, by the year 2000 we shall be a static, if not a dying, country. Sixty years from now those who will have passed the age of 50, a time when many men begin to think of retirement, will outnumber those who are at the ages of greatest capacity and ambition, between 22 and 50.

And it must be remembered that these conditions will be the consequence of natural processes, as they are functioning now, entirely exclusive of the acceleration of war. The loss of several hundred thousand American youths between the ages of 18 and 30—fathers of the next generation—would be a major social and economic tragedy.

RIDING TO WAR ON WHEELS

Modern war can, in the main, be fought about as well by the fathers and grandfathers, or "gaffers," as by prospective fathers. War is subject to the same underlying technical changes that apply in industry and agriculture. The machine is saving labor on the battlefield as in factory and field.

Young men capable to enduring great physical stress and fatigue were needed for the heroic forced marches that characterized our Civil War. They are still essential for the emergencies that will always be the cruxes of any war. But nowadays other qualities, possessed in as great or greater degree by men of 40 to 50, are coming to the fore.

As war becomes increasingly mechanized—and I have followed the course of change from Château-Thierry to Spain—less and less emphasis is placed on a soldier's brawn, more and more on his brain. Instead of marching to war, today's soldier rides to war on wheels.

Maj. George Fielding Eliot illustrates the extent to which war has been mechanized by listing some of the ratings of the United States Navy men: Gunner's mate, fire-controlman, electrician's mate, machinist's mate, ship fitter, carpenter's mate, coppersmith, metalsmith, aviation ordnanceman, molder, patternmaker, sing'eman, radioman, pharmacist's mate, storekeeper, aviation pilot, and others. Like the Navy, the Army needs trained and experienced men to operate complex machine guns, antiaircraft guns, antitank guns, a myriad variety of motor transports, chemical units and communications systems. For these jobs, requiring sound judgment, steady nerves, experience, and habits of independent thinking, men over 45 qualify as well as men between 20 and 30.

Not that I would recommend training grandfathers as war-plane pilots. But the business of war is by no means confined to spectacular dogfights in the air, or even to the body-to-body struggle of infantrymen. It may be that shock troops for front-line action should come principally from younger ranks. Yet, in the World War, battalions of middle-aged men stood up valiantly under the hardships of trench warfare. It was, for example, a middle-aged army that held off the Germans in the first battle of Ypres.

Battalions of older men were increasingly drawn into the front lines in the third and fourth years of the war. More often than not, they outdid the regular and much younger formations. Frequently, in tight spots under fire, I have seen older men become rallying points for young troops on the verge of panic.

Along the great fortified lines of western Europe today, as I saw them shortly before the present war, men endure few hardships that would tax the middle-aged. They live and work in comfortable quarters underground. They are moved around on tramways, or trucks. Their tour of duty is calculated at 4 to 6 days in the front lines. In practice, both the French and Germans have manned their defense lines with older troops, and during the "blitzkrieg" against Poland, the Westwall's defense was entrusted to divisions preponderantly made up of the middle-aged. For every youthful pilot, observer, aerial bomber, or shock trooper, there are dozens, sometimes hundreds, of men in supporting positions behind the front lines. Most of these latter jobs men of 45 and over can handle as well as or better than college-age youngsters.

There is a further consideration. Far from being a constant round of excitement, war is often dull. Shut off from normal diversions, undergoing frequent discomforts, the soldier is likely to brood on possible wounds and death, on separation from his family. Such introspection injures morale. The older man ordinarily can draw on his more patient philosophy of life.

I am assured by psychologists—and I have learned from personal experience in the last war—that the courage of youth and of older men strikes a rough balance. Youth is more impulsive, more reckless. But the middle-aged man has generally seen and endured more hardship. He has spent years discharging social and family obligations. His dependents are likely to be grown and self-supporting. Moreover, he has fewer illusions than youth; life may not seem as sweet. Fear has less effect on his behavior in a crisis. Such a man may not value his life as dearly as youth. But in sacrificing it, he is more likely than youth to drive a hard bargain with the enemy.

On my last tour of Europe, just before the final German-Polish crisis, I had the opportunity of inspecting the arms and equipment of several European powers, including France and Germany. Before that, in Ethiopia and Spain, I watched the dress rehearsals of the present war. I brought home the conviction that the next war would be fought on wheels, not legs, wherever there was movement outside the vast fortified lines. The need for sheer physical prowess in the soldier had diminished; the call was increasingly for intelligence and technical skill.

The swift subjugation of Poland confirmed that opinion. There were Polish soldiers who fought and died without even once seeing their enemy.

War has probably been speeded up more since 1918 than in all the history of armed combat up to 1914.

A middle-aged man may not be able to walk as fast or as far as a boy of 20; but he can assuredly ride as fast in a motor transport. In casting about for a peacetime parallel, I thought of the railroads. Mature men, in their fifties and sixties, pilot our crack railway trains. Railroad work is hard, exacting, and calls for highly skilled experts. Yet the roads employ far more middle-aged and older men than youths.

The report of the United States Railway Retirement Board for 1937 shows, for example, that of 68,452 locomotive engineers, 82.6 percent were more than 45 years old. That age is the upper limit of the present draft act.

When the present army-age categories were fixed the life expectancy of a newborn male was about 35 years. Now it is above 60. Within a few years it may approach the Biblical threescore and 10. Today men of 50, or even 60, are younger than men of 40 were a generation ago.

I don't maintain that the drafting of oldsters would be painless. There are drawbacks. Middle-aged men are, of course, more subject to the degenerative diseases of the heart and other vital organs. The proportion of unfit would rise steeply over the age of 40. In addition, the job of the drill sergeant would be harder. The recruits, no doubt, would be less malleable, the training period longer.

To find out what medical science had to say about the capacities of "gaffers" I went to the New York Academy of Medicine. Medical research on the subject here and abroad indicates that:

1. Youth, 20 to 30 years, has the edge on strength. At grueling tasks, this age period performs with the highest efficiency. But for sustained effort in moderate work, there is virtually no difference between this age group and men up to 50.

2. Manual mobility is not significantly impaired in the age groups from 45 to 60.

3. Reaction time is moderately increased in the upper-age brackets. But, except in very fine work, this would not be an important factor.

4. Judgment of men over 40 is more stable than in the 20-to-30-years bracket.

5. Hearing and visual acuity decrease in men over 40, but glasses may compensate for failing eyesight.

6. In this same group there is a reduction in the rate, but not the aptitude for, learning.

In short, the medical record shows no good reasons why, in a national emergency, healthy oldsters should not be drafted along with healthy youngsters.

Some, subscribing to the maxim, "Old men for counsel, young men for war," may oppose any idea of change. Professional soldiers, usually tradition-bound, may be slow to relinquish the dogma, in effect since 1792, that a citizen is exempt from service after 45. Congress, too, being made up of middle-aged men, may show no eagerness to reorganize manpower provisions for the next national army.

But the majority of "gaffers" will be happy to do their bit. I know many middle-aged men who feel that way, including World War veterans.

In the preparation of draft laws the first consideration must always be a military one. Victory or defeat on the field of battle may, in the first analysis, determine whether America, as we know it, is to survive. But victory on the field of battle alone is not enough. And if we again rely on youth to bear the brunt, the disaster will be greater than any we could fight to avert.

For in the long years after a war is over and won, the Nation's strength will not be measured solely by the successes it has won on the field. No nation can consider itself truly victorious if its military victory has been achieved at the cost of squandering the youth upon which it must rely for greatness in the future.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include therein a copy of a letter written to Senator PRENTISS M. BROWN by a member of the Michigan Legislature.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE LATE HONORABLE CARL E. MAPES

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I want at this time to express my appreciation of one of my dearest friends in the House. I refer to the late CARL E. MAPES, of Michigan, who was a Member when I first came to the House.

The past 15 months have chronicled the passing of 17 of the most beloved and distinguished Members of the House of Representatives. The Seventy-sixth Congress has had a tragic history. In 1 year 19 Members of this Congress have passed to the great beyond. In preparing the notes for this brief appreciation of Mr. MAPES I found it necessary to revise my figures many times. No other Congress since I have been a Member has suffered a like mortality. And these deaths have followed each other with such startling celerity.

A flash of the lightning, a break of the wave,
Man passes from life to his rest in the grave.

It is but another evidence of the exhausting and devastating character of our services here in the legislative department of our Government. It is the inevitable and inexorable price of power and service; for however temperate we may be in both work and play, we pay the toll of tense nerves, jaded hearts, and fatigued muscles. So, after raveling out our lives like prodigal spendthrifts in this forum fashioned for us by our fathers in the Constitution, we at last answer the roll call that is never repeated, for death is the universal decree. All that live must die. The earth itself is but one vast mausoleum. We touch it not without desecrating a myriad sepulchers. The rocks that wall us in are but the dusty archives of life that throbbed and thrilled in dead and forgotten centuries. But, obvious and universal as it is, there is always something that is new and startling when it strikes those we love and those whose lives have been entwined with ours. It is the last curtain on the drama of our earthly career—the inevitable and inexorable decree of fate.

The hand of the king that the scepter hath borne,
The brow of the priest that the miter hath worn,
The eye of the sage and the heart of the brave,
Are hidden and lost in the depths of the grave.

It is most fitting that on this occasion we pause in the busy tide of life and the affairs of government to lay a tribute of love and respect upon the bier of our beloved colleague who for so many years was such a powerful figure in the life and legislation of our Government, and I asked the privilege to join the members of the Michigan delegation in paying a tribute of affection and admiration to the memory of CARL MAPES. Mr. MAPES was here when I became a Member of this body, and it seemed like he would always be a Member of the House, so solid and enduring seemed his personality. He seemed a part of the landscape. In some men there is that substantial quality that gives them weight, power, and influence without any of the tricks and artifices of eloquence or magnetic attraction. Mr. MAPES belonged to the rare and segregated few who depend upon the power and weight of their logic rather than upon their frenzied declamation. He cared little or nothing for mere show and glitter. In fact, he was so equipped with the substantial qualities of mind and transparent sincerity that he lived above the fog of rhetoric and the haze of mere words.

These qualities gave him a reputation for sincerity and honesty and honor not excelled by any Member upon this floor since I have been a Member of the House. So today we come to pay our tribute not only of love and affection but also of admiration to one whose place will be difficult to fill on this floor.

In the past score of years CARL MAPES has written his name deep in the history of the House and the legislation of his country and in the affections of his colleagues. He was an accomplished parliamentarian and his party leaned heavily upon his ability for leadership. He never assumed positions upon parliamentary practice merely for party advantage but hewed to the line on the law, and for that reason was admired by those who agreed with him and respected by those who opposed him. Everybody respected his ability and everybody venerated his intellectual honesty.

But Mr. MAPES was not just a powerful force in legislation, he was also a great moral example to his colleagues and to the manhood of his country. He was a great and guiding impulse to new Members where his exalted character and example set high standards of conduct and legislative integrity.

Fifteen years ago when I was first a Member of the House, Hon. Frederick H. Gillett, and later Hon. Nicholas Longworth, were Speakers of the House; I remember that both, who were discriminating judges of men, reposed great confidence in Mr. MAPES, and that when important legislation was before the House Mr. MAPES was often in the chair, where he presided with great ability, impartiality, and dignity. In those days Mr. MAPES was one of the most trusted leaders under the speakership of Nicholas Longworth.

Mr. MAPES belonged to the thinning ranks of those who were my colleagues when I came here in 1924 to fill the unexpired term of the late Col. E. C. Little. On this side of the aisle only 18 remain of the large number who answered the roll call that December 1, 1924, when I became a Member of the House. What a tragic drama that statement discloses. But it is only the story of life which at its best seems but a pathetic tragedy as we see it from this mundane sphere. We come here with high hopes of public service and strive to crystallize our ideas into constructive legislation and grow old while we struggle in the effort. Then one day we become memories and join that growing throng that has preceded us to the great beyond. And we are perhaps remembered for some particular reason, mayhap some peculiar mannerism only, possibly a little flash of genius or some cause we ardently advocated. And what do we take with us? We hope the gratitude of our constituency for some little work well performed and we know a heart full of deathless memories.

Today we are thinking of Mr. MAPES, whose face and figure were a part of our daily life here. When we ask what we shall remember that was peculiar to CARL MAPES, many things crowd our memory. He was patient and kind. He was courteous and gentle. He was patriotic and unselfish. If one did something well, he found opportunity to commend. If someone was about to make a mistake, he gently warned. If one asked for advice, he gave it modestly, with great wisdom and discretion. He was that sort of man that one felt free to consult, and his sage advice was so often a blessing to the new Member.

CARL MAPES was a gentleman of great mind and heart. He had an army of friends and no enemies. He leaves to his family the priceless heritage of a good name and the record of a life full of devotion to his country, his family, and his friends.

The superlative master of the English tongue put upon the lips of Marc Antony a characterization that I think is most appropriately applied to our late colleague:

> He was gentle and the elements
> So mixed in him that nature might stand up
> And say to all the world, "This was a man."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to make two insertions in the RECORD: One, a Federal table of loans and grants by States; the other, an editorial from the Addison (N. Y.) Advertiser.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the requests are granted.

There was no objection.

Mr. SECREST. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include an article in the New York Evening Post of April 17, 1940, by Samuel Grafton.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for two extensions of remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD: One, an extension to include a brief quotation, and another an address by the Postmaster General delivered at Indianapolis, Ind., on March 30.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the requests of the gentleman from Indiana are granted.

There was no objection.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

W. P. A. JOBS

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I consider it a most unfortunate matter that the question of political consideration should have been injected into the consideration of the matter of how many W. P. A. jobs should be provided by the Congress for the next year. I think there are only two matters of importance in connection with this question. One is the need of people for employment in order to support their families; the other is the need of the Nation as a whole for additional volume of consumer buying power in active circulation. My own judgment is that since, according to the best estimates we can find in the country, there are now, and probably will continue to be, in the neighborhood of 10,000,000 people out of work, the W. P. A. should provide two and one-half million jobs, on the average, in the coming year. I would like to see other approaches to this unemployment problem used as well, but I think under all the circumstances at present that is the least we should do. I do not think it is a political question. I think it is an economic question and a question of human need. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a radio broadcast of the work of the National Youth Administration in California.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to amend my unanimous-consent request by asking permission to insert it at that point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARNESS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Ridings, and I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

L. Ridings, formerly of Sherman, Tex., if found qualified in accordance with the provisions of section 25 of the Healing Arts Practice Act, District of Columbia, 1928.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE FOR EDUCATIONAL EMPLOYEES OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 9326) to provide educational employees of the public schools of the District of Columbia with leave of absence, with part pay, for purposes of educational improvement, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Board of Education, on recommendation of the superintendent of schools, may grant leave of absence with part pay to any employee of said Board of Education whose salary is fixed in the Salary Act approved June 4, 1924, who has served in the public schools of the District of Columbia not less than 6 years continuously prior to filing application for leave, for purposes of educational improvement for a period not exceeding 1 year at a time, under conditions not herein otherwise specified as the Board of Education may determine, and the place of said person to be filled by the appointment of a qualified temporary employee for the period of said leave: Provided, That not more than 2 percent of the total number of the above-mentioned employees may be on leave with part pay at the same time.

SEC. 2. Any employee to whom such leave of absence may be granted shall report in writing to the Superintendent, in such form as the Board of Education may determine, the manner in which said leave of absence is being employed, and for failure to comply with any requirement of the rules of the Board of Education or to pursue in a satisfactory manner the purpose for which said leave of absence was granted, the Board of Education, on recommendation of the Superintendent, may terminate such leave of absence at any time.

SEC. 3. Any teacher whose salary is fixed in article I of the act approved June 4, 1924, who is granted leave of absence for educational purposes under the provisions of this act, shall receive compensation during the period of said leave, paid in the same manner as though on active duty, equal to the difference between the salary which the teacher would have received during the year he is on said leave of absence and the basic annual salary of group A or group C of his salary class, less the amount of his contribution to the retirement fund, in accordance with the provisions of the Retirement Act, as amended and approved June 11, 1926.

SEC. 4. SEC. 7. This act shall take effect on and after July 1, 1938.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a certain explanation concerning this bill. I do this, Mr. Speaker, because I believe the Members of the House have a right to know what is in the bill, and I believe it is the responsibility of the committee to explain briefly, and in some cases in detail, the measures we bring before you, because in this committee we do give careful consideration to these matters, and we know the House itself does not have an opportunity to do so, and it places confidence in us when we bring these District measures before the House.

The purpose of this legislation which is proposed is to permit teachers and officers of the school system in the District of Columbia to take leave of absence with part pay for the purpose of educational improvement. It has been found that similar legislation is in effect in most of our comparable cities, and even cities of smaller size. We deemed this measure advisable in an effort to keep the educational system here on a par with that of other cities by permitting the teachers to advance their training. There will be no added expense, because the substitute teachers to be employed will be paid from the salaries of the regular teachers on leave. This bill has the approval of the Board of Education.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. As a schoolman of long experience, I can testify that the practice is a good one, and I am heartily in favor of the bill as the gentleman has explained it.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I thank the gentleman from Arizona, because I do believe that the teachers come back with a new point of view and refreshed for their duties.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BOARD OF INDETERMINATE SENTENCE AND PAROLE, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 9210) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a Board of Indeterminate Sentence and Parole for the District of Columbia and to determine its functions, and for other purposes," approved July 15, 1932, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act entitled "An act to establish a Board of Indeterminate Sentence and Parole for the District of Columbia and to determine its functions, and for other purposes", approved July 15, 1932, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. The Board of Indeterminate Sentence and Parole shall, subject to the approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, appoint an executive secretary, and parole officers, one of whom may be designated as the chief parole officer, and other employees, in such number as shall be appropriated therefor by Congress from time to time. It shall be the duty of such officers, subject to the discretion and control of said Board, to perform such duties and exercise such authority as the Board may direct. The salaries of said executive secretary, parole officers, and other employees shall be fixed in accordance with the Personnel Classification Act of 1923, as amended. Appropriations are hereby authorized for the payment of the salaries of said executive secretary, said parole officers, and other employees, the actual and necessary traveling expenses of the members of the Board, said executive secretary, and said parole officers, and all other necessary expenses incurred in the administration of this act. Until appropriations as herein authorized are made therefor, all said salaries and expenses shall continue to be paid out of the appropriations for the penal institutions as now authorized by law."

SEC. 2. (a) Section 3 of said act, approved July 15, 1931, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. That hereafter, in imposing sentence on a person convicted in the District of Columbia of a felony, the justice or judge of the court imposing such sentence shall sentence the person for a maximum period not exceeding the maximum fixed by law and for a minimum period not exceeding one-third of the maximum sentence imposed, and any person so convicted and sentenced may be released on parole as herein provided at any time after having served the minimum sentence. Where the maximum sentence imposed is life imprisonment, a minimum sentence shall be imposed which shall not exceed 15 years' imprisonment. Nothing in this act shall abrogate the power of the justice or judge to sentence a convicted prisoner to the death penalty as now or hereafter may be provided by law."

(b) For any felony committed before this amendatory act takes effect, the penalty, sentence, or forfeiture provided by law for such felony at the time such felony was committed shall remain in full force and effect and shall be imposed, notwithstanding this act.

SEC. 3. Section 4 of said act, approved July 15, 1932, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4. That whenever, within the limitations of section 3 of this act, it shall appear to the Board of Indeterminate Sentence and Parole, from the reports of the prisoner's work and conduct which may be received in accordance with the rules and regulations prescribed, and from the study and examination made by the Board itself, that any prisoner serving an indeterminate sentence is fitted by his training for release, that there is a reasonable probability that such a prisoner will live and remain at liberty without violating the law, and that in the opinion of the Board such release is not incompatible with the welfare of society, said Board of Indeterminate Sentence and Parole may, in its discretion, authorize the release of such prisoner on parole, and he shall be allowed to go on parole, outside of said prison, and in the discretion of the Board to return to his home, or to such other place as the Board may indicate, upon such terms and conditions, including personal reports from said paroled prisoner, as said Board of Indeterminate Sentence and Parole shall prescribe, and to remain, while on parole, in the legal custody and under the control of the Attorney General of the United States or his authorized representative until the expiration of the maximum of the term or terms specified in his sentence, without regard to good-time allowance, and the said Board shall in every parole fix the limits of the residence of such person paroled: Provided, however, That the conditions prescribed and the residential limits may be thereafter changed or modified as the Board in its judgment may determine."

SEC. 4. Section 5 of said act, approved July 15, 1932, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. If said Board of Indeterminate Sentence and Parole, or any member thereof, shall have reliable information that a prisoner has violated his parole, said Board or any member thereof, at any time within the term or terms of the prisoner's sentence, may issue a warrant to any officer hereinafter authorized to execute the same for the retaking of such prisoner. Any officer of the District of Columbia penal institutions, any officer of the Metropolitan Police Department of the District of Columbia, or any Federal officer authorized to serve criminal process within the United States to whom such warrant shall be delivered is authorized and required to execute such warrant by taking such prisoner and returning or removing him to the penal institution of the District of Columbia from which he was paroled or to such penal or correctional institution as may be designated by the Attorney General of the United States."

SEC. 5. Section 6 of said act, approved July 15, 1932, is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"In the event said prisoner is removed to a penal or correctional institution designated by the Attorney General, the Board of Parole, created by the act of Congress entitled 'An act to amend an act providing for the parole of United States prisoners, approved June 25, 1910, as amended,' approved May 13, 1930, shall have and exercise the same power and authority over such prisoner as the Board of Indeterminate Sentence and Parole would have had such prisoner been returned to a penal institution of the District of Columbia, including the power to revoke his parole."

SEC. 6. (a) Section 8 of said act approved July 15, 1932, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 8. Any person committed to a penal institution of the District of Columbia who escapes or attempts to escape therefrom or from the custody of any officer thereof or any other officer or employee of the District of Columbia, or any person who procures, advises, connives at, aids, or assists in such escape or conceals any such prisoner after such escape, shall be guilty of an offense and upon conviction thereof in any court of the United States shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than 5 years, said sentence to begin, if the convicted person be an escaped prisoner, upon the expiration of the original sentence."

(b) This amendment of section 8 of said act approved July 15, 1932, shall not have the effect to release or extinguish any punishment, penalty, or liability incurred under such section, and such section as originally enacted shall be treated as still remaining in force for the purpose of sustaining any proper prosecution for the violation of such section committed prior to the passage of this amendatory act.

SEC. 7. (a) The proviso to section 9 of said act approved July 15, 1932, is hereby amended to read as follows: "Provided, however, That in the case of any prisoner convicted of two or more crimes other than a felony, including violations of municipal regulations and ordinances and acts of Congress in the nature of municipal regulations and ordinances, when the aggregate of the sentences imposed is in excess of 1 year, said Board of Indeterminate Sentence and Parole may parole said prisoner, under the provisions of this act, after said prisoner has served one-third of the aggregate sentence imposed."

(b) In the case of a prisoner convicted of misdemeanors committed prior to the effective date of this amendatory act, when the aggregate sentence imposed is in excess of 1 year, and in the case of a prisoner convicted of felony committed prior to the effective date of said act approved July 15, 1932, said Board of Indeterminate Sentence and Parole may parole said prisoner under the provisions of said act approved July 15, 1932, as amended, after said prisoner has served one-fifth of the sentence imposed.

SEC. 8. Said act approved July 15, 1932, is further amended by adding at the end thereof a new section to be numbered 11 and to read as follows:

"SEC. 11. All prisoners convicted in the District of Columbia for any offense, including violations of municipal regulations and ordinances and acts of Congress in the nature of municipal regulations and ordinances, shall be committed, for their terms of imprisonment, and to such types of institutions as the court may direct, to the custody of the Attorney General of the United States or his authorized representative, who shall designate the places of confinements where the sentences of all such persons shall be served. The Attorney General may designate any available, suitable, and appropriate institutions, whether maintained by the District of Columbia government, the Federal Government, or otherwise, or whether within or without the District of Columbia. The Attorney General is also authorized to order the transfer of any such person from one institution to another if, in his judgment, it shall be for the well-being of the prisoner or relieve overcrowding or unhealthful conditions in the institution where such prisoner is confined, or for other reasons."

SEC. 9. (a) Where a justice or a judge of the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia has imposed or shall impose a life sentence on a prisoner convicted of a felony committed before this amendatory act takes effect, such prisoner shall be eligible to parole under the provisions of said act approved July 15, 1932, as amended, after having served 15 years of his life sentence.

(b) Where a justice or judge of the district court of the United States has imposed or shall impose a sentence for a definite term of imprisonment on a prisoner convicted of a felony committed before this amendatory act takes effect, such prisoner shall be eligible to parole under the provisions of said act approved July 15, 1932, as amended, after having served one-third of the sentence imposed.

SEC. 10. Section 937 of the act entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1901, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 937. Deduction for good conduct: All persons sentenced to and imprisoned in the jail or in the workhouse of the District of Columbia and confined there for a term of 1 month or longer who conduct themselves so that no charge of misconduct shall be sustained against them shall have a deduction upon a sentence of not more than 1 year of 5 days for each month; upon a sentence of more than 1 year and less than 3 years, 6 days for each month; upon a sentence of not less than 3 years and less than 5 years, 7 days for each month; upon a sentence of not less than 5 years and less than 10 years, 8 days for each month; and upon a sentence of 10 years or more, 10 days for each month, and shall be entitled to their discharge so much the earlier upon the certificate of the superintendent of the Washington asylum and jail for those confined in the jail, and upon the certificate of the superintendent of the workhouse for those confined in the workhouse, of their good conduct during their imprisonment. When a prisoner has two or more sentences the aggregate of his several sentences shall be the basis upon which his deduction shall be estimated."

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, this measure was drafted by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia in cooperation with the members of the Board of Indeterminate Sentence and Parole and also the Department of Justice of the United States.

Its purpose is to perfect the present law in the District of Columbia and bring it into line with the practice in the States. Difficulties have been encountered by the Parole Board in properly functioning under the original act, and these amendments are proposed to correct certain deficiencies which now exist.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

"SEC. 3. The Board of Dental Examiners shall organize by electing from its members a president, and a secretary-treasurer who shall give bond to the United States in the sum of $5,000. The Board shall make and adopt such rules and regulations not inconsistent herewith as it deems necessary to effect the purposes of this act, including (but not limiting thereto) rules and regulations respecting the eligibility of candidates, the scope of examinations, the conducting of examinations, and the securing of compliance with the code of ethics of the American Dental Association, and the said Board hereby is specifically authorized to make and enforce such rules as it may deem proper for the purpose of regulating professional announcements and the number of offices of a licensed dentist. The Board, in its discretion, and under such rules and regulations as it may prescribe, is hereby authorized to permit in hospitals the use of dental internes who are graduates of approved dental schools. The Board shall hold in January and June of each year, in such place as it may designate, examinations to determine the fitness of applicants for licenses as dentists under this act: Provided, That the concurrence of a majority of said Board shall be necessary to grant or revoke a license under this act.

"SEC. 4. The Board of Dental Examiners shall have an official seal, and shall keep a record of its proceedings, a complete record of the credentials of each licensee, a register of persons licensed as dentists and of licenses by it revoked. A transcript of an entry in such records, certified by the secretary-treasurer under seal of the Board, shall be evidence of the facts therein stated.

"SEC. 5. The said Board shall have power to require the attendance of persons and the production of books and papers and to require such persons to testify in any and all matters within its jurisdiction. The president and secretary-treasurer of the Board shall have power to issue subpenas and each shall have authority to administer oaths. Upon the failure of any person to attend as a witness, when duly subpenaed, or to produce documents when duly directed by said Board, the Board shall have power to refer the said matter to any justice of the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, who may order the attendance of such witness, or the production of such books and papers, or require the said witness to testify, as the case may be, and upon the failure of the witness to attend, to testify, or to produce such books or papers, as the case may be, such witness may be punished for contempt of court as for failure to obey a subpena issued or to testify in a case pending before said court. Witnesses who have been subpenaed by the Board, and who testify if called upon, shall be paid the same fees that are paid witnesses in the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia.

"SEC. 6. (1) It shall be the duty of the secretary-treasurer of the Board to enforce the provisions of all laws relating to the practice of dentistry in the District of Columbia, and all violations of said laws shall be prosecuted in the police court of the District of Columbia by the corporation counsel or one of his assistants; and the corporation counsel and his assistants shall render such other legal services as may from time to time be required by the Board of Dental Examiners.

"(2) The major and superintendent of the Metropolitan Police Department shall detail such members of his force as may be necessary to assist the Board in the investigations and prosecutions incident to the enforcement of this act. The Board is authorized to employ such other persons as it deems necessary to assist in the investigation and prosecutions incident to the enforcement of this act.

"SEC. 7. The Board of Dental Examiners shall make annual reports to the District Commissioners, containing a statement of moneys received and disbursed and a summary of its official acts during the preceding year.

"SEC. 8. Any person who desires to practice dentistry within the District of Columbia shall file with the secretary-treasurer of the Board a written application for a license, and furnish satisfactory proof that he is a citizen of the United States and is a graduate of a dental college approved by the Board. Such application must be upon the form prescribed by the Board, verified by oath, and accompanied by the required fee and a recent unmounted autographed photograph of the applicant.

"SEC. 9. An applicant for a license to practice dentistry shall appear before the Board at its first meeting after the filing of his application, and pass a satisfactory examination, consisting of practical demonstrations and written or oral test, or both, in the following subjects: Anatomy, anesthetics, bacteriology, chemistry, histology, operative dentistry, oral surgery, orthodontia, pathology, physiology, prosthetic dentistry, materia medica, metallurgy, and therapeutics, and such other subjects as the Board may from time to time direct: Provided, That the Board may waive the theoretical examination in the case of an applicant who furnishes proof satisfactory to said Board that he is a graduate from a reputable dental college of a State or Territory of the United States, approved by the Board, and holds a license from a similar dental board, with requirements equal to those of the District of Columbia, and who, for 5 consecutive years next prior to filing his application, has been in the lawful and reputable practice of dentistry in the State or Territory of the United States from which he applies: Provided, That the laws of such State or Territory accord equal rights to a dentist of the District of Columbia holding a license from the Board of the District of Columbia, who desires to practice his profession in such State or Territory of the United States. An applicant desiring to register in the District of Columbia under this section must furnish the Board with a letter from the secretary of the board of dental examiners under seal of the board of dental examiners of the State or Territory of the United States from which he applies, which shall state that he has been in the lawful and reputable practice of dentistry in the State or Territory from which he applies for the 5 years next prior to filing his application, and shall also attest to his moral character and professional qualifications.

"SEC. 10. If such applicant passes the examination and is, in the opinion of the Board, of good moral character, he shall receive a license from the Board, attested by its seal, signed by the members of the Board, and registered with the health officer, which, after being registered with the health officer, shall be conclusive evidence of his right to practice dentistry in the District of Columbia. If the loss of a license is satisfactorily shown, a duplicate thereof shall be issued by the Board upon payment of the required fee.

"SEC. 11. The practice of dentistry in the District of Columbia is hereby declared to affect the public health and safety and to be subject to regulation and control in the public interest. It is further declared to be a matter of public interest and concern that the dental profession merit and receive the confidence of the public and that only qualified dentists be permitted to practice dentistry in the District of Columbia. All provisions of this act relating to the practice of dentistry shall be construed in accordance with this declaration of policy.

"(e) That such holder is guilty of conduct which disqualifies him to practice with safety to the public.

"(f) That such holder is guilty of hiring, supervising, permitting, or aiding unlicensed persons to practice dentistry.

"(g) That such holder, being a manager, proprietor, operator, or conductor of a place where dental operations are performed, employs a person who is not a licensed dentist to practice dentistry as defined in this act, or permits such persons to practice dentistry in his office.

"(h) That such holder is guilty of unprofessional conduct.

"The following acts on the part of a licensed dentist are hereby declared to constitute unprofessional conduct:

"(1) Practicing while his license is suspended.

"(2) Willfully deceiving or attempting to deceive the Board or their agents with reference to any matter under investigation by the Board.

"(3) Advertising by any medium other than the carrying or publishing of a modest professional card or the display of a modest window or street sign at the licensee's office, which professional card or window or street sign shall display only the name, address, profession, office hours, telephone connections, and, if his practice is so limited, his specialty: Provided, That in case of announcement of change of address or the starting of practice, the usual size card of announcement may be used. "SEC. 13. No action to revoke or suspend a license shall be taken until the accused has been furnished a statement in writing of the charges against him, together with notice of the time and place of hearing thereof. The accused may be present at the hearings in person or by counsel, or both. The statement of charges and notice may be served personally upon such person or mailed to him at his last known address at least 20 days prior to the hearing.

"SEC. 14. If upon such hearing the Board finds the charges sustained, it may suspend for a definite period or revoke the license of any such dentist. Such revocation or suspension shall take from the person named in such license all rights and privileges acquired thereby. Any dentist whose license has been suspended or revoked may be reinstated and a new license issued to him when in the judgment of the Board such action is warranted: Provided, That such reinstated dentist shall pay all the costs of the proceedings resulting in his suspension and reinstatement and in addition thereto a fee of $25.

"SEC. 15. That in addition to the fees heretofore fixed herein each applicant for a license as dentist shall deposit with his application a fee of $20; with each application for a duplicate license a fee of $5 shall be paid to said Board, and for each certificate issued by said Board a fee of $1 shall be paid. On or before the 1st day of November of each year it shall be the duty of the secretary-treasurer of the Board to mail to each dentist licensed in the District of Columbia, at his last-known address, a blank form for registration. In the event of failure to register on or before the 31st day of December a fine of $5 and the registration fee of $5 will be imposed, and should the practitioner fail to register and pay the fine imposed and continue to practice his profession in the District of Columbia, he shall at the end of 10 days from said date be considered as practicing illegally and penalized as otherwise provided for in this act. If he suspends his practice he may, in the discretion of the Board, upon furnishing satisfactory evidence as to his moral character and professional standing, be reinstated at any time upon registering and paying a prescribed fee of $25. On or before the 1st day of February, annually, said Board shall issue a printed register of the names and addresses so received, together with other information deemed interesting to the profession, a copy of which shall be mailed or otherwise sent to each registrant thereon.

"SEC. 17. Any person shall be deemed to be practicing dentistry who performs, or attempts or advertises to perform, any dental operation or oral surgery or dental service of any kind gratuitously or for a salary, fee, money, or other remunerations paid, or to be paid, directly or indirectly, to himself or to any other person or agency; or who is a manager, proprietor, operator, or conductor of a place where dental operations, oral surgery, or dental services are performed; or who directly or indirectly, by any means or method, furnishes, supplies, constructs, reproduces, or repairs any prosthetic denture, bridge, appliance, or any other structure to be worn in the human mouth, except on the written prescription of a duly licensed and practicing dentist; or who places such appliance or structure in the human mouth or attempts to adjust the same, or delivers the same to any person other than the dentist upon whose prescription the work was performed; or who advertises to the public, by any method, to furnish, supply, construct, reproduce, or repair any prosthetic denture, bridge, appliance, or other structure to be worn in the human mouth; or who diagnoses or professes to diagnose, prescribes for or professes to prescribe for, treats or professes to treat disease, pain, deformity, deficiency, injury, or physical condition of human teeth or jaws, or adjacent structures; or who extracts or attempts to extract human teeth, or corrects or attempts or professes to correct malpcsitions of teeth or of the jaws; or who gives, or professes to give written clinical interpretations or readings of dental roentgenograms; or who administers an anesthetic of any nature in connection with a dental operation; or who uses the words 'dentist,' 'dental surgeon,' 'oral surgeon,' the letters 'D. "SEC. 22. Whoever practices dentistry under a false name, or assumes a title, or appends or prefixes to his name letters which falsely represent him as having a degree from a chartered dental college, or makes use of the words 'dental college' or 'school' or equivalent words when not lawfully authorized so to do, or impersonates another at an examination held by the Board, or knowingly makes a false application or a false representation in connection with such examination, shall be fined not more than $1,000.

"SEC. 23. No person or persons, corporation, or educational institution, except those now duly chartered, shall conduct classes or a school for postgraduate dentistry in the District of Columbia unless with the approval of the Board, and whoever violates this provision shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $500.

"SEC. 24. It shall be unlawful for any person to follow the occupation of dental hygienist in the District of Columbia without having first complied with the provisions of this act and having been registered as hereinafter provided.

"SEC. 25. Any person of good moral character and a citizen of the United States being not less than 18 years of age, who desires to register as a dental hygienist in the District of Columbia and files with the secretary-treasurer of the Board a written application for a license, and furnishes satisfactory proof that he is a graduate of a training school for dental hygienists requiring a course of not less than 1 academic year, and approved by the Board, may make application to be licensed as a dental hygienist in the District of Columbia upon the form prescribed by the Board, verified by oath, and accompanied by the required fee ($10) and a recent unmounted autographed photograph of applicant.

"SEC. 26. An applicant for a license as dental hygienist shall appear before the Board at its first examination after the filing of his application and pass a satisfactory examination consisting of practical demonstrations and written or oral tests on such subjects as the Board may direct. If such applicant passes the examination and is of good moral character, he shall receive a license from the Board, attested by its seal, signed by the members of the Board, which after being registered with the health officer shall be conclusive evidence of his right to practice as a dental hygienist in the District of Columbia according to the provisions of this act.

"SEC. 27. No licensed dentist may employ more than two such licensed dental hygienists without written permission of the Board. Public institutions and the Health Department of the District of Columbia may employ such licensed dental hygienists and are not limited as to the number of licensed dental hygienists that may be employed. A licensed dental hygienist may remove calcic deposits, accretions, and stains from the surfaces of the teeth, but shall not perform any other operation, or diagnose or treat any pathological conditions of the teeth or tissues of the mouth. A registered dental hygienist may operate only under the general direction or supervision of a licensed dentist, in his office or in any public school or other institution rendering dental services, not in violation of the provisions of this act. The Board may suspend, revoke, with power to reinstate, the license of any dentist who shall permit any dental hygienist, operating under his supervision, to perform any operation other than that permitted under the provisions of this section, and it also may suspend or revoke, with power of reinstatement, the license of any dental hygienist violating the provisions of this act; the procedure to be followed in the case of such suspension, revocation, or reinstatement shall be the same as that prescribed by law in the case of suspension, revocation, or reinstatement of the license of a dentist.

"SEC. 28. Any dental hygienist of good moral character duly licensed to practice as such in any State or Territory of the United States, having and maintaining an equal standard of laws regulating the practice of dental hygiene with the laws of the District of Columbia, who has been in the lawful practice of dental hygiene for a period of not less than 2 years in such State or Territory and who files with the secretary-treasurer of the Board of the District of Columbia a certificate from the Board of the State or Territory in which he is licensed, certifying to his professional qualifications and length of service, and who passes a satisfactory practical examination conducted by the Board, may at the discretion of the Board be licensed without further examination upon the payment of the required fee of $10 and the certificate fee of $1: Provided, That the laws of such State or Territory accord equal rights to a dental hygienist of the District of Columbia holding a license from the Board of the District of Columbia who desires to practice dental hygiene in such State or Territory of the United States.

"SEC. 29. The duties and powers of the Board respecting the practice of dentistry as set forth in this act shall apply, unless otherwise specified, equally and in all respects whatsoever to the practice of dental hygiene; and the practice of dental hygiene is hereby declared to affect the public health and safety and to be subject to regulation and control in the public interest to the same extent as herein set forth with respect to the practice of dentistry. The annual registration fee for licensed dental hygienists shall be $3.

"SEC. 30. Whoever engages in the practice of dentistry without a license so to do, or whoever violates any provision of law relating to the practice of dentistry or dental hygiene or the application for examination and licensing of dentists and dental hygienists, for which no specific penalty has been prescribed shall be fined not more than $1,000.

"SEC. 31. A second or subsequent conviction under sections 21, 22, 23, and 30 shall be punished by the maximum penalties prescribed therein, or imprisonment in jail or workhouse not less than 6 months nor more than 1 year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

"SEC. 32. When used in this act—

"(1) Personal pronouns include all genders.

"(2) The term 'Board' means the Board of Dental Examiners.

"(3) Advertising shall be deemed to include those in public print, by radio, or any other form of public announcement.

"SEC. 33. Rules and regulations adopted by the Board shall become effective 30 days after promulgation: Provided, That notice of such rules and regulations is published once a week for 3 consecutive weeks during that period in a newspaper of general circulation in the District of Columbia, and that notice be mailed to each registered dentist and dental hygienist in the District of Columbia.

"SEC. 34. Should any section or provision of this act be decided by the courts to be unconstitutional or invalid, the validity of the act as a whole or of any part thereof other than the part decided to be unconstitutional shall not be affected. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

"SEC. 35. All acts or parts thereof heretofore enacted into law and inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed."

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: On page 2, line 20, after the word "examinations", strike out "and the securing of compliance with the code of ethics of the American Dental Association."

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, I care to say only for the information of the House that the bill pending is one to regulate and license the practice of dentistry in the District of Columbia. I think it was 48 years ago that the first Dental Practice Act went on the books of the District, and very little amendment has been made since that time. In the intervening years some 40 or 45 States have adopted restrictive dental-practice acts which seek, of course, to deal with alleged quackery and to restore a high professional level. This bill, therefore, conforms largely to the laws which obtain in most of the States of the Union, and the amendment which I offered, of course, seeks to preserve insofar as can be done the right of a licensee until his license is finally revoked by court action.

As the bill first came to us it vested complete and plenary power in a board to divest the licensee of his license, but when we stop to consider that a license is something of a property right, for behind it is long and arduous study and the expenditure of money. I for one was persuaded that that license should not be too lightly taken away from one who has earned it. As a result the amendment which was just presented to the House seeks to give the right of appeal to the courts of the District of Columbia and make it a so-called de novo, or new, proceeding so that any dentist whose license for one reason or another may have been suspended or revoked by the action of the dental board can go to the District court within 20 days. He therefore has the right of appeal. I think it is necessary in view of the fact that the license represents a real property interest. At the present time no doctor or lawyer can lose his license without confirmatory action by the District court. This right is being extended to dentists and will be extended to the podiatrists for whom a regulatory bill will be offered during the course of the day.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Do I understand that the amendment now pending brings the practice in the District of Columbia into conformity with that of various State acts?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Quite so, and it is not quite so restrictive as it is in many States.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. And involves the code of ethics that has been almost universally adopted? Is it not wise policy for this body, in legislating for the District of Columbia, if it be a new field of legislation, to move especially cautiously in view of the entering-wedge effect of such legislation, and, if it be an old field of legislation, that the District law should embody such legal principles as have been commonly accepted in most of the States?

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is right. Specifically, many of those things have been written into the bill. We have, however, stricken out one rather broad provision which read something like this: "There must be conformity to the code of ethics of the American Dental Association." The danger of such a wide-open provision as that is that you condition legislation upon a regulatory act by a body which has no official being so far as the District of Columbia is concerned. But there are enumerated in the bill items of unprofessional conduct, and so forth, which are for the guidance of the board as well as for the courts on appeal.

Mr. SECCOMBE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SECCOMBE. I may say for the benefit of the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK], who just asked a question, that the Ohio State Dental Society has endorsed this bill.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I may say that most of the dental societies of the various States, from whom I have heard, have given support to this measure.

Mr. HOLMES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOLMES. Does the gentleman realize that the Dental Association of the District of Columbia has not had any reciprocal arrangement with various other States?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I may say that there is a reciprocal provision in this bill.

Mr. HOLMES. I just found out that the authorities here do not have any reciprocal agreements with any State in the Union as far as the practice of dentistry is concerned.

Mr. DIRKSEN. This gives reciprocity to the other States of the Union.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 13, line 24, after the word "give", insert "written clinical."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. RANDOLPH: On page 11, line 1, after the words "acquired thereby", insert:

"Any dentist whose license has been revoked or suspended by the Board may, within 20 days after the order of revocation or suspension was entered, appeal from such order to the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, where the case shall be heard de novo, and the court after such hearing shall enter such order as in its judgment the Board should have entered. During the pendency of such appeal the order of the Board shall remain in full force and effect unless the court shall otherwise order."

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, this is the amendment to which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] directed his remarks. This was given most careful consideration by the full committee and was reported only this morning. We believe it should be included in the measure.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REGULATION OF PODIATRY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 8692) to amend the act to regulate the practice of podiatry in the District of Columbia, and I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH]?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act to regulate the practice of podiatry in the District of Columbia, approved May 23, 1918, and acts amendatory thereof, are further amended to read as follows:

"There is hereby established a Board of Podiatry Examiners, which shall consist of the health officer of the District of Columbia ex officio and three members, to be appointed by the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

"Said members shall be appointed within 30 days after this act has taken effect, and they shall be so classified by the Board of Commissioners that the term of one member shall expire in 1 year, one in 2 years, and one in 3 years from the date of appointment, and annually thereafter the Board of Commissioners shall appoint one member who shall serve for a period of 3 years, or until his successor is appointed and qualified. Vacancies in said Board shall be filled by the Board of Commissioners for the unexpired term.

"No person shall be eligible for appointment upon the Board who is not a citizen of the United States and who has not been for 5 years next preceding his appointment a resident of and in the active and reputable practice of podiatry in the District of Columbia. Appointments shall be made from a list of three to five eligibles submitted by the Podiatry Society of the District of Columbia. In case of failure of said Podiatry Society to submit said list, the Board of Commissioners shall appoint members in good standing of said Podiatry Society without restriction, who are qualified as aforesaid.

"SEC. 2. The Board of Podiatry Examiners shall organize by electing from its members a president and a secretary-treasurer, who shall give bond to the United States in the sum of $1,000. The Board shall adopt such rules and regulations not inconsistent herewith as it deems necessary respecting the eligibility of candidates, the scope of examinations, and the securing of compliance with the code of ethics of the National Association of Chiropodists. The Board shall adopt an official seal, and shall keep a record of its proceedings, a complete record of the credentials of such licensee, a register of persons licensed as podiatrists and of licenses by it revoked. A transcript of an entry in such records, certified by the secretary-treasurer under seal of the Board, shall be evidence of the facts therein stated. A quorum of the Board shall consist of not less than two members. The Board shall make annual reports to the District Commissioners, containing a statement of moneys received and disbursed and a summary of its official acts during the preceding year.

"SEC. 3. The said Board shall have power to require the attendance of persons and the production of books and papers and to require such persons to testify in any and all matters within its jurisdiction. The president and secretary-treasurer shall have power to issue subpenas and each shall have authority to administer oaths. Upon the failure of any person to attend as a witness, when duly subpenaed, or to produce books and papers when duly directed by the said Board, the Board shall have power to refer the said matter to any justice of the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, who may order the attendance of such witness, or the production of such books and papers, or require the said witness to testify, as the case may be, and upon the failure of the witness to attend, to testify, or to produce such books or papers, as the case may be, such witness may be punished for contempt of court as for failure to obey a subpena issued or to testify in a case pending before said court.

"SEC. 4. It shall be the duty of the secretary-treasurer of the Board to enforce the provisions of all laws relating to the practice of podiatry in the District of Columbia, and all violations of said laws shall be prosecuted in the police court of the District of Columbia by the corporation counsel or one of his assistants; and the corporation counsel and his assistants shall render such other legal services as may from time to time be required by the Board.

"The major and superintendent of the Metropolitan Police Department shall detail such members of his force as may be necessary to assist the Board in the investigation and prosecutions incident to the enforcement of this act. The Board is authorized to employ such other persons as it deems necessary to assist in the investigation and prosecutions incident to the enforcement of this act.

"SEC. 5. Any person who desires to begin the practice of podiatry within the District of Columbia shall file with the secretary-treasurer of the Board a written application for a license, and furnish satisfactory proof that he is a citizen of the United States, not less than 21 years of age, of good moral character, and is a graduate of a podiatry college recognized by the National Association of Chiropodists and approved by the Board. Such application must be upon the form prescribed by the Board, verified by oath, and accompanied by the required fee and a recent unmounted autographed photograph of the applicant. The Board shall hold in January and July of each year, in such place as it may designate, examinations to determine the fitness of applicants for licenses under this act.

"(a) If such application be for a license after examination, the applicant shall appear before the Board at its first meeting after the filing of his application, and pass a satisfactory examination, consisting of practical demonstrations and written or oral test, or both, in the following subjects as the same shall be taught in the recognized podiatry colleges: Anatomy, physiolcgy, pathology, bacteriology, chemistry, materia medica, surgery, therapeutics, diagnosis and treatment, clinical and orthopedic podiatry, and any other of such subjects as the Board may determine.

"(b) If such application be for a license without examination by virtue of a license issued by a State, Territory, or other jurisdiction forming a part of the United States, or by a foreign country, the applicant shall furnish proof satisfactory to the Board that he holds a valid license from a similar podiatry board, with requirements equal to those of the District of Columbia, and that he has been in the lawful and reputable practice of podiatry in the State or Territory or foreign country from which he applies for 5 consecutive years next prior to filing his application: Provided, That the laws of such State or Territory or foreign country accord equal rights to a podiatrist of the District of Columbia who desires to practice his profession in such State or Territory or foreign country.

"SEC. 6. If such applicant passes the examination, or furnishes the information required of applicants for license without examination, he shall receive a license from the Board, attested by its seal, signed by the members of the Board, which after being registered with the health officer shall be conclusive evidence of his right to practice podiatry in the District of Columbia. If the loss of a license is satisfactorily shown, a duplicate thereof shall be issued by the Board upon payment of the required fee.

"SEC. 7. The Board may revoke or suspend the license of any podiatrist in the District of Columbia upon proof satisfactory to said Board—

"(a) That said license or registration was procured through fraud or misrepresentation.

"(b) That the holder thereof has been convicted of a felony.

"(c) That the holder thereof is guilty of chronic or persistent inebriety, or addiction to drugs.

"(d) That the holder thereof is guilty of advertising professional superiority or the performance of professional services in a superior manner; advertising prices for professional service; advertising by means of large display, glaring light signs, or containing as a part thereof the representation of the human foot or leg or any part thereof; employing or making use of solicitors or free publicity press agents, directly or indirectly; or advertising any free podiatry work, or free examination; or advertising to guarantee podiatry service.

"(e) That such holder is guilty of hiring, supervising, permitting, or aiding unlicensed persons to practice podiatry.

"(f) That such holder is guilty of unprofessional conduct.

"The following acts on the part of a podiatrist are hereby declared to constitute unprofessional conduct:

"(1) Practicing while his license is suspended.

"(2) Willfully deceiving or attempting to deceive the Board or their agents with reference to any matter under investigation by the Board.

"(3) Advertising by any medium other than the personal carrying of a modest professional card or the display of a modest window or street sign at the licensee's office, which professional card or window or street sign shall display only the name, address, profession, office hours, and telephone connections of the licensee; except in the case of announcement of change of address or the starting of practice, when the usual size card of announcement may be used. The size of said cards or signs shall be designated by the Board.

"(4) Practicing podiatry under a false or assumed name or corporate name other than a partnership name containing the names of the partners, or any name except his full proper name which shall be the name used in his license granted by the Board.

"(5) Violating this act or aiding any person to violate this act or the podiatry act of any State or Territory.

"(6) Practicing in the employment of, or in association with, any person who is practicing in an unlawful or unprofessional manner.

"The foregoing specifications of acts constituting unprofessional conduct shall not be construed as a complete definition of unprofessional conduct nor as authorizing or permitting the performance of other or similar acts not denounced, or as limiting or restricting the Board from holding that other or similar acts also constitute unprofessional conduct.

"SEC. 8. No action to revoke or suspend a license shall be taken until the accused has been furnished a statement in writing of the charges against him, together with notice of the time and place of hearing thereof. The accused may be present at the hearings in person or by counsel, or both. The statement of charges and notice may be served personally upon such person or mailed to him at his last-known address at least 20 days prior to the hearing. If upon such hearing the Board finds the charges sustained, it may suspend for a definite period or revoke the license of any such podiatrist. Such revocation or suspension shall take from the person named in such license all rights and privileges acquired thereby. Any podiatrist whose license has been suspended or revoked may be reinstated and a new license issued to him when in the judgment of the Board such action is warranted, provided such reinstated podiatrist shall pay all the costs of the proceedings resulting in his suspension and reinstatement and in addition thereto a fee of $25.

"SEC. 9. That in addition to the fees heretofore fixed herein each applicant for a license as podiatrist shall deposit with his application a fee of $25 if for a license after examination, and $50 if for a license by reciprocity; with each application for a duplicate license a fee of $5 shall be paid to said Board and for each certificate issued by said Board a fee of $1 shall be paid. That out of the fees paid to said Board, as provided by this act, there shall be defrayed all expenses incurred in carrying out the provisions of this act, including the detection and prosecution of violations thereof, together with a fee of $10 per diem for each member of said Board, other than the health officer of the District of Columbia, when actually engaged upon business pertaining to his official duties as such Board member: Provided, That such expense shall in no event exceed the total of receipts.

"SEC. 10. During the month of December of each year, every licensed podiatrist shall register with the secretary-treasurer of the Board his name and office address and such other information as the Board may deem necessary upon blanks obtainable from said secretary-treasurer, and thereupon pay a registration fee of $2. On or before the 1st day of November of each year it shall be the duty of the secretary-treasurer of the Board to mail to each podiatrist licensed in the District of Columbia, at his last-known address, a blank form for registration. In the event of failure to register on or before the 31st day of December a fine of $5 and the registration fee of $2 will be imposed, and should the practitioner fail to register and pay the fine imposed and continues to practice his profession in the District of Columbia he shall at the end of 10 days from said date be considered as practicing illegally and penalized as otherwise provided for in this act. If he suspends his practice he may, in the discretion of the Board, upon furnishing satisfactory evidence as to his moral character and professional standing, be reinstated at any time upon registering and paying a prescribed fee of $25. On or before the 1st day of February, annually, said Board shall issue a printed register of the names and addresses so received, together with other information deemed interesting to the profession, a copy of which shall be mailed or otherwise sent to each registrant thereon.

"SEC. 11. Any person shall be regarded as practicing podiatry who, gratuitously or for a salary, fee, money, or other compensation paid either to himself or to any other person, directly, or indirectly, furnishes, or advertises to furnish, podiatry service, or performs or causes to be performed by any other person, agent, or employee podiatric operations of any kind, diagnoses or professes to diagnose, prescribes for or treats or professes to treat disease, pain, deformity, deficiency, injury, or physical condition of human feet or adjacent structures, or uses the words 'podiatrist,' 'chiropodist,' or any letters or title in connection with his name which in any way represents him as being engaged in the practice of podiatry; or who is a manager, proprietor, operator, or conductor of a place where podiatry operations, podiatric surgery, or podiatry services are performed; or who shall state, advertise, or permit to be advertised by sign, card, circular, handbill, newspaper, radio, or otherwise that he can, or will attempt to, perform podiatric operations of any kind or render a diagnosis in connection therewith.

"SEC. 12. Nothing in this act shall apply to a bona fide student of podiatry in the clinic rooms of a reputable podiatry college; to a licensed and legally qualified physician or surgeon unless he practices podiatry as a specialty; to a podiatrist of the United States Army, Navy, Public Health Service, or Veterans' Administration, in the discharge of his official duties, nor to a lawful practitioner of podiatry in another State or Territory making a clinical demonstration before a bona fide society, convention, association of podiatrists, or podiatry college, or performing his duties in connection with a specific case on which he may have been called to the District of Columbia.

"SEC. 13. Whoever engages in the practice of podiatry and fails to keep displayed in a conspicuous place in the operating room in which he practices, and in such manner as to be easily seen and read, the license and annual registration card granted him pursuant to the laws of the District of Columbia, shall be fined not more than $50.

"SEC. 14. Whoever sells or offers to sell a diploma conferring a podiatry degree or a certificate granted for postgraduate work, or a license granted pursuant to this act, or whoever procures such diploma, certificate, or license with intent to use the same as evidence of the right to practice podiatry as defined by law, by a person other than the one upon whom such diploma was conferred, or to whom such license was granted, or any person who with fraudulent intent alters such diploma, certificate, or license, or uses or attempts to use the same, shall be fined not more than $1,000.

"SEC. 15. Whoever practices podiatry under a false name, or assumes a title, or appends or prefixes to his name letters which falsely represent him as having a degree from a chartered podiatry college, or makes use of the words 'podiatry college' or 'school' or equivalent words when not lawfully authorized so to do, or impersonates another at an examination held by the Board, or knowingly makes a false application or a false representation in connection with such examination, shall be fined not more than $1,000.

"SEC. 16. No person or persons, corporation, or educational institution shall conduct classes or a school for postgraduate podiatry in the District of Columbia unless with the approval of the Board, and whoever violates this provision shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $500.

"SEC. 17. Whoever engages in the practice of podiatry without a license so to do, or whoever violates any provision of law relating to the practice of podiatry, or the application for examination and licensing of podiatrists for which no specific penalty has been prescribed shall be fined not more than $1,000.

"SEC. 18. When used in this act—

"(1) Personal pronouns include all genders.

"(2) The term 'Board' means the Board of Podiatry Examiners.

"(3) Advertising shall be deemed to include those in public print, by radio, or any other form of public announcement.

"SEC. 19. Rules and regulations adopted by the Board shall become effective 30 days after promulgation: Provided, That notice of such rules and regulations is published once a week for 3 consecutive weeks during that period in a newspaper of general circulation in the District of Columbia, and that notice be mailed to each registered podiatrist in the District of Columbia.

"SEC. 20. Should any section or provision of this act be decided by the courts to be unconstitutional or invalid, the validity of the act as a whole or of any part thereof other than the part decided to be unconstitutional shall not be affected. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

"SEC. 21. All acts or parts thereof heretofore enacted into law and inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed."

With the following committee amendments:

Page 3, line 2, after the word "examinations", strike out "and the securing of compliance with the code of ethics of the National Association of Chiropodists."

Page 5, line 16, after the word "written", strike out "or oral test, or both" and insert "and oral test."

Mr. SECCOMBE. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that I was unable to attend the meeting this morning. I would like to know if these committee amendments have the approval of the District of Columbia Medical Society which should be working in conjunction with the podiatrists in the preparation of this bill.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I may say, in answer to the inquiry of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SECCOMBE], that we have the approval of the Podiatry Society of the District of Columbia, the Medical Society, and the District health officer. This was given most careful consideration by these groups as well as by members of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. SECCOMBE. I may say to the gentleman from West Virginia that up until the time this bill was presented I did not know what a podiatrist was. I question whether many Members of the House know what a podiatrist is. It seems to be a back-door handle to some other bill that was heretofore presented. I do not know why they put on this title of podiatrists, and furthermore, I will not vote for any bill that pertains to the health and welfare of our citizens that does not have the approval of the Medical Society of my own State of Ohio, together with the approval of the Medical Society of the District of Columbia, and if this bill has that endorsement I have no objection to it.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I may say to the gentleman that a chiropodist engages in the practice of podiatry, and in this measure we are attempting to regulate that practice more properly.

I may say that the chiropodists and podiatrists in the District of Columbia are now operating under an act passed in 1918. This existing law is considered inadequate for the proper protection of the public health as it fails to prescribe any standards of training for podiatrists desiring to practice in the District, contains no standards for examination of podiatry applicants and is devoid of any provisions for the revocation or suspension of licenses. The purpose of this pending legislation is to supply the standards and administrative provisions necessary and consistent with modern podiatry practice acts of other jurisdictions. Of course, as I have said, this measure has the approval of the Podiatry Society and of the health authorities of the District of Columbia.

Mr. SECCOMBE. And also the Medical Society?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Yes; also of the Medical Society of the District of Columbia.

Mr. SECCOMBE. There were some differences of opinion and I did not get to attend the meeting. That is the reason I asked this question.

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this bill. In the first place, it sets up a new board. The bill is a tangle of words. All it does is to regulate foot doctors. A good many people here have learned for the first time what podiatry is. Someone thought it was something to eat, but it is not. It is a part of chiropody. If you read the bill, you will find it is a welter of words. It contains a number of provisions to which I am opposed. I do not believe we should do any more regulating. We have regulated everything now except the blacksmiths, and they have gone out of business. I think it is time that we call a halt on this regulation. I should like to see the bill killed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: On page 11, beginning in line 14, strike out all of section 11 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 11. Any person shall be regarded as practicing podiatry who, gratuitously or for a salary, fee, money, or other compensation paid either to himself or to any other person, directly or indirectly, furnishes, or advertises to furnish, or performs or causes to be performed, by himself or by any other person, agent, or employee, podiatary service; or who uses the words 'podiatrist,' 'chiropodist,' or any letters or title in connection with his name which in any way represents him as being engaged in the practice of podiatry; or who is a manager, proprietor, operator, or conductor of a place where podiatry service is performed; or who shall state, advertise, or permit to be advertised by sign, card, circular, handbill, newspaper, radio, or otherwise that he can, or will attempt to, perform podiatry service or render a diagnosis in connection therewith. Podiatry and podiatry service, within the meaning of this section and this act, are hereby defined to be the surgical, medical, or mechanical treatment of any ailment of the human foot, except the amputation of the foot or any of the toes; and, also, except the use of an anesthetic other than a local one."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 13, line 6, after "surgeon", strike out "unless he practices podiatry as a specialty."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. RANDOLPH: On page 9, line 15, after "acquired thereby", insert the following: "Any podiatrist whose license has been revoked or suspended by the Board may, within 20 days after the order of revocation or suspension was entered, appeal from such order to the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia where the case shall be heard de novo, and the court after such hearings shall enter such order as in its judgment the Board should have entered. During the pendency of such appeal the order of the Board shall remain in full force and effect unless the court shall otherwise order."

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, this amendment is similar to the one offered on the dentistry bill.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REVENUE FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes at this time, prior to calling up the bill (H. R. 8980) to provide revenue for the District of Columbia and for other purposes, in order to make certain explanations, and I shall be joined in this matter by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

Mr. HOLMES. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, and I shall not object, on page 4 of the proposed bill, in line 10, I find the words "every individual," after all the discussion and debate we have had on this very particular point. Does this mean that every individual, whether or not be pays an income tax in his home State, is going to be included in this proposed tax that it is expected to be considered today?

Mr. RANDOLPH. That is a question which certainly is not clear in the minds of a great many individuals.

Mr. HOLMES. The gentleman was going to discuss the bill, and I wanted to know what "every individual" means.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. May I say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that at the proper time I propose to offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the bill that will soon be called up, in order to clarify certain provisions relating to residence, nonresidence, domicile, exemptions, and so forth, and that will come in good time. However, the chairman has asked for 10 minutes in order to give the chairman of the subcommittee an opportunity to make a statement to the House that he felt he did not have a chance to make when the bill came on for action 2 weeks ago.

Mr. HOLMES. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I may say in answer to the inquiry that there is a difference of opinion with regard to who is included.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I have asked the indulgence of the House to make certain statements and I think the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS] desires also to supplement the remarks which I may make at this time.

There was an attempt made on the last District day to have the House of Representatives consider the proposed tax bill, H. R. 8980. Members will recall that the House took action which kept the committee from bringing the actual bill before you for consideration.

I would like at this time to call your attention to language on page 3 of the first report filed last June by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS] from the Committee on the District of Columbia when this same subject was under consideration. The report reads as follows:

The estimated revenue of the general fund of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, using a tax rate of $1.50 per $100 on real estate and tangible personal property, and including a tax on intangible personal property, plus a Federal payment of $5,000,000, amounts to approximately $37,370,000. On the basis of the District of Columbia appropriation bill for 1940, as passed by the House, the general fund revenue deficit in the fiscal year 1940 is estimated to amount to approximately $3,500,000.

The District of Columbia appropriation bill, as passed by the Senate, provides for an increase in the appropriation and using a tax rate of $1.50 per $100 on real estate and tangible personal property, and including a tax on intangible personal property, plus a Federal payment of $5,000,000, will result in a general fund deficit in the revenues of the District of Columbia in the amount of $6,045,000. This bill provides that the Federal contribution for any one fiscal year after June 30, 1939, which in no event shall be in excess of $5,000,000.

The House will recall that that was increased from $5,000,000 to $6,000,000 last year. That would leave, after the intangible personal property tax was taken off, a deficit for this year of approximately $1,000,000.

I have asked the officials of the District of Columbia to give me the returns on the income-tax payments. As of this morning I find that the individual tax returns amount to $1,330,199; the corporate returns, $1,327,651, leaving the total reported as of this morning at $2,657,850. It is believed that in the unopened envelopes there will be an estimated additional $200,000, making a total of $2,857,850.

It is to be noted, however, that in filing these returns we have those individuals who file a claim for refund, and we believe this will bring about an additional deficit. In other words, they are paying but they are paying it under protest, and they will file a claim under a recent decision of the court of appeals. Therefore, it is estimated that approximately $120,000 of this amount would be in the category of "not now in the hands of the District of Columbia." Only 80 of these, of course, have been filed.

Now, going back to the estimated deficit of $3,500,000. With the repeal of the intangible personal property tax of $3,000,000, we find a total deficit of $6,500,000 and deducting the additional contributions that are to be made of $1,000,000, we have a net deficit of $5,500,000.

The income tax, as estimated when the present law was under consideration, was supposed to raise the necessary additional revenue as follows: The individual income tax, $1,500,000; the corporate tax, $2,700,000; making a total of $4,200,000.

I believe, therefore, on the basis of the situation that exists at the present time, there will be a deficit for the present fiscal year of approximately $1,000,000.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I know the chairman desires to state the exact facts, but in the estimate given to us at the beginning of the year the estimate for personal income was $1,000,000 instead of $1,500,000, and the estimate on corporations of 5 percent was $2,200,000. Against the estimate of $1,000,000 from personal returns, the actual receipts up to date, the gentleman states, amount to $1,330,000, and yet the returns are not complete, and I am informed by the same source as the chairman that the actual income from personal tax is about 50 percent above the estimates, while the actual returns from the corporate tax is about one-third off.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Of course, I am attempting to state the situation as I understand it. The figures I have quoted were given to me this morning by those who have charge of the collection of taxes in the District of Columbia and, I am told, are the statistics given by the District auditor last June when this matter was discussed.

Now, Mr. Speaker, an attempt will be made today to consider the present tax bill, and the only thing I wish to say at this time is that the committee finds the subject of taxation in the peculiar jurisdiction of the District of Columbia a most difficult subject to cope with. I know that most of you are sympathetic with the problem presented to us, and I trust that we will have an opportunity today to hear this proposed measure discussed. I understand there are members of the committee who will offer amendments and proposals in lieu of what the committee itself will attempt to have passed. I ask the indulgence of Members today so that we may take this afternoon to discuss tax matters relating to the District of Columbia.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS] for 10 minutes.

REVENUE FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, as many gentlemen remember, on the last District day there was called up for consideration a combination tax bill for the District of Columbia. After the House refused to consider the bill I made the statement that I was convinced that had I had opportunity to explain the bill to the House, it would not have taken that action. We will in a few minutes ask the House to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of that bill. Before we do that I want to explain the bill. First, let me tell briefly the tax situation that exists here at the moment. It affects to a greater or less degree every Member of Congress who has constituents working in the District of Columbia. We have now here an income-tax law which exempts no one. It has been held by the corporation counsel's office that every person living in the District of Columbia, whether or not this is his domicile, is subject to the payment of that tax. Unless that is remedied, here is the practical thing that will happen, which should appeal to some of the Members of the House. Many hundreds or thousands of men and women here in the District of Columbia desire to maintain their voting residence back home, and as a matter of fact, it was the very scheme of things that the District of Columbia would always be a jurisdiction where, though in residence here, you would have the privilege of voting at some place outside of the District.

If this tax is imposed and paid, then these constituents of yours employed here in the District of Columbia will pay, first, a Federal income tax, next, an income tax to the State, if one is provided in the State whence they come, and, third, an income tax to the District of Columbia. They simply cannot afford to do that. What is the out? The only out, then, is to withdraw their voting residence from the State from which they come and declare the District of Columbia to be their residence, but avoiding the payment of the tax back home. In other words, you compel your constituents, in order to dodge the payment of an impossible tax, to deprive themselves of the vote at home. This bill provides three things: First, it imposes an impersonal income tax, with certain exemptions which I shall explain. Title II imposes a 2-percent sales tax, with certain exemptions which I shall explain, but they must work in combination with each other or the bill is no good. Third, it repeals the present income-tax law.

Let me touch briefly, first, the provisions for the income-tax features of the bill. The bill provides for an income tax with an exemption of $10,000 on earned income and an exemption of $1,000 on unearned income. Working in conjunction with that is a sales tax of 2 percent, but food, medicine, and rent are exempt from the payment of the sales tax. The purpose of the $10,000 exemption is this: If you were getting all of your taxes from a sales tax, people with incomes about $10,000 would be getting the best of it under that kind of tax.

I mean if you were raising all of your taxes from a sales tax up to $10,000, the people over the income bracket up to there spend practically all of the money they make. When they get above the $10,000 class they save more money and thus avoid the payment of taxes under the sales-tax system. So, in order to make it equitable, when the tax reaches the $10,000 on sales, then at that point you set in at $10,000 on income, and those above have the two groups.

Now, it has been said that the sales-tax portion of this bill should not be passed because it will be so burdensome on those of the lower income brackets. If you are going to vote against this sales tax, you will have to vote against it for some other reason than that.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. I am very sorry. I only have a limited time. I am trying to do rather a good job.

I want to give you a table of what the effect of this bill would be under the sales tax. This is adapted from how urban families spent their incomes in 1935 and 1936, Bureau of Labor Statistics, United States Department of Labor.

Under this bill persons with an income of $800 a year would pay a tax of $3.28, which is forty-one one-hundredths of 1 percent of their income. Persons with $950 income would pay forty-six one-hundredths of 1 percent of their income. Skipping on down to $1,800, those with an income of $1,800, under the sales-tax portion of this bill, would pay $9.94 in taxes, or fifty-five one-hundredths of 1 percent of their gross income. We will skip down to $3,000. At $3,000 persons would pay, under the sales-tax portion of this bill, fifty-three one-hundredths of 1 percent of their income, or a tax of $19.19.

Coming down to $8,000, you are still at fifty-two one-hundredths of 1 percent of the gross income. When you get above that point, then the percentage starts going down in favor of the high brackets. So there we step in with the income tax, and I will show you what they would pay under a combination of the two, as provided for in this act. On a $1,000 income, a combination of the two taxes, they would pay $4.70—forty-seven one-hundredths of 1 percent of their entire income. That is a combination of the two taxes. At $2,500 they would pay fifty-five one-hundredths of 1 percent of their entire income, because you will remember there is no income tax there. There is your exemption. When you get up to $15,000, under a combination of the two, they would pay $20, or thirteen one-hundredths of 1 percent of their entire income.

Now, if there ever was an equitable tax measure written for a jurisdiction, tailor-made for the application of the tax, this is it, and the District of Columbia is the jurisdiction. You must remember that there is simply no other jurisdiction in the United States comparable to that of the District of Columbia and from which you can get experience in the levying and collection of taxes to run the municipal government.

I sincerely hope that the House will carefully consider this bill and, in the end, pass it. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PACE). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I do not suppose that the Members of the House will have any difficulty in coming to a resolution on the bill that is soon to be pending before the Committee of the Whole, if they perfectly understand what is involved.

The bill that will be before you in a little while is known as the Revenue Act for the District of Columbia and is divided into three titles. The first title sets up an income tax. The second title sets up a sales tax. The third title repeals the income tax which is now on the books of the District of Columbia and which has worked very satisfactorily.

I do not contend for a moment that that act does not need some clarification. May I say parenthetically now that in place of the bill which will be offered by the committee, I propose to offer a substitute which will do nothing more than amend existing law so as to clarify the questions of domicile, the questions of residence and nonresidence, the question of credit to people who pay taxes back home, and those other things that are necessary in the light of a certain decision in the Federal circuit court of appeals.

Now, there is an act on the books today which provides for an income tax. It was put on the statute books in 1939 by this Congress. It was the third or fourth effort that we made before we finally succeeded. Under that law we provide for only 1 percent on the first $5,000, a very low rate. We provide for 1½ percent on the second $5,000. Nobody can kick about the rates that are imposed upon incomes in the District of Columbia.

We have the same exemptions in the law that are in the Federal law, namely, $1,000 for single individuals, $2,500 for families, $400 credit for each dependent. It is a pretty good law. When we placed it on the books the estimate was that it would raise $1,000,000 from the personal income tax and $2,200,000 from corporate sources. Keep those figures in mind. When I say $1,000,000 from personal income and $2,200,000 from corporate income I want to document that statement and to make sure that you get the whole story. I read from the testimony of the District auditor before the Appropriations Committee on the District of Columbia appropriation bill for 1941. He said this:

In lieu of those two taxes; namely, the intangible and another which were repealed, Congress provided a personal net-income tax and a 5-percent corporation net-income tax. The estimated revenue from the first tax is $1,000,000; from the second, $2,200,000. So we hope to derive a total of $3,200,000 from the corporate and individual income taxes.

How close did we get to it? This morning I talked to the collector for the District of Columbia. Here are the latest current figures. We expected to raise $1,000,000 on the personal income tax. There has already been returned $1,330,000, and there are 15,000 returns that have not been opened. As a result instead of the $1,000,000 we expected to raise, we shall have about $1,530,000.

So we shall raise $500,000 more under the personal income tax than we expected. Under the corporate income tax we expected to raise $2,200,000. How close did we get to that? To date there has been returned $1,327,000 with 400 supplemental returns not yet examined. Those are expected to yield another $100,000. Substantially, therefore, we shall have $1,500,000 on corporate returns, and we are only $700,000 behind on that. Bear in mind also that under the corporate income tax in the District of Columbia we do not tax intercompany dividends; we do not tax capital gains where these assets have been held for 2 years or more. We make it just as easy as possible, and we are only about $200,000 under the estimate which we made last year.

In view of all that, why should this Congress be fussing with a new tax which, instead of being patterned somewhat on the Federal tax, undertakes first of all to exempt $10,000 of earned income and $1,000 of unearned income? I say to you that I would be reluctant to go back home and say to my people that I supported a tax which first exempted $11,000. How are you going to justify that? How, in the light of current trends and tendencies where they are trying to put the tax down into the lower brackets in order to get revenue, how can you hold up your head back in your district and say that you did not place your profane hands on income until it was over $10,000 in the case of earned income and $1,000 in the case of unearned income? Yet that is the bill they propose to give you today. I prefer the one we have with an exemption of $1,000 for an unmarried person and $2,500 for a married couple with $400 for dependents; and then we have a 1-percent tax on the first $5,000. All we have to do to clarify the present law is to resolve these questions of domicile and residence, which can easily be done, and which can be supplemented by a reciprocity clause so that if they pay a tax back home they get a credit here. We had such a reciprocity clause in the bill when we went into the Senate conference over a year ago. We discussed around the table with the distinguished Members of that body, but somehow that reciprocity clause was taken out. I was against taking it out at the time.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Very briefly.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The gentleman's talents, of course, are admirable in connection with this legislation as with all legislation, and I compliment him; but I want to know if it is the contention of the gentleman from Illinois that there does not exist for this present fiscal year a deficit of approximately $1,000,000 as I stated earlier in the afternoon?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Definitely not from the income-tax source, let me say to the gentleman.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I am asking if there is not a deficit in District of Columbia finances?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes; and when we had a deficit of $1,800,000 this Congress in its generosity gave them $1,000,000 because we raised the lump sum from $5,000,000 to $6,000,000.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Let me continue just a moment.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I always yield to the gentleman. Just yield to let me make a brief statement.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The gentleman knows that my position in this committee is similar to his. I do not desire to get out from under the payment of a tax. Certainly the $10,000 limitation does not apply in my case. The gentleman knows that I have made that clear several times. I am ready to pay the tax.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Why talk about a sales tax? In the main, it will be collected from visitors and from those residents of the District who are least able to carry the burden. To be sure, it contains exemptions of food and medicines, but it has been the history of sales tax to begin in a limited way and then be extended to every known commodity. Instead of all this fol-de-rol the common-sense thing for the Members of the House to do is to go along with a substitute that I shall offer which clarifies existing law. It modifies the law in several respects. The first is to define gross income of a nonresident as to income that is derived in the District of Columbia. Another has to do with residents. One who is domiciled here or who has maintained a place of abode here for 6 months is classified as a resident. Another provision will be to exempt Congress, the President, the Members of the Cabinet, the members of the courts, and the clerks and secretaries. Now they hold up their hands in holy horror about that sort of thing, but let me read to you from the provisions of the District Code passed in 1926, section 756, title XX.

Here is what Congress did in that code with respect to taxation of personal property. The Members exempted themselves. That was 14 years ago. There is plenty of precedent for it. Here is the language:

Provided, That the Cabinet officers and the persons in the service of the United States Government elected for a definite term of office shall not be considered as residents of the District of Columbia for the purposes of this section.

It is in the law now; so I am willing to clarify it and simply recite a little bit further that the same section shall apply so far as the income tax is concerned. Then it will offer no difficulty in respect of clerks, secretaries, and others whose status has been in doubt.

The other item is No. 5, to give a resident of the District of Columbia credit on taxes if he is taxed out in your State and taxed here at the same time. He is entitled to a credit, so that he will not have to pay twice. We will do the same thing with nonresidents; that is, give credit to a nonresident who is liable for a tax back home, provided there is in the law back home a substantially similar reciprocity provision.

What could be fairer than that? By those amendments, which I will offer in the form of a substitute to the existing law, we can solve this whole tax controversy and throw the bill that will come up for consideration into the wastebasket. Let us not fool with another income-tax law and a sales tax.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ARNOLD]?

There was no objection.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, I do not hope to change the decision of any Member of this House with respect to this tax matter, but I yield to no man in the House concerning my knowledge of a sales tax and how it works. In order to explain, it will be necessary to refer somewhat to myself, and I ask your indulgence in that regard.

I was a member of the Illinois House of Representatives from 1923 to 1927, and I saw the finances of Illinois dwindle and the difficulties increase. I voluntarily retired as a member at that time, but naturally I went back to Springfield on occasions, and I remember that in 1928 or 1929 I heard a group of members talking, most of whom were Republican members, because they were largely in the majority at that time. They were concerned about the situation into which the State was drifting, and it was stated, "If we could put on a sales tax without the people knowing they were paying it, it would be the ideal way to collect revenue in order to run the State."

The situation drifted on. Governor Emmerson assumed office in 1929. The depression came on, and before his term of office expired it was necessary to mortgage for relief purposes the gasoline-tax fund for $30,000,000. Half of the counties of the State of Illinois had defaulted on their real-estate tax, and Illinois itself was on the verge of bankruptcy, when in 1933 Governor Horner came in with a Democratic legislature, of which I was reelected a member.

There was soon proposed and enacted into law a sales tax which was declared unconstitutional because under our archaic constitution of 1870 our forefathers had provided for equal taxation. We had to enact a tax for the privilege of engaging in business, and we let the merchants fight it out so far as collection was concerned. We enacted a second sales-tax law, and it was not any pleasure for a member to vote for it.

We went back to our homes, and half the businessmen, who had to collect the tax, would not speak to us. Many of us thought we would be defeated for reelection. But in 1936, when Governor Horner was told that he could not again run, overnight the objection of the customers and the objection of the businessmen stopped, and the sales tax has proceeded in a way that has produced results which could not be obtained otherwise. Governor Horner was reelected, and not one member of the legislature was defeated because of his vote for the sales tax.

We have a 2-percent sales tax for running the State which has enabled us to increase our distributive fund for school purposes; we have been able to pay old-age assistance averaging about $20 per person to 140,000 clients, and we have enacted in addition thereto a 1 percent temporary sales tax for relief purposes. Now, 1 percent in Illinois produces about $35,000,000 a year. The 3 percent produces over $100,000,000 a year.

How could Illinois survive without this sales tax? We had the "guts" to put it into force and it has worked. The District of Columbia is one of the best suited taxing bodies in the world for assessing a sales tax. We want to see this the greatest capital on earth and it will be, but to obtain that objective we must have adequate revenue. We have many circles under which we have to construct underpasses. We have bridges to construct. In order to be the Capital City that it should be, we must have more revenue than can be derived from a property tax and from an income tax. I am not opposed to an income tax. We cannot levy such a tax in Illinois under our constitution. Businessmen and men who make money on which to pay an income tax are claiming they are already overtaxed. We are doing much for the small man today. They require and should have much. They nearly bankrupted the State of Illinois. These were men who had a vote, but no property, and paid no taxes. In Illinois bond issues were voted to construct swimming pools, parks, and other public improvements. Now, these people who work in Washington will pay a sales tax, and those people who would pay the sales tax want the best roads, highways, and streets that money can buy. They want their parks, swimming pools, and every other sort of recreation in this wonderful National Capital, and they are entitled to that. The people who come here expect to see the greatest Capital City on earth. They do not see it as yet, but they will some day.

I am predicting that in time the District of Columbia will have a sales tax. It depends on the Members of this House whether or not the District has it now.

I am not a member of the subcommittee on taxation. I was 2 years ago, and I was for a sales tax then. I retired from the District Committee. But I think it is one of the taxes to enact.

I saw Florida exempt homesteads up to $5,000, and if you will pardon the personal reference, I own an apartment building in Miami. There is one street there they claim was paved with gold, Biscayne Boulevard. My tax on that apartment building, before the $5,000 exemption on all homesteads was passed by the legislature, was $300 to $400 a year. It is now from $600 to $700 a year, on a nonresident.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] tells me there is being considered in the Committee on the Judiciary a bill to permit the counties to take bankruptcies so they can default on their bonds and "gyp" our people all over the country out of about 50 percent of their money invested in the bonds of counties in Florida and other States. That bill is likely to come out here on the floor for consideration. A few years ago we passed a bill exempting the cities of Florida. Why did they not have the "gumption" to put on a sales tax in Florida when they took off the property tax on homesteads up to $5,000? I tell you that we did the job in Illinois, and they have done it in other States. No one is going to miss this 2 percent. You have exemptions here that we do not have in other States. This sales tax should be enacted now. If it is not, it will be enacted in the not far distant future. [Applause.]

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8980) to provide revenue for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; and, pending that, I ask unanimous consent that general debate on the bill be limited to 1 hour, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] and one-half by myself.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, a preferential motion. I move to lay the pending motion on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair may say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that his motion is not in order. It applies to the order of business and is not in order at this time.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin) there were—ayes 67, noes 5.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas, 231, nays 39, answered "present" 2, not voting 158, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The doors were opened.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8980) to provide revenue for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, with Mr. THOMASON in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], and now yield myself 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I have heretofore explained the high points in this bill, and I wish to take this time to answer, if I can, any constructive question that anyone would like to ask about the proposed legislation.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. GEYER of California. Are there any exemptions in the application of the sales tax?

Mr. NICHOLS. Yes; food, medicine, and rent are exempted from the payment of the tax, and I may say to the gentleman that I read a moment ago the sales-tax portion of this bill. The tax is 2 percent, but with the exemption the average amount of tax paid throughout is about fifty-one one-hundredths of 1 percent.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Will the gentleman explain what effect this income tax has where a person actually lives in a State, like Virginia, for instance, and pays an income tax under the laws of that State?

Mr. NICHOLS. I will be pleased to explain that, and I thank the gentleman for asking the question. There is a nonresident and a resident provision in the bill, and to fit the case that the gentleman from Virginia inquires about, the nonresident provision would apply. The bill provides that a nonresident pays to the District of Columbia an income tax on that portion of his income earned within the District of Columbia. Of course, the $10,000 exemption applies, but if he pays an income tax to the State of his domicile or his home State; in other words, that amount of money which he pays to his home State goes as a credit against the amount that he would pay to the District of Columbia, and in every instance that would mean he would pay no tax to the District of Columbia, because, of course, of the $10,000 exemption, and in the other States of the United States the tax starts very much lower than that. So if he pays it in his resident State, then he will not pay anything to the District.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. In those instances, however, would he have to make a return to the District of Columbia?

Mr. NICHOLS. I do not believe he would.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. The reason I ask that question is because if a person lives in Virginia, but works in Washington, I would like to know whether he would have to make a return or not.

Mr. NICHOLS. I will say to the gentleman that I should know positively about that, but I do not know positively, although I do not think he would.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. In answer to the inquiry of the gentleman from California [Mr. GEYER] as to exemptions, I think the gentleman would want to include also exemptions on motor fuel.

Mr. NICHOLS. Of course, there is no sales tax paid on any commodity which is already paying a special tax, such as motor fuel.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I wanted the gentleman to make that clear.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. How does the proposed sales tax work with reference to the banks? How do they handle their accounts and are there any taxes charged on the accounts?

Mr. NICHOLS. In the District of Columbia we levy special taxes against the banks.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Are the banks included in the operation of the proposed bill?

Mr. NICHOLS. No; they are not. This is only on retail sales and nothing else.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. Certainly.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Is there any provision in this bill which would prevent driving private business institutions out of the District by reason of a situation such as I shall briefly mention? Under this 2-percent sales-tax provision, if a Government employee or a resident in the District were to buy a new automobile for $1,000, he would pay $20 tax. What would stop him from going to Arlington and buying there and saving that $20? And, if that practice is followed, it will put every automobile dealer in the District out of business.

Mr. NICHOLS. The provision in the bill, which is called a use tax, which is in every State which has a sales tax, would stop that very practice.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. NICHOLS. I yield myself 5 minutes more. There will perhaps be one herring, so to speak, that will be drawn across the path of this bill, in which it will be argued that by the application of the use tax, if a person from the District of Columbia should go to Baltimore and buy a tooth brush, he would be stopped at the District line and searched, as he entered the District, in order to compel him to pay a tax on the tooth brush. Just do not get hooked by that argument. There is no State in the United States that has a sales tax that does not have a use-tax provision, and the only purpose of the use-tax provision is to catch the large-sale items, automobiles particularly.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. Certainly.

Mr. BLOOM. What do the tradespeople, the boards of trade, or the merchants' associations of the District think about this?

Mr. NICHOLS. They are for it.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. Yes.

Mr. COLLINS. Suppose some person is employed by a governmental agency in the District of Columbia. Will that person be compelled to pay a tax on his salary to the District of Columbia?

Mr. NICHOLS. Under the income provision of this bill there is in the first place a ten-thousand exemption on earned incomes, which would let out most of the Government employees, but if a person is employed by the Government and he earns above $10,000 and lives in some other State, he would pay an income tax to the State of his home, and the amount he paid would be a credit against what he would have to pay here in the District and would in every instance wipe it out, because of the $10,000 exemption.

My good friend the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], who has worked on this committee hard and long with me, and on this bill, said that he would be ashamed himself to bring in such a perfectly ridiculous bill as to exempt $10,000 in income. I could make quite an argument on that being a pretty good practice in the Federal income-tax law. I forget exactly the figures that I just mentioned a moment ago, but if the figures I used are wrong, I shall make them right in my remarks.

I think that less than 30 percent of the money derived from the collection of Federal income tax comes from the brackets below $10,000, and the object of this $10,000 is because we are doing a brand new thing, we are attempting to write a combined tax bill of sales and income. The sales and the income taxes essentially must be used together under these exemptions, or it will be no good. Certainly, if you are writing simply an income-tax law to raise all the revenue for the District, then it might be a bit absurd to give $10,000 exemptions, but the purpose of this exemption, as I explained originally, is that when you collect a sales tax and you get to those having an income of $10,000 or over, and all of the taxes are collected from the sales tax, those with incomes above $10,000 would be getting the best of it, because they would be able to save the largest portion of their income.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has again expired.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes more.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. Certainly.

Mr. MICHENER. Much is being said about a sales tax. I come from Michigan. The State of Michigan adopted a sales tax. It was enacted after a struggle. The party in power was condemned, and the other party coming into power promised it would do something about the sales tax or at least give the people an opportunity to express their views on it. As a result, after we had had the sales tax in operation for a period of 2 years, a referendum was held in Michigan on whether or not they would exempt from the sales tax, food, clothing, and medicine, and the proposition was beaten overwhelmingly. After practical experience with a sales tax, the people of Michigan by popular vote refused to even remove the tax from food and clothing.

The people of Michigan were satisfied and the people voted to keep the sales tax on, even on food and clothing. I think there is a lot of scare here about a sales tax, and there is nothing to it.

Mr. NICHOLS. The gentleman had a very similar experience to one in Oklahoma. Our legislature passed a 2-percent sales tax. We have the initiated petition in Oklahoma, where enough signers can initiate a petition demanding a vote of the people on an act of the legislature. A year after the sales tax was put on it was submitted to a vote of the people, without any exemptions, and it carried 4 to 1 in Oklahoma.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. What is the attitude of the business people of the District of Columbia toward this?

Mr. NICHOLS. I will say that the business people are for this bill. I want to say further $5,000 was appropriated by this Congress to employ an expert to study the tax structure of the District of Columbia. A man by the name of Pond was employed. He is the head of some tax unit in the State of New York. He came here and a citizens' committee was appointed and a committee of the District officials was appointed. Pond and Mr. Stamm, who is now chairman of the Joint Committee on Taxation between the House and Senate, in collaboration, wrote this bill that is now before the House for consideration.

Mr. DONDERO. May I say to the gentleman that I just called a prominent businessman on Pennsylvania Avenue and asked what their attitude was, and he said they preferred the sales tax.

Mr. NICHOLS. Of course, this should not be classed as a sales tax. It is a combination of sales and income, and essentially must be left as is and applied altogether, or if you tear one from the other you would have a bad bill, in my opinion.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. I yield.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I would like to know what objection there would be to letting the present income tax stay right where it is, with a $5,000 exemption, and then have the 2-percent sales tax?

Mr. NICHOLS. There are many things in the present income-tax bill which are bad. The income-tax bill that we now have was not considered—well, it was considered at one time on the floor of this House, but it was actually written in conference between the House and Senate, and they garbled the job terribly. You may remember that I was in charge of the House conferees and I had to bring this bill back here and report it favorably, but I announced from the floor that I would oppose its passage, and I did oppose its passage. It was passed anyway. But it is a terrible piece of legislation.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Why do you put the exemption at $10,000? You almost take out the income-tax revenue if you have a $10,000 exemption.

Mr. NICHOLS. Oh, no. Let us not get confused. The $10,000 exemption is on earned income. You only have $1,000 exemption on unearned income, which is investment, and which is the crowd that you want to get if you talk about "soaking the rich," or something. I mean, theirs is unearned income. That is where they get the big money. The $10,000 exemption on earned income is started there because of the application of this combination sales and income tax. It makes it absolutely equitable. If we can get this bill on the books, we will have a broad tax structure for the District of Columbia, tapping every taxable source, and there will not be a class of people in the District of Columbia who will be bearing any undue burden of taxation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 additional minute in order to yield to my chairman.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, supplementing the observation made by the able gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] as to the workings of the sale tax in that State, I simply want to state that which I have repeatedly said to the House in the discussion of District taxation legislation. That is to the effect that in the State of West Virginia we have a 2-percent sales tax. I believe it is a safe, conservative statement to make that at the time the legislature passed that act, perhaps 90 of every 100 citizens of the State viewed it with alarm. Now we have had it in effect, and I believe 90 out of every 100 are in favor of it. It did away with the deficit and placed us in the black. I believe that the people of West Virginia feel that that tax is fair and equitable.

Mr. NICHOLS. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has again expired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I think under the rule I would be entitled to an hour; but we are not disposed to insist, so I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BATES] 15 minutes.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Under the rules of the House, I doubt whether the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] has any time to yield to any other Member. The House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House, and the time for general debate was not fixed. The time was not limited. No agreement was reached as to the disposition of time, and under the rules of the House each individual Member of the House who is recognized is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of order.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I yielded 30 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], and he can dispose of that as he sees fit.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. THOMASON). No. Under the rules the gentleman cannot do that.

Mr. NICHOLS. Then, Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BATES].

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, the question before the Committee today is whether or not we are going to have in the District of Columbia a continuation of the present tax system, with language inserted in the present law that clarifies somewhat of the language which today is uncertain, or a sales tax. I presume the purpose of all taxation is to meet the cost of government and to spread that load as evenly as possible in the most equitable way for the people of the District, of the State, or the tax jurisdiction, whatever it may be called. Before proceeding, let me clear up one point.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] a moment ago spoke about the sales tax in the State of Michigan. I think it should be made clear that there was some little misunderstanding left by his statement, because in the State of Michigan they have not a sales tax such as is proposed in this bill today. They have in Michigan the so-called gross-income sales tax, which is paid entirely by the retailer and not passed down deliberately to the purchaser.

This bill is not, as the report of the committee states, based on the so-called Pond committee report. That committee made a thorough study of the tax system of the District of Columbia 2 years ago. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Oklahoma to the fact that the report of the committee advocating the passage of this so-called retail-sales tax makes special reference to the so-called Pond report which recommended the sales tax 2 years ago. The Pond report was entirely different from this bill that is now being recommended by the gentleman from Oklahoma and other members of the committee, because in the Pond report nothing less than 25 cents was taxed. In other words, if you went into a store and bought 24 cents' worth of goods—and this is done by many of our poorer families—there would be no sales tax on that amount. Under this bill, however, if you went into a store and bought even 2 cents' worth of goods, you would pay a 2-percent retail sales tax on that 2-cent purchase. In other words, this tax goes right down to the very bottom of the lowest income group in the District of Columbia. Not only that but another provision of the bill to which I invite your attention provides that this tax shall apply on meals consumed on or off the premises. In other words, if you should go into a restaurant and buy that meal you pay the 2-percent sales tax. If you are a resident of the District and you go over into the State of Maryland or into the State of Virginia and buy anything, whether it be worth 5 cents, 10 cents, $10, or $100, under the provisions of this bill when you come back into the District you pay a 2-percent sales tax on the value of the articles that you purchased.

Mr. NICHOLS rose.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma wish me to yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. No.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. The gentleman from Oklahoma apparently does not take issue with that statement.

Mr. NICHOLS. Oh, yes; I take issue with that statement. I did not want to interrupt the gentleman unless he wants to be interrupted. I still have time left and will reply in my own time.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Then the gentleman does not wish to ask a question?

Mr. NICHOLS. No; I was just listening to the gentleman.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that what we ought to be particularly interested in is the revenue to be derived under any system of taxation and how much revenue the District needs in its operation. I hold in my hand a statement compiled by the Auditor of the District of Columbia showing a revenue deficit for the year 1940 of $1,085,000 with a tabulation of returns already made on the personal-corporate income tax collected so far this year and the amount in the returns that will be paid later on in the year. We find as a result of the total amount to be collected, as shown from reports on both the personal and corporate income taxes that it would wipe out the deficit. If this be so, I am wondering why we should embark on another program that is estimated to yield to the District nearly $5,000,000 additional in revenue, which is the estimated return made by the committee in its report on this so-called sales tax and income tax on incomes above $10,000. It seems to me that from the standpoint of the additional revenue we are pretty nearly to the point of balancing the accounts of the District for the year 1940 and would have balanced them had the Congress not split the payment of the income tax this year into two payments, one of which will be made after the close of the fiscal year.

It seems to me that any tax ought to be based on the principle of ability to pay. This bill very definitely states that the exemptions shall not apply to meals whether consumed on or off the premises where sold, nor to candy, confectionery, alcoholic beverages, soft drinks, and soda. It does not exempt clothing, and I submit that one of the major expenses of a family, and particularly the poor family, is made up in the item of clothing for the members of the family. It seems to me that the sales tax is a regressive tax, and I think that is acknowledged by all students of taxation in the country. It is the tax of last resort. In other words, we find in the country today 35 States in the Union resorting to the income tax based on ability to pay. This 2-percent sales tax applies to the small income earner and to those receiving up to $10,000 a year, when, in the opinion of the gentleman from Oklahoma, the tax becomes regressive. I believe we can all agree that this is the case. It seems to me, therefore, that before we put into effect a sales-tax system, we ought to put into effect first the most economic, the fairest kind of tax, and that is the income tax which has already been well established in the country, in 35 States in the Union as well as being used by the Federal Government itself.

Mr. COLE of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COLE of New York. Does the gentleman have any information on the comparative cost of the administration of the sales tax as against the income-tax law?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. The income tax is the least expensive of all taxes to collect, and we can well understand when residents of the District go into Maryland, Virginia, New York, Texas, or other States, if they are residents of the District, and buy goods in those other States and come back here into the District; under the provisions of this bill they would be compelled to report these purchases and 2 percent would be assessed for the purpose of taxation. This will take a large number of people to be added to the assessor's office in the District of Columbia in order to audit the accounts that are so reported, along with other reports in the District of Columbia. It seems to me that the most expensive system to audit and to collect would be the so-called sales tax which is recommended in the pending bill.

In addition to what I have already said that there is no real occasion for additional revenue in the District today beyond that developed from the present basis of taxation, certainly there is no justice, there is no equity in forcing upon the people of the District and those who come to the District, and buy various things that they may need while in the District, a 2-percent sales tax which will yield $5,000,000 more than it will cost to run the District this year and the coming year. In view of all these factors we should be extremely cautious in recommending any legislation for the people of the District of Columbia which is not in effect in 20 other States of the Union. We should keep in effect the present income tax, which is yielding even more money from personal income-tax sources than was first estimated by those who recommended that bill.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. GEYER].

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Chairman, I would hate to see us come to a vote on this bill without a little more discussion of the sales-tax angle. I enjoyed very much what the previous gentleman said and I agree with him 100 percent. I do not own any apartment houses in Florida, as does one of the previous Members who spoke. Perhaps that is one reason that I still take the view of the fellow who has to pay some taxes but who does not possess great property. I hope I can always take that view even if somebody should die accidentally and leave me an apartment house somewhere.

I was interested in the excuses or reasons given for the refusal of the voters of various States to repeal sales taxes. I believe in Oklahoma they have tied up an objectionable tax with some worthy cause, because there they give the money to old people in the form of old-age pensions. All you have to do is tell the voters that if this is repealed ma and pa cannot have their old-age pensions; then they will be adverse to voting against such repeal.

Mr. NICHOLS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEYER of California. Perhaps I am wrong. If I am, the gentleman will tell me now.

Mr. NICHOLS. The gentleman is wrong. At the time it was voted it was simply a general retail sales tax, but since that time it has been spent for the payment of old-age pensions through recent act of the legislature.

Mr. GEYER of California. They probably told the voters that is what they would do. In California in order to put the 3-percent sales tax over, they erroneously told the people it would go to the public schools. They got every public-school teacher in the State of California to go before the public and to propagandize their students into believing they were going to lose their education if the sales tax did not go through. The Michigan proposition has been straightened out also. That was not a sales tax, however. If you put the issue up to the people in an honest and straightforward manner whether or not they want these folks taxed, who have not the wherewithal to buy the necessities of life, they will not vote for a sales tax.

Let us not kid ourselves. We are exempting incomes up to $10,000 and saying to the charwomen down here and to the day laborers down there, "You have to pay the amount that should be paid by people earning $10,000 or more." There is something rotten in Denmark.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEYER of California. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The gentleman is making a very fine speech for the great rank and file of the people of the District and I think we should have a quorum. I respectfully make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. (After counting.) One hundred and two Members are present, a quorum. The gentleman from California [Mr. GEYER] will proceed.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Chairman, there is another angle I would like to stress. I believe this country is in the condition in which it finds itself because of a lack of purchasing power. If every man had a pay roll from which he could draw, we would have no difficulty in coming out of the depression in a hurry. Now, we propose to tax a portion of that pay roll when it should be taken from those who are not spending their entire pay roll. I do not see how anybody can defend a sales tax in this day and age. To me it is just impossible to contemplate.

Someone said that the great plain people should pay this sales tax because they get so much. A Member mentioned about people voting bonds to buy parks. He stated that these people did not own property. Since when is the man who buys at the store not paying a portion of the taxes on that property? That type of argument is the poorest kind of argument I have ever heard. I maintain we are all taxpayers, whether the property is in our name or not.

Mr. Chairman, I certainly hope that this body will not set an example to the other bodies of the Nation by enacting a sales-tax law.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] yield back the 30 minutes?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. NICHOLS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I may say to the gentlemen of the Committee that the purpose of yielding back and then reyielding was simply to clarify and straighten out the record, because the gentleman from Oklahoma yielded 30 minutes in the first instance, and under the rule he is entitled to 1 hour.

Before I emphasize what I have said before on this subject, let me pay a little testimonial to the members of the subcommittee who have labored on this tax bill. I do not believe the Members of the House have an adequate appreciation of the frightful amount of work that is done by the District Committee. For instance, they labor for weeks and weeks on a tax measure. They will be laboring then on matters relating to unemployment compensation, which parallels at times the labors of the great Ways and Means Committee of the House. They labor on everything that would normally come before a State legislature, and it becomes a tremendous chore. Making a modest exception for myself, I believe the members of the Committee on the District of Columbia, and particularly the members of two subcommittees who carry the load on fiscal and revenue legislation, are entitled to a tremendous credit in discharging the responsibilities of the Congress to the inhabitants and for the welfare of the District of Columbia. [Applause.]

Getting back to the bill that is pending before us at the present time, let me clarify and emphasize some of the things I said before. I want everybody to make note right here and now that there is an income-tax law upon the books. That is number one. I want everybody to make note that that income-tax law is working; in fact, it is working so well that under the estimates for individual income returns we will probably receive $500,000 more this year than we estimated when that act went on the books.

Why take an act that is working and throw it in the discard? Why take an act that is working and junk it for an entirely new and experimental venture in the taxing field, consisting first of all, in the estimates of this bill, of a new income tax which exempts everything below $10,000 of earned income and $1,000 of unearned income, and then come along with a sales tax?

It has been argued here rather persuasively and convincingly that the sales tax is agreeable in some of the jurisdictions of the country, that it was submitted in a referendum to the people of the State of Michigan and that they wholeheartedly stayed with the sales tax. The fact of the matter is that they do not have a sales tax in Michigan. The strict fact of the matter is that it is a gross-receipts tax, and that is something a little bit different, in the way that it is administered. It would be more nearly comparable to the business-privilege tax we had on the books a year or two ago and that we repealed in favor of an income tax.

Keep in mind that the income tax of the District of Columbia is working, and despite every prophecy, despite every gloomy prediction that was made that the revenue would be negligible, the revenue comes in at the rate of $500,000 more than what we anticipated. I will say to my friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts, a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, that that is a pretty fair record. When your tax yields infinitely more than you anticipate, you really have no occasion for a squawk.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. COOPER. I regret to interrupt the gentleman in the splendid statement he is making, but I should like to get some information, if I may. I understood the gentleman to say in his previous statement that the personal-income tax has yielded something like $500,000 more than it had been estimated to yield, and at the same time the corporation-income tax has yielded considerably less than it was estimated to yield. Is anything proposed here to make an adjustment to increase the corporation tax and bring it up to its anticipated yield or to reduce the personal-income tax to stay within the estimate of that yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. The gentleman anticipated me just a little, but I am glad he raised the question. I was trying to finish first with the personal-income tax, where the yield is infinitely larger than we anticipated.

At the same time, in that original act we put on a corporate-income tax of 5 percent. In that act we first of all exempted intercompany dividends, and, secondly, taxes on capital gains where the capital assets had been held for 2 years or more. The net result of all that was that the tax base, as far as corporate income was concerned, was diminished from about $44,000,000 to $31,000,000. Had it not been for that fact, the corporate-income tax yield would have been up to expectations also. As it is, we estimated a return of $2,200,000, and the tax will produce about $1,500,000. Therefore when the two are joined we will be only about $200,000 behind the game. Whether we make any changes in the tax structure, or in the base or in the rate, is not of any great consequence, because that can be absorbed somewhere. If necessary, we can always empower the District Commissioners—they have that basic right now—to raise the rate on real estate so as to garner in the extra $200,000. Otherwise we can let the matter go over to a more propitious time and then reexamine the rate structure and see whether it ought to be revised upward.

The thing I want to emphasize all along is that we have a working income tax. We do not need a sales tax. So why go in for a new experiment rather than clarify existing law?

When we start reading the bill I shall move, after the reading of the first section, to strike out everything after the enacting clause and offer a substitute amendment, which is a series of amendments, simply clarifying amendments, having to do with questions of domicile and questions of residence, and then I am offering for the existing law a reciprocity feature, so that we will be in comity with all the other States that have income-tax laws. This can be done, and it will meet the present revenue situation and the present tax situation as it applies to the District of Columbia.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. It will also eliminate the necessity of raising the $6,000,000 as contemplated under this bill.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is right. It is contemplated that the sales tax will yield $5,500,000. How easy it is to say that such a tax is easily administered. That is true. How easy it is to impose a sales tax on the ground that it is a great producer. That is true, I may say to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER], as you so well know in Ohio. But that it is a prolific producer or that it is easily administered is no justification for any tax, if it is regressive and if it falls with greatest burden upon the people who can least afford to pay. The President of the United States in a message a year or two ago, indicated his opposition to any type of regressive taxation that falls with greater burden upon the people least able to pay.

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CREAL. Your proposition does make it possible for some people to pay three income taxes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. If the substitute were adopted it would extend reciprocity to other States so that where they have an income tax and they given substantially similar reciprocity to the District of Columbia, the same privilege will be extended to any nonresident here.

Mr. CREAL. That will require State legislative action, however.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Only in those States where there may not be an income-tax law at the present time.

Mr. CREAL. What citizens from the District of Columbia might be expected to live in those States where reciprocity agreement would be necessary?

Mr. DIRKSEN. We make that reciprocal, also.

Now, as between the substitute proposal which I shall offer and the language of the pending bill, there will be no difference, because the pending bill at page 4, section 2 (a), states:

> There is hereby levied for each taxable year upon the taxable income of every individual a tax at the following rates.

I propose to say the same thing and then to go on with a series of amendments clarifying the question of residence, the question of domicile, setting up a reciprocal feature and then a specific exemption with respect to the President, the Cabinet, the constitutional officers, like the judges of the courts, Members of Congress, and the Senate and their clerks and their secretaries.

We did this in the 1926 act, in title 20, when they imposed an intangible personal-property tax on the people of the District. They made such a specific exemption. So there is precedent for it, and there is no reason for anybody being alarmed.

I will say to you over again, as I have maintained before, I will never give my vote to any kind of a bill that exempts $10,000 of earned income and on $1,000 of unearned income. If that does not look like a run-out, I do not know what could be so designated, but it is easy to understand. When you start at $10,000, you resolve a lot of troublesome questions. I would rather meet them head-on than indulge in that kind of device for the purpose of getting out.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SECCOMBE].

Mr. SECCOMBE. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the sales-tax feature contained in H. R. 8980. I have a sales tax in my own State, and I have the feeling, and I think everyone else has, that the people of the District of Columbia should stand on their own feet and pay their own way. I mean by that that real-estate rents are at their highest here, wages are at the highest, while the real-estate tax is at its lowest. I think with the sales-tax feature you are catching those in the low-income brackets. I think with an increase of the real-estate tax, which is $1.70 on $100, you will not need the sales-tax feature. Why should visitors by the thousands who come to Washington carry the burden for the District of Columbia when, as has been said here, all we need is a clarification of the present law in order to provide the necessary revenues? Mr. Chairman, as we go into the figures that have been offered here by the gentleman from Oklahoma, I am positive we will find that those people who receive the least amount of wages will pay the greatest amount of sales tax, because they have to make the greatest number of purchases. Not only that, but, as has been said here, it would drive a great deal of this business into Virginia and Maryland, where they have no sales tax; and, while I am entirely in accord with some adjustments in the income-tax feature, I am absolutely opposed to the sales tax. I base that on the experience of my own State; and not only that, but I think the District of Columbia should be the last place where we should have a sales-tax provision, with millions of visitors coming here yearly, paying the bill that belongs to the residents of the District of Columbia.

I am in accord with the real-estate and income-tax features of this bill, and let those pay who make the money, and not burden the poorer class of people.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I want to take the remaining few minutes to answer in my feeble way some very pertinent questions propounded by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BATES] and the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BATES] asks at the outset, Why should we raise $5,000,000 more than the deficit? Well, there are two reasons. No. 1, I hope to see the time, Mr. Chairman, when the Federal Government will not have to pay to the District of Columbia $6,000,000 annually as a Federal contribution to the support of the District government. That is No. 1.

We raised it $1,000,000 last year. It was only $5,000,000. The House passed it at $5,000,000. It went to the Senate, and because there was a deficit the Senate raised it to $6,000,000, and the House agreed to it. Another reason for going a bit above the Budget is that there is no businessman or no person, resident of the District of Columbia, who for the last 6 years during the time that I have been here and a member of this committee, was able to budget his taxes. Every year a tax bill has been brought to this Congress for the 6 years that I have been here. Taxes are continually revised and revamped, and they will continue to be revised annually until an adequately broad tax structure such as is provided by this bill in conjunction with existing law is passed; and then when it is, and we raise a little more money than the deficit, we can forget the tax problems of the District of Columbia for 4 or 5 or even 10 years, and this Congress can go along with its business on which it enjoys working better than it enjoys working on District problems.

To answer the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], who says that we have an income tax on the books and that it is working, I say that it sure is working. It is working to the point where, as I said earlier today, if it is not taken off the books your constituents and my constituents, who are employed in the District of Columbia, will have to move their voting residence from their home State and make the District of Columbia their residence where they will have no vote, in order to dodge the payment of three income taxes. Yes, it is on the books, and it is working. The Corporation Counsel wrote an opinion and said that nobody was exempt from its payment.

Some gentlemen are worried for fear the sales tax will drive some business from the District of Columbia to Maryland and Virginia. I wonder if they would be interested in this side of the picture. Thousands and thousands of people who live in Maryland and Virginia today earn 100 percent of their income within the District of Columbia. They use the police department, the fire department, the streets, the parks, the electric lights, and every other thing that the taxpayers of the District and you pay for, and those citizens of Maryland and Virginia pay not one dime toward the support of the municipal government of the District of Columbia which gives them fire and police protection, the parks, good roads, and everything else.

Is it so perfectly terrible for the people of Maryland and Virginia along with the other tourists who it is estimated spend $70,000,000 a year in the District of Columbia, to pay a small sales tax? Why should they not, even your constituents and mine, if they come to the District of Columbia and drive on the streets here and use the lights and parks and police and fire protection and whatever other protection the Government gives—why should they not pay 2 cents on the dollar for the food they eat in the restaurant, not for profit to go to the restaurant, but to go to the general fund of the government of the District of Columbia that is furnishing them this protection during the time that they are here? If they will defeat me because I am for something like that, if I am afraid of hurting somebody's feelings by making them pay 2 percent on the money they spend while here, then I am not big enough to be here, and they ought to defeat me.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. Certainly.

Mr. DIES. What I am interested to know is this: Will there be a deficit at the end of this year? Is it the purpose of this bill to meet a deficit, or is it the purpose to reform a bad tax law that now exists?

Mr. NICHOLS. It is twofold. In the first place so far as I am concerned, I am very much more interested in taking off the books a bad tax law than I am in the $1,000,000 deficit which is facing us at this time.

Mr. DIES. That is the point that I am inquiring into. As I understood one of the previous speakers, he said that there would be no deficit at the end of this year.

Mr. NICHOLS. Oh, yes; there will be.

Mr. DIES. In view of the taxes that have been collected?

Mr. NICHOLS. There will be a deficit estimated at a million dollars.

Mr. DIRKSEN. We differ on that.

Mr. DIES. Whether there is going to be a deficit ought to be easily determined.

Mr. NICHOLS. As a matter of fact, if I have to be more accurate, I shall have to revise my figures upward. It is $1,000,000 plus, according to the statement made by the auditor of the District of Columbia, Major Donovan, to me not less than 2 days ago.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. Yes.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. According to the auditor's statement which I have in my hand——

Mr. NICHOLS. Of what date?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. There will be a deficit of $1,500,000, but the actual receipts that we are going to get will be large enough to wipe that out; and, furthermore, this bill that we are now talking about——

Mr. NICHOLS. Oh, I do not yield further.

Mr. DIES. I am asking for information.

Mr. NICHOLS. I do not know about the auditor's statement that the gentleman has or how old it is. The auditor says early in this year there will be a deficit of $1,080,000. Is that right?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. NICHOLS. Now they say they have made up enough money to take it up. They have not. They have realized a little more yield on the personal income tax, but they are not nearly up on the corporate tax. I tell you that the auditor of the District, Major Donovan, told me no less than 2 days ago that the deficit of the District would be a little in excess of a million dollars.

Mr. DIES. Even taking into consideration the increased payments of the income tax?

Mr. NICHOLS. Yes, sir.

Mr. DIES. You propose by this bill to raise $6,000,000; is that correct?

Mr. NICHOLS. Yes. At the end of 1941 if the expenses of the District are no higher than they are now, you will probably have about $4,000,000 more than can be spent, but do not forget, that goes into the general fund and can only be spent by appropriations made by this Congress. I am interested, and this report by the citizens' committee and the two experts, Mr. Pond and Mr. Stamm, says that if we are not going to have to write a tax bill every year we should raise more money in 1941 than we need, because the expenses will increase, according to the history of government, as it goes on up to 1942, 1943, and 1944, and when you fix your tax constant and your expense increases, as it always does, they will come together up here in about 4 or 5 years, and it will take away from this Congress the necessity of passing a tax bill every year.

Mr. DIES. If we increase the taxes of the District, will they give assurance that they will not ask for a Federal contribution?

Mr. NICHOLS. No. I wish that were true. They will always ask for it.

Mr. DIES. Does the gentleman have any doubt in his mind with regard to this fact, that if the $6,000,000 or $4,000,000 excess funds are paid into the Treasury, the District will be reluctant to advocate additional methods of expenditure?

Mr. NICHOLS. That is what I hoped for, I will say. I should think they would be reluctant. Of course, this House could be reluctant to give it to them. It seems to me that then we could, with all good conscience, say that we ought to reduce this Federal payment.

Mr. DIES. But there is no assurance to that effect?

Mr. NICHOLS. Oh, no.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Not a particle?

Mr. NICHOLS. Oh, no.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. In other words, the gentleman is firmly convinced that the $1,000,000 deficit this year must be made up by taxes paid in the District, or Congress must appropriate Federal funds to meet it?

Mr. NICHOLS. No; I will not say that. This is exactly what will happen: If this deficit is not made up by this bill or some other bill, then the real estate property tax in the District of Columbia will be increased.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. There may be even an argument for increasing the property tax in the District, except that I am one of those who hold to the theory that a man's home should not be forced to carry all of the burden of taxation. More than 60 percent of the revenue now raised in the District comes from real- and personal-property taxes.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am curious to find out if this bill will result in persons employed in the District by the Government paying three income taxes?

Mr. NICHOLS. No, sir; it will not. I will explain to the gentleman why.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am anxious to find that out.

Mr. NICHOLS. I have already explained it about three times. Nonresidents of the District of Columbia will pay an income tax to the District of Columbia on that portion of their income earned within the District of Columbia; but if they pay an income tax to their home State, that will be a credit against the tax that they would have to pay here, and in every instance it will wipe it out, because under this bill we have the first $10,000 exempted on earned income.

Mr. McCORMACK. I notice there is a $1,000 exemption here. Does that apply to married men as well as single men on unearned income?

Mr. NICHOLS. On unearned income?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. NICHOLS. Oh, certainly.

Mr. McCORMACK. In other words, there is one exemption for both?

Mr. NICHOLS. There is one exemption for both in this bill; yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. What amount is the income-tax provision of this bill expected to raise?

Mr. NICHOLS. Under this bill?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. NICHOLS. $1,275,000.

Mr. McCORMACK. And the corporation tax $2,000,000?

Mr. NICHOLS. $2,200,000.

Mr. McCORMACK. With reference to the $1,000,000 deficit that the gentleman just mentioned, would that offset the $1,000,000 deficit?

Mr. NICHOLS. Oh, yes; and leave some money in excess of the deficit.

Mr. McCORMACK. So that if the sales-tax provision were not passed——

Mr. NICHOLS. Oh, no; now wait a minute. I misunderstood the gentleman. Of course, the $1,275,000 I am talking about is the income tax under this bill. If you are going to pass this bill I presume you will pass the income and the sales tax. That is the way it is written. I know what the gentleman wanted to ask me. If we do not pass any legislation——

Mr. McCORMACK. No, no. Suppose you pass the income-tax provision of this bill, and you do not pass the sales-tax provision, would there be a deficit?

Mr. DIRKSEN. There would be a larger deficit than there is now, because it is estimated to provide less.

Mr. NICHOLS. If we pass the income-tax provision of this bill without the sales-tax provision, it would be a terrible bill.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am seeking information.

Mr. NICHOLS. I will answer my friend. If we were to pass the sales-tax portion without the income tax it would be a terrible bill. It is a combination tax, so it is not fair to ask me the question.

Mr. McCORMACK. The question of fairness or unfairness is a matter of opinion. Certainly I did not intend to be unfair.

Mr. NICHOLS. I know the gentleman from Massachusetts was not trying to cross me up, but if we do not pass the income-tax portion of the bill it would not raise enough money; no.

Mr. McCORMACK. What would be the deficit if the income-tax provision of the bill were passed?

Mr. NICHOLS. I would have to figure it out. It would be considerable.

Mr. McCORMACK. But there would be a deficit.

Mr. NICHOLS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition on this very important bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I would appreciate it if the Chair would notify me when I have consumed 55 minutes.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to permit me to make a statement?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I yield.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, in order to clear up the question of whether or not there is an actual deficit in the District revenue I again reiterate what is in the auditor's statement. He estimates that from the two sources of income, personal and corporate, $1,600,000 will be received. From this source he has already collected $1,700,000, or $100,000 more than the estimate on this balance sheet.

Altogether according to the estimate on the basis of returns there is $1,400,000 more due. Now, if there is a $1,000,000 deficit and you collect $100,000 more than was estimated, that added to the $1,400,000 leaves a net surplus of $500,000.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I yield for a question.

Mr. NICHOLS. Does the gentleman mean to say that the auditor's statement shows that the combination of the personal and corporate income taxes would yield only $1,600,000?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. In this fiscal year due to the fact that the payments have been split into two parts. He, of course, knows what he is talking about.

Mr. NICHOLS. The gentleman is simply wrong.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I do not think he is.

Mr. NICHOLS. I mean the gentleman from Massachusetts is wrong.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. The figures that I gave to the House are taken from the Auditor's statement issued as of March 9, 1940. They are the official figures of the District, and I feel that they are correct.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman always has something to add. I think the Members should be here to listen to him. I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and nine Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, this is a highly important and controversial piece of legislation, and I asked for this hour because the debate this afternoon clearly demonstrates that there is a great deal of conflicting opinion even among the members of the District of Columbia Committee which reported the bill—a great difference of opinion as to what the bill provides and what it does not provide. I shall, therefore, need most of the entire hour to read the bill and comment on it, so that the membership will be able to know what is in the bill, for certainly they have not so far been able to determine that from the conflicting debate between the opponents and the proponents who are members of the District of Columbia Committee which reported the bill.

Mr. SECCOMBE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I yield.

Mr. SECCOMBE. What does the gentleman suggest that the title of the bill should be?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. It could properly be called a bill to place tax burdens on the backs of the people who are least able to bear them.

I hope that many of my colleagues will not ask me to yield. If they want me to yield for a question, I hope they follow me and take another hour on the bill and for the benefit of the membership read the balance of the bill, which I shall not be able to read because of interruptions.

Mr. Chairman, this bill has been rolling around the District of Columbia Committee for many months. Only a few weeks ago the membership of this House on a record roll-call vote by an overwhelming majority refused even to consider this legislative abortion, this legislative monstrosity, this hybrid legislative baby, whose father is Mr. Sales Tax—so the gentleman from Oklahoma, Brother NICHOLS, says—and whose mother is Mrs. Income Tax with a $10,000 exemption. The sales-tax provisions of this bill are very vicious. The statement of the gentleman from Oklahoma to the contrary notwithstanding, this tax bill rests most heavily on the backs of those least able to pay—the rank and file of the working and poor people of the District of Columbia, particularly those who have many children to support, to feed, to clothe, and to house.

Before proceeding to talk to you about some of the unique and unusual exemptions appearing on page 58 of the bill, I call your attention to the fact that my question has not been answered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICHOLS. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. My question has not been answered by the gentleman from Oklahoma, and in a moment I will yield to him to answer it.

Mr. Chairman, if this bill becomes the law of the land, there will be a 2-percent sales tax on automobiles. For illustration, let us take the case of a man with a family who lives in the District of Columbia who desires to purchase a car for $1,000. If he purchased that car in the District of Columbia, he would have to pay a $20 sales tax under this bill. Where is he going to purchase it then? He can go to Arlington, Va., just across the District line, to purchase it and save $20. This method of saving can be applied to very many other purchases which must carry a 2-percent sales tax under the bill. This bill will be a boon for Virginia and Maryland business institutions and a kiss of death for those in the Nation's Capital.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I yield.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. The fact is that if this bill becomes a law and he should go across to Virginia to purchase his car he would have to report the fact of that purchase when he got back here and pay his tax on the purchase he made over there.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. He might and he might not make the report. And if the provisions of this bill require him to report the purchase of that automobile it will also require him to report the purchase of a toothbrush in Alexandria, a pair of socks in Arlington, a dog in Baltimore, or any other thing which is brought into the District. I believe the tooth brush was mentioned by the gentleman from Oklahoma, who said its purchase would not have to be reported, and that it would not be taxed under the sales-tax provisions of the bill.

Mr. HAWKS. He said Baltimore.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. He might purchase two tooth brushes—one in Baltimore and one in Alexandria.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, is the gentleman serious about wanting me to answer his question?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The other member of the committee, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BATES] has answered it.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman if he has a different answer.

Mr. NICHOLS. The only thing I want to do—and I know my friend is very serious about this—is to get the matter straight. The gentleman said that this bill would place a tax upon the great mass of the working people who spend their money for food, clothing, and housing. The gentleman said that, did he not?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. In a few minutes I will get to many more of the extra tax burdens which the great masses of the common people will have to bear.

Mr. NICHOLS. Is not that what the gentleman said?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. NICHOLS. I want to point out to my friend that food, medicine, and housing are exempt.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I will point out some language which the gentleman apparently does not know is in the bill. Materials going into Government buildings are specifically exempted, but materials for homes and other private buildings are not and are subject to the sales tax.

Certainly, if the bill would require a resident of the District of Columbia to report and pay the 2-percent sales tax on the automobile, which he bought in Alexandria, Va., it would likewise require him to report and pay the 2-percent sales tax on the tooth brush purchased in Baltimore, and on any other thing which he purchased without the District and brought into the District, provided that the articles would be subject to the sales tax if purchased in the District.

The gentleman admits, in answering my question, that any District of Columbia resident who desired to purchase a $1,000 automobile in Virginia would have to report and pay the sales tax when he brought the automobile into the District. Under the same provision of the law, if he purchased a tooth brush, which the gentleman mentioned, or any other article subject to the tax, in Baltimore, Alexandria, or any other place without the District, he would have to report it and pay the sales tax in the District when he brought it into the District.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. There is no denial of that.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Of course, there is no denial. That is what the bill provides in clear, unmistakable language. Will the gentleman from Oklahoma point out the language of the bill under which tooth brushes purchased in Virginia and brought into the District would not have to be reported and taxed while the automobile would?

Mr. NICHOLS. Does the gentleman want that question answered?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Yes. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. NICHOLS. If the gentleman will turn to page 57 of the bill, and if the gentleman will be so kind as to look at subsection (b), then subsection 2, he will find the following in line 15:

The tax under this subsection shall not apply to—
(1) Property acquired in any month which does not exceed $25 in aggregate value.
(2) Property brought into the District by a nonresident thereof for his use or enjoyment while temporarily within the District, unless such property is used in conducting nontransitory business activity within the District.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Exactly. Therefore, if a nonresident of the District of Columbia purchased an automobile in Alexandria, Va., and brought it into the District for his own use or enjoyment, while temporarily within the District, it would be exempt from taxation. If a resident of the District did that he would have to report and pay the 2 percent sales tax.

Mr. NICHOLS. Does the gentleman want me to answer his question?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Yes. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. NICHOLS. It is quite a job, but I will do everything I can to make the gentleman understand this bill. It is a little difficult, but I am willing to try. On page 59, subsection (b)—this is the only portion of the bill which could possibly be deemed to do the thing that my friend says it will do with reference to tooth brushes—reads as follows:

(b) Use tax. The tax imposed by subsection (b)—

Which I just read to the gentleman—of section 1 shall be paid by the person using, storing, or consuming the article taxable under that subsection.

I may say to the gentleman that is the use tax provision which is universally carried in every jurisdiction in the United States which has a sales tax, and that it is aimed always and only at big purchases, such as automobiles—and my friend is right about the automobile—and big pieces of machinery. In no State in the United States do they do the thing that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BATES] suggest will be done; that is, the placing of armed guards at the line to search innocent old widow women as they come back from Baltimore, where they have purchased Listerine and tooth paste.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I thank the gentleman. I think he has now clearly pointed out that the position which I have outlined is absolutely proper and correct according to the language of his bill.

I yield now to another member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BATES], in order to clear up the situation and indicate whether my interpretation is correct or incorrect.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. The gentleman from Oklahoma has not yet denied the fact that any purchases made in Maryland, Virginia, Texas, New York, California, or in any other State of the Union, by a resident of the District of Columbia are not taxable when he brings those articles back into the District of Columbia for his own use.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. He cannot deny it, because the bill provides that they are.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. What he was referring to in the exemptions was property brought into the District by a nonresident thereof. Now, then, under the penalty provision on page 69, if the gentleman from Oklahoma has any question about where the purchaser stands who is a resident of the District, there is the following:

Any person failing or refusing to comply with any of the provisions of this title or with any rule or regulations—

He must report these purchases or else we must establish customhouses all along the line—made by the Commissioners hereunder shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $300 for each failure or refusal.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Under the section of the law which the gentleman has quoted, if a resident of the District went to Alexandria and purchased a toothbrush, or any other thing which he brought into the District, and did not file a report and pay the District sales tax as required under that section, he would be guilty of violating the law. He would be subject to a fine and he could be sent to the jail house.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I yield to the distinguished lady Member from Illinois.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Of course, I cannot presume to say how the courts would interpret the language on page 57, "nontransitory business"; however, I believe it might well be held that under the New Deal all business is transitory. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I may say, in answer to the distinguished lady Member from Illinois, that I agree with her. The gentleman from Oklahoma, the champion of this bill, perhaps might point to the language of section 11 appearing on page 13, and tell us that it will prohibit such an interpretation. I will read this section 11, on page 13:

Wagering losses. Losses from wagering transactions shall be allowed only to the extent of the gains from such transactions.

Mr. Chairman, we remember, back in the days of prohibition, when we had a law in the District of Columbia requiring the enforcement of prohibition. We remember the horde of Federal Government and District pay rollers which it took to keep Virginia corn liquor and Maryland rye liquor out of the District.

We well remember with reference to enforcing the ban on importations into the District of Columbia of this Maryland rye liquor and Virginia corn liquor, the system of espionage and snooping of a horde of public enforcement officials. If this sales-tax bill is to be enforced, and almost everything purchased outside of the District of Columbia and brought into the District is to be reported and taxed, we will have to have tax collectors on every highway entering the District. We will have many more searches and seizures than we had when the Government sought to prevent the bootlegging of Virginia corn liquor and Maryland rye and their imports into the District. We will have to put a Chinese wall of Federal Government tax-collecting agencies around the District, as bootlegging into the District of the many purchases subject to the sales tax, in order to avoid payment of the tax, will make prohibition bootlegging shrink into insignificance.

If we do not have a horde of new District enforcement and tax collectors to enforce the law with reference to importations from without the District of toothbrushes, automobiles, and other articles subject to the tax, the residents of the District are going to make many of their purchases outside the District. This will be a blow to those who operate business institutions and pay taxes in the District. How long do you think an automobile dealer will be able to stay in business in the District of Columbia when a person can go across the District line and save from $20 to $60 in the purchase of an automobile?

Now, let us consider the poor people who have to pay this sales tax. Do not let the oratory of the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma, the champion of this sales-tax bill, lead you astray. I have been wondering why, if the sales tax is such a fine tax, he has not had Oklahoma put a sales tax into effect.

We had another distinguished sales-tax champion from Illinois talking about the virtues of 2-percent sales tax in that

State. Perhaps that is one of the reasons why a certain New Deal political organization levied a 2-percent transaction or sales tax on the salaries of all of Illinois State employees. The political collector of revenue, under that 2-percent shakedown sales tax, recently was murdered, committed suicide, or died of natural causes. Four coroner's inquests, with reference to his death, have not been able, up to this time, to find out what was the reason for his sudden passing into the Great Beyond.

Mr. HOFFMAN. They did not find his little black book, either.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I think it was a little black book and several big black satchels, which have not been found, up to this moment.

Mr. Chairman, the proponents point with pride to the sales-tax exemptions.

The exemptions appear on page 58 of the bill and are nothing to boast about. A poor man with five or six children to support will have to pay this sales tax on the coal which he stokes into his furnace to keep his family warm. Can any proponent of this bill deny that? Coal is not exempted. A poor man with a moderate or low income with five or six children to feed and clothe will have to pay this sales tax on every stitch of clothes his family wears, from the baby's diapers down to the shroud in which some member of his family might be buried. Can anyone deny that? I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma. I see he does not answer.

On his very home, on the building materials which go into his home, the poor man will have to pay this sales tax. The gentleman from Oklahoma tried to tell this House that under this bill the poor man would not have to pay the tax on his housing. What do we find with reference to the exemptions for buildings under this bill? Subsection (7) reads as follows:

> Sales of materials incorporated in any structure, building, or project constructed by a contractor or contractors for the United States or the District of Columbia, or any agency thereof.

Mr. Chairman, this is the only building-material exemption. This does not refer to the poor man, who has to provide housing facilities for his family. In the District of Columbia, Mr. Chairman, we have many thousands of poor people who are ill-housed, ill-fed, and ill-clothed, according to the President of the United States. These ill-clothed and ill-housed underprivileged people, if you please, living in the District of Columbia, the Nation's Capital, under this iniquitous bill will have to pay a sales tax of 2 percent on every stitch of clothing which they buy and on every pound of coal which is purchased to heat their homes and keep them warm.

We do find some exemptions in the bill. I want to find out why the poor people in the District of Columbia, the underprivileged, should be forced to pay a sales tax on the clothing for their families and on the coal to keep their families warm, while their great friend from Oklahoma has a provision in his bill exempting "sales of newspapers and periodicals." This notwithstanding the fact that the big newspapers in the District of Columbia are owned by multimillionaires. Why exempt these multimillionaire newspaper owners in the District of Columbia and put this sales tax on the clothing, coal, housing, furniture, and many other necessities of the underprivileged?

Now, let us see some other commodities which are not exempted. Section 2 provides an exemption on—

> Sales of food and food products for human consumption off the premises where sold: Provided, however, That this exemption shall not apply to meals, whether consumed on or off the premises where sold; nor to candy and confectionery, alcoholic beverages, soft drinks, and sodas.

Mr. Chairman, are we going to put a sales tax on the candy and the soda pop of the children of the poor people of the District and exempt the big multimillionaire newspaper owners from this sales tax? This is not a bill in the interest of the underprivileged poor. This is a bill for the special-privileged rich.

You indicate in this exemption that the exemption shall not apply to candy, confectionery, alcoholic beverages, soft drinks, and sodas. Alcoholic beverages now carry the highest burden of taxation carried by any commodity. There is a $5-a-barrel Federal Government tax on beer and an exorbitant Federal tax on liquor, and still you want to add an additional 2-percent sales tax.

Under this provision you exempt the sales of the materials going into the great marble palaces in which to house the Government employees, but the poor workingman who must build his own home or pay rent on a home that someone else builds for him must pay the sales tax on every bit of material going into that home, on the gravel, on the cement, on the roofing, and on every piece of lumber, on the paint, nails, and every other material.

Whether he rents that home or whether he is a home owner, he pays those taxes, because you and I know that the home renter carries the burden of taxation on the property which he rents.

After observing the utterances of the great New Deal President of the United States [laughter and applause], the New Deal leader, who talks much about the ill-housed, the ill-clothed, and the ill-fed, I believe that he will veto this bill within a few minutes after its arrival at the White House.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I yield.

Mr. GEYER of California. Do you not believe, then, we will be in the situation of having this mess we are in now——

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. GEYER of California. And the answer is to take the amendments of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] and put them in this bill.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I will tell the gentleman frankly what the answer is. We are confronted with facts and we have to face them. After this legislative abortion and monstrosity, with a sales-tax daddy and a $10,000 exemption income-tax mammy, was repudiated by an overwhelming vote of the House, the District of Columbia Committee should have buried it and not brought it to the floor again. They should have been spending their time and effort to perfect the existing income-tax legislation along the lines suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BATES].

Mr. GEYER of California. I want to say to the gentleman that I agree absolutely.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I have been informed that the gentleman from Illinois will offer his amendment as a substitute. In order that we may have an opportunity to vote for that substitute and incorporate it in the bill and then vote for a real tax bill, I am not going to take up my entire 1 hour, and will yield the floor so that we can get on our way and strike out the sales-tax provision of this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, this bill is like so many we have before us. It apparently is a device to raise more money. It would seem as though we had approached the problem from the wrong angle. There is no reason—that is, no reason under the Constitution, anyway, nor any sensible reason—why we should not endeavor sometimes to lessen expenditures instead of always increasing revenues. It has been said that a budget can be balanced in one of two ways: You can raise more money to meet the outgo or you can contract the hole in the barrel and let less out. I wonder how it would be if we tried the latter way; that is, reducing expenditures. It would certainly be something that has not been tried in the last 7 years.

Now, folks coming to the District are amazed, they are astounded, when they drive in here to see these miles on miles of Federal buildings. We do the same thing, perhaps, in some of the States. I know some States where we raise money to establish normal schools, so we can train teachers who can help educate the pupils, and then as soon as the teachers get out of the normal schools we build some more schoolhouses. We borrow some money from the Government to build homes where folks can live, get married, and raise children to go to the schoolhouses we are building so the teachers will have a job. Round and round we go. Just like a pup chasing its tail. Spend and spend and tax and tax.

Now, we do that down here. The people who come down here from my State and from other States wonder whether the District in a few years will be large enough to contain all the buildings to house all the Federal employees and if the increase of employment of Federal employees continues at the same rate that it has during the last 7 years, we will say, a large proportion of the people will be on the Federal pay roll. It would seem as though it was time the Congressmen should begin to take that into consideration because, ultimately, if this process continues, they will have to cut down, and just suppose they begin to cut down on the number of Congressmen. Then where would we be?

Mr. COCHRAN. Better off.

Mr. HOFFMAN. No doubt. I have not heard anything about any resignations from Missouri, and I suppose the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] knows more about who should resign better than anybody else, because he offers that suggestion.

Mr. COCHRAN. But the gentleman said to cut down—to reapportion.

Mr. HOFFMAN. That is all right. I think we are trying to do that. Did we not pass some legislation the other day to do that very thing? But that has not anything to do with reducing expenditures in the government of the District.

Mr. COCHRAN. It would have.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I mean the expenditures that we have to pay in the District of Columbia.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes.

Mr. DIES. It is very evident that under the rules a number of Members can ask for an hour's time and that there is not any probability of finishing this bill this afternoon. If the gentleman will yield to me, I shall be glad to move that the Committee do now rise.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I would reluctantly yield for that purpose.

Mr. DIES. Will the gentleman yield for that purpose?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes.

Mr. DIES. Then I move that the Committee do now rise.

Mr. HOFFMAN. That is, if I am not taken off the floor first. I do not want to yield, Mr. Chairman, and find that I have finished.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair suggests that the gentleman keep the floor if he does not desire to yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I think we have a quorum here.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Does the gentleman know that the number of Federal employees today in proportion to population is not as large as it was during the World War?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Well, we were pretty busy during the World War. There is no question about that. I guess the number you have here now frozen into jobs—that is, new dealers and Communists as well as some Democrats—is greater now than ever before.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Oh, no.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Oh, yes. For instance, at the present time in Michigan, in western Michigan, we have, or had, a postmistress who was a Republican, a holdover from better days.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I just received an affidavit about it this morning, and because she will not contribute either in money or by attendance to the Democratic county chairman or to his activities in Barry County, she is going to be out of a job. I will put that affidavit in the RECORD, it speaks for itself, but I shall have to get permission to do that while we are in the House. They will not give her an examination, and as long as the gentleman is on his feet, how about that under civil service? The gentleman is an expert on the civil-service rules. Is not that woman entitled to take that examination, noncompetitive?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Under the law that we passed, that is a matter for discretion on the part of the Postmaster General.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman means the chairman of the National Democratic Committee?

Mr. RAMSPECK. He happens to be the same man, and a darn good one, too. But I do not want to let the gentleman from Michigan get away with the statement that he made that under the New Deal, limiting it to 7 years, we have brought so many employees to Washington that we do not have room enough to house them. I make the point that we have not as many now in proportion to population and the number of people they must serve as we had during the World War.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Of course, carrying on that war, which was a democratic war, was a big job. The gentleman does not mean that he is bringing them down here now getting ready for another world war, does he?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Oh, no. We have been reducing them recently.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Recently, you have been putting them on more and more. Is it the gentleman's idea that he is getting them here ready so that when this war comes on they will be here on the spot?

Mr. NICHOLS. O, Mr. Chairman, I must make a point of order. I know the gentlemen are acting in good faith and are not attempting to be facetious, are not attempting to kill time, but I insist that they must speak in order on the bill. The gentleman from Michigan is not talking to the subject of the bill.

Mr. HOFFMAN. That might be. I was yielding to the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK] and naturally we did get a little out of order, but the gentleman from Oklahoma is so often himself out of order that I think it is not cricket for him to raise that technical objection now.

Mr. DIES. Is the gentleman now ready to rise?

Mr. HOFFMAN. No; I think I had better not yield the floor, because the gentleman's motion might not prevail.

Mr. DIES. Then somebody else could get the floor.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes; but perhaps he is not ready. I suppose the gentleman has two or three others who want to speak. I am talking seriously to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICHOLS. Oh, I know that.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I am glad the gentleman understands, for once. I have tried on so many different occasions to get the gentleman to understand.

Now, my point about all of these great marble buildings—look at that great Supreme Court Building. Someone said it cost $12,000,000. Over there just nine men are in there really doing business. Of course, there are some other hangers-on there——

Mr. RAMSPECK. You are not charging that up to the Democrats, are you? That was built by the Republicans.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Well, they say justice comes out of that building, so I would say "No." I do not say you are responsible for it. [Laughter.] I do say, however, that you are responsible for those later decisions, the last two particularly, where the Supreme Court said that under the laws we had passed—a familiar law that I will not call by name, but I am sure you know what I am talking about—where the right of a man to do business was taken away from him, where his business was being destroyed—that the Court, the Supreme Court, could not protect him—a duty that Court has never shirked before—that his remedy was through an appeal to Congress. With Congress listening to John L. Lewis, short shrift will the businessman get.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not proceeding in order. I presume the gentleman is entitled to this hour by reason of the fact that he is in opposition to the bill which is being considered. If I am not correct in that I would like to have the Chair correct me, but if I am correct, then I think the gentleman's remarks should be confined to the subject matter of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. THOMASON). The point of order is overruled. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Did you get that? [Laughter.]

What I was attempting to state was this, that we spent all of that money over there on that Supreme Court Building, and instead of spending $12,000,000 there, if we had spent one or two million—those nine judges, even those new dealers on there, do not need that cafeteria down in the basement or on the first floor—the District would not have suffered, nor would the Nation; and the Court would have retained the dignity and the historical association that made it such an object of respect when it held its sessions in the Capitol. It would have continued to be the one department of the Government to which all the people looked with confidence, with hope, and with respect.

They do not need all those acres of marble floor that someone has to wipe up every day, day after day, around there on their knees, scrubbing. Of course, it does give employment. I will admit that, but it is a waste of money. I think it was "Hoover's folly" down here that you "hollered" so much about. I will take that back. A statesman does not "holler." He just "yells" about something. There are many buildings down on the avenue the same way. Then here is this last one, the Jefferson Memorial, that was to cost three or four million dollars. It does not make any difference in the community. What good does it do?

Then when we come to Washington, only a few of us, like myself, from the sticks, perhaps two or three of us, and we are not accustomed to these high prices, and we get down here and we find ourselves paying $980 a year for a couple of rooms. Why, the old corn crib at home had almost as much room as we pay $980 a year for here. It has no furniture in it. Think of it. Not even a bed; not even a carpet; no rug on the floor to sleep on. [Laughter.] Not anything of that kind, and we pay $980. It is a waste of money, but we must pay or sleep in the park.

Mr. ARNOLD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield.

Mr. ARNOLD. Is the gentleman contending that this excess money spent in buildings should be diverted to our use?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Oh, no, no. I know the gentleman buys his own chewing gum and cigarettes and everything else that he uses, and other Members of the House do also. I suppose, being on the District Committee, the gentleman even buys his own theater tickets. I know I do [laughter], although I am not on that committee. [Laughter.]

Mr. ARNOLD. Of course, the gentleman should know I am not a member of the District Committee.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman is not? Well, he should be congratulated, because that committee has a world of hard work. As the gentleman from Oklahoma says, of course, they do not get tickets to the shows. Why should they? No reason in the world. The point I am trying to make is that they are getting a lot more money out of the taxpayers of the District than they need. That is the point. They do not need all that money. They charge us plenty.

One of the young men in the elevator said, "Well you fellows gave us a raise over there beginning the first of next month. When I go down to breakfast, although it was only the 5th of the month, I find a nickel or 10 cents more on my breakfast charge." So that they take it away from them as fast as they can get it. That is why the Federal Government has got into this terrible situation. I commend that thought to the gentleman from Missouri. That is one thing that causes these deficits. The excessive spending. We have had 7 years of it. Then they collect all this money by tax, and what does the poor taxpayer get for it? You would think that the man who paid taxes on a piece of real estate, for example, would get something for his money. You would think he would get fire protection. Well, he does, to a certain extent. I suppose he gets good fire protection. You would think, for example, he would get police protection, would you not? Well, the policemen are so busy—I am not criticizing the policemen. They have to follow the "big boss" here in Washington, and of course if someone from the White House calls up or someone from some department, the policeman has to jump to it; but they are so busy hunting a Congressman who is parked on a side street or the main street where he should not be, that they cannot give protection to the businessmen downtown.

What I have reference to is this: You have probably heard about the Press Cafeteria. There was a man, or rather a corporation—one of these big dirty corporations employing people and paying wages—they ought to be outlawed really [laughter]—I see the gentleman nod. That is right under some people's theory. They should be outlawed because they are giving jobs—not with Government money but with the money that they really make in their business, if they make any.

According to this statement, which does not seem to have been denied, two of these gentlemen who worked there happened to be colored boys. They got into a drunken fight in the restaurant, so the management fired them.

Then another one of those colored boys got fresh with one of the white girls. You remember we had an antilynching bill here a while ago, but you know that did not apply to petting, or patting, or just fussing around. So he put his hands on one of these girls in an improper and in an indecent way and then he made advances to another. Then the cafeteria corporation fired him. That, you say, was cause. But, lo and behold, he belonged to the union, he belonged to the union; and you cannot fire anyone, if the union has its way, without the union's consent. They have been carrying placards around down there. One is a dirty one, "Food Prepared by Scabs," I have been told. The other day I put in the RECORD the statements showing the union demands. The cafeteria association put out a pamphlet setting forth their side of the story, and that is the situation.

Now what is the really vital demand of the union? It is this: That no one shall be discharged without the consent of the union. It is not likely that the union intended to get itself into such a position, nevertheless it is in the position of picketing that place because these men were discharged without its consent and because they are not reinstated.

Here we have two men discharged for a drunken fight in a public dining room; another colored man discharged because he insulted and assaulted one white girl, made improper, indecent advances to another; and we have a union raising a row about it and insisting that the corporation which discharged those three colored men for the unlawful and the indecent conduct shall agree that it will not hereafter discharge an employee without the union's consent.

What do you suppose the taxpayer who owns that building thinks about that? What do you suppose the taxpayer in the District of Columbia that you are going to soak some more figures he is getting, the fellow who rents space in that building, the fellow who operates the cafeteria in the Press Building? Is he getting protection for his business? Are the renters in the building getting protection of their rights? I have no authority to do so, but I would ask you all to go down there some evening and walk around the building and notice this oval, rather stretched out, of pickets, one white man, maybe one colored man, maybe one white woman, and maybe a colored woman walking within about a foot, a foot and a half, or 2 feet of the entrance to the building, walking close together, almost in lockstep so that the people who want to trade there with the man who rents space in that building, with the man who owns the building, with the proprietor of the restaurant, cannot freely pass in and out—and the police standing back just looking on. Is Lewis getting another installment on the political theft he claims the administration owes him? The customers have difficulty in getting in and out. Is there any reason why anybody in the District should be taxed to pay for that kind of protection or lack of protection? That is what they are doing over here.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I appeal to my friend as soon as he has finished his remarks to let us get to the consideration of this bill. It is rather important.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Really? I have not talked for 3 or 4 days.

Mr. NICHOLS. I appeal to my friend not to be facetious.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I appreciate the fact that my remarks are not of any interest to the gentleman from Oklahoma and perhaps not to anybody else. Maybe they are not of any interest even to myself, but if the Committee would rise and bring this bill back some other day, it might help somewhat. We might get a better bill. This bill was up 2 weeks ago and the House would not even consider it. Yet you bring it back, waste another day, and complain when I suggest you can get along without additional taxes.

I wonder, too—maybe the gentleman from Oklahoma could answer this question. The gentleman from Wisconsin was talking about the different articles that were taxed by this bill. Could the gentleman tell me what would be the situation in this hypothetical case: Suppose somebody high in Government circles, not really a Government official but someone closely connected with a high Government official, were on the radio and sold soap here; over a broadcast, or by means of a broadcast, would a sales tax be levied on that soap under this bill? [Laughter.]

Mr. NICHOLS. Is the gentleman talking to me or to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is on his feet.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I just wanted to ask the gentleman to include in his question Beauty-Rest Mattresses and Pond's Vanishing Cream.

Mr. HOFFMAN. No; there is plenty of this washing of political linen going to be done here, and I have been wondering as time went on whether or not this soap sale was in anticipation of the washing that was going to be done when Dewey was made Attorney General. But just getting back to the bill, now, let us confine ourselves to the bill. [Laughter.] Would the tax apply to the soap that was sold in that kind of way if the soap was delivered outside of the District of Columbia? And would it apply if the soap was delivered inside the District of Columbia? I do not see anything in here about soap, but could the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS] tell me whether the tax would apply? I see he is going out, he is leaving the Chamber, he is giving up the attempt to educate me.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The gentleman has brought up a very important point, because under this sales-tax monstrosity the poor washerwoman in the District of Columbia would have to pay a 2-percent sales tax on the soap and washing powder which she uses to wash clothes in order to earn her livelihood. Soap, washing powder, and washtubs are not exempt under this bill.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes; but the gentleman understands that in my hypothetical question the soap sold was not laundry soap, it is not—well it may be soft soap like our grandparents used to make—no, it does not quite fall in that class, for it is a perfumed soap, but not the New Deal soft soap of the fireside-chat era.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield.

Mr. KEEFE. Will the gentleman refer to subsection 2 on page 58 and tell us if he has given any consideration as to whether or not the exemption there stated: "This exemption shall not apply to materials whether consumed on or off the premises where sold," applies to these spaghetti meals and things of that kind that one can buy in a grocery store which are specifically called meals and all that the purchaser is required to do is to heat them—will they be exempt or not?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I take it that those meals are not exempt. Is not that the gentleman's understanding? The gentleman is a lawyer of long years of experience. He has been educated in three or four universities giving law courses. I would like to have his opinion on that before I proceed.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Just a minute.

Mr. KEEFE. I suggest that is a very proper subject of inquiry, because the large manufacturers are now processing entire meals in packages, which are sold in retail stores and are being consumed off the premises. On such a sale would you be taxed or would you not? If you eat a meal in a grocery store or restaurant, you would have to pay a tax.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes.

Mr. KEEFE. If you went out and sat in your car at one of these hamburger stands and bought something to eat, you would have to pay a tax on it. If you went into a grocery store and bought something that is sold there, you would not be taxed.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Why not stick to your and my kind of a meal, crackers and Wisconsin cheese and bologna?

Mr. KEEFE. Would you pay a tax on that or not?

Mr. HOFFMAN. That is something we ought to consider.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman is a great constitutional lawyer.

Mr. HOFFMAN. No; that is a mistake. I do not want to be charged with something I do not make any pretense of being, because there is no such thing now as a constitutional lawyer. As Justice Frankfurter recently stated, the Constitution is what the Court says it is. That was in his first decision. We do not know what the Constitution is from day to day or from Monday to Monday.

Mr. COCHRAN. Well, let us admit for the sake of argument, one part of the Constitution still remains.

Mr. HOFFMAN. That is, the preamble?

Mr. COCHRAN. It is the responsibility of the Congress of the United States to legislate for the District of Columbia. Now, is it not a travesty on legislative procedure to carry on as the House is carrying on today in connection with this bill, regardless of whether we might be for the bill or against it? I have always been against a sales tax, but I am willing for the House to vote.

Mr. HOFFMAN. That may be the gentleman's opinion, and he is entitled to it, but a lot of us on the outside, who have to pay some of these bills, and the people generally throughout the country, think that the District of Columbia is getting plenty. Let me tell the gentleman something. If he lived in a small community, a farming community, where the merchants and the people living in that community depend on farm products for their livelihood from year to year, or if he lived in an industrial city where hundreds of thousands of people depend on continuous operations of the industrial plants and factories, and where the people in the small community, if the farmers missed a crop, are drawn almost into starvation, they have to eat a little more cornbread and baked potatoes without butter, he would know better. They have to buy oleo instead.

Mr. COCHRAN. That is pretty good eating, cornbread and baked potatoes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes; many of us in the country know that, but many now on relief want oranges, grapefruit, and things the average farmer cannot afford. Farmers are not living on the Government pay roll all the time. Here is the city of Washington, the most beautiful city in the world, where the people never miss a pay roll and never miss pay day; where almost all of the employees get a vacation of 26 days, and 15 days' sick leave. Is it not fine now to stick the rest of us? I think it is most reprehensible for the people of the District of Columbia to try to shirk their burden and put it on the people outside. Is there any city in all the world like Washington with its pay roll month after month?

Mr. COCHRAN. Why not debate the bill under consideration?

Mr. HOFFMAN. The only time you lay off down here is when you go away on a vacation. There is no such thing as missing a pay check. Nor is there a reduction in wages, nor does the boss go out of business even if he is bankrupt; Uncle Sam still pays.

Mr. COCHRAN. Does the gentleman know of any set of people in the District of Columbia who went out and kidnaped him or any other Member and brought him here or brought any of the rest of us here and made us take $10,000 a year?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I am not talking about that. I am talking about the people who are always squawking about the Federal Government not taking care of them, but who insist on living in the District. Oh, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] looks up in the gallery. He may talk to the press boys, but I am not.

Mr. COCHRAN. No, I am not doing that.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I know all about that business. I know how the press jumps on some of us if we dare to say a word about cutting appropriations for the District. It is bunk. You can call it anything you want to. If we can cut down expenses, should we not do it? The gentleman belongs to the New Deal. He still has faith. No, he has not, because he has too much sense to have faith in it, but he still wants to go on and spend more, more, and more. So far as I know no one on the majority side in the last 7 years has made a real, successful effort to cut down expenditures. All the time it has been more money, either through taxation or borrowing. It is selfish. You are leaving it to the future generations to pay for your spending. You are not like the prodigal son. You do not take your own money and go out and spend it, but you spend other people's money; then come back for more. You want not only the fatted calf, but you want the calf's mother.

Mr. COCHRAN. Let us get back to the bill. How much money comes out of the Federal Treasury in connection with this legislation?

Mr. HOFFMAN. It all comes from the people.

Mr. COCHRAN. I am talking about the Federal Treasury.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The situation in Washington is somewhat similar to what happened in the gentleman's own city and State, where they boosted the price of their land. The land was appraised, the Federal Government was going to buy it, and the price was boosted from $75,000 to $300,000, was it not? It is like the Federal Government going down and building this New Deal T. V. A. The question was asked someone the other day whether it was damming the Tennessee River and draining seven States, and the answer was "No," it was draining the whole of the United States through taxes to benefit the people of a few States. I do not wonder that the gentleman from Tupelo, Miss., comes in here and talks about it almost every day. You are getting all the money from the industrial North. You talk about the Civil War and its cost. You have had it paid for over a dozen times by tax money from the North. You have been paid for everything that the Civil War cost you.

I ask the gentleman from Missouri, Is there anything unreasonable in cutting down instead of adding to all the time? Can we not balance the Budget? Can we not buckle up our belts a little bit? Do you have to have all these great buildings here in Washington?

Mr. COCHRAN. That is just exactly what the gentleman from Oklahoma is trying to do, as I understand, balance the budget in the District of Columbia.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman has some New Deal philosophy, all right, now.

Mr. COCHRAN. Why does not the gentleman get back to the bill?

Mr. HOFFMAN. You cut down by adding to the tax roll. That is a peculiar way to do it, but it is characteristic.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I suggest that the gentleman not waste his time talking to the gentleman from Missouri, who wants to put a sales tax on the building material which goes into the poor people's homes, their coal, their ice boxes, their furniture, their pictures, their beds, their dishes, knives, forks, spoons, soap, carpets, clothing, washtubs, cooking utensils, coffins, tombstones, and many other things which would take an hour to mention. Do not try to convert the gentleman from Missouri if he is so set on putting a sales tax on all of those commodities which are purchased by the poor people of the District of Columbia.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Well, here is something I do want to talk about. I call the attention of the gentleman to this provision on page 69, section 22:

> Any person failing or refusing to comply with any of the provisions of this title or with any rules or regulations made by the Commissioners hereunder shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $300.

Mr. DIES. It is now 10 minutes after 4. The gentleman has consumed most of the hour.

Mr. HOFFMAN. No; I have used only half of it; half of it and 1 minute.

Mr. DIES. Will the gentleman yield so that I can make a motion that the Committee rise? There is no probability of passing the bill.

Mr. NICHOLS. Why do that?

Mr. DIES. I withdraw the request.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The gentleman is a constitutional lawyer.

Mr. HOFFMAN. No.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. An attorney.

Mr. HOFFMAN. No; a justice court lawyer.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. A student of the law.

Mr. HOFFMAN. No; just one who studied and practiced law after he had a certificate to do so.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Is not this bill unconstitutional because it sets up a tax on commodities moving from the States into the District of Columbia, a tariff tax, if you please? The District of Columbia, standing in the position of a State, would be taxing the imports from another State, which is prohibited under the Constitution.

Mr. COCHRAN. The Supreme Court has decided that the tariff barriers can be put in every State in the country. Why not get busy and change the decision of the Supreme Court?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I am glad the gentleman from Missouri is now in favor of a protective tariff.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. No; just wait a minute. I want to talk about that constitutional business.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman was talking about section 22.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I will return to that.

Mr. COCHRAN. Tell us about tariff barriers.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I will not be long.

I believe the Court held over there that New York City could tax the coal and coke where it came in from other States through the sales tax.

Mr. COCHRAN. Yes; and it held that California could tax wine and beer; beer from Milwaukee, as well as other States, my own included.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes; and hard liquor from Missouri—and such liquor.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I wish to thank the gentleman, and I think he has contributed a great deal when he has converted the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] to the principle of protective tariff on commodities moving between the States, although he does not as yet favor a protective tariff to protect the American people from unfair competition of cheaply produced commodities imported from foreign countries.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman raised the question. Now, that might be like this question of whether a company or a person is engaged in interstate commerce. You recall that up here in Philadelphia, I think it was, the circuit court of appeals held in that Apex case, when the company was charged with the violation of the N. L. R. A.——

Mr. COCHRAN. That was a C. I. O. case.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Unless you amend that law you are going to have trouble over there in reelecting some of your Congressmen.

Mr. COCHRAN. Suppose the House would treat the gentleman the way the gentleman is treating the District Committee when the National Labor Relations Board bill comes up.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I am much kinder to the House than the House has been to me, because I am letting the House hear me, and the House would not hear me on that bill when I wanted to get an amendment placed in it. I have been trying since the 13th of March 1939 to get the House to amend the N. L. R. A.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman talks so often they are tired of hearing him.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman may be right, but as I said to one gentleman, if you are so tired you need a rest there are davenports out there in the cloak room, and nobody objects to your using them, and before you get through with labor legislation you will adopt some of the amendments I have offered.

Mr. COCHRAN. I do not sleep during the day. How about section 22?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Do not bother me. I refuse to yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. How about section 22?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I refuse to yield for the minute. I will yield later.

The point I wanted to talk about was this Apex case. Now, get this, and see what the courts are doing, because you remember that by the time these 8 new judges are appointed, the President will have appointed 50 Federal judges of one kind or another, and some of these decisions are just samples of what is to come. The court up there held when the Apex Co. was proceeded against as being guilty of an unfair labor practice, that the Apex Co. was engaged in interstate commerce. Then when the Apex turned around and sued the union and the employees for destroying its property, the same court, mind you, not a different court, held that they were not engaged in interstate commerce. Just a little shell game with the little black ball interstate commerce? So how can anyone tell whether or not any particular law is constitutional until the court has said so? Now, section 22, that we were talking about, refers to rules and regulations.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. HOFFMAN. We have had plenty of examples, both in the wage-hour law, in the A. A. A., and in the N. L. R. B., of rules and regulations made by boards and made by officials administering a law that were not fair, that were not just; and yet under this bill as it stands now, a man is subject to fine and imprisonment.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. That is what I wanted to ask the gentleman. I wanted to know if he were fined as a result of violating these rules and regulations, would he be entitled to a review in the circuit court of appeals under the Logan-Walter bill.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Now, you are winking at the gentleman across the aisle and you thought that was a tricky question, did you not? If we get the Walter-Logan bill or the Logan-Walter bill and it gets through the Senate and the President puts his Hancock on it, then if it becomes a law, you will not have any rules or regulations of the kind the various boards have been handing out, so he could not be convicted, do you not see, if that law goes through, but why now give any more power to one of these boards?

Did the gentleman say he wanted to make a motion that the Committee rise?

My purpose in talking at this time and so long was with the idea that the House leadership would either realize that the bill cannot be passed at this time or that we might continue until enough Members came on the floor to make certain the adoption of the amendments to be proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] and by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BATES]. Indications are that the votes are now here so that I will no longer hold the floor, and I wish to thank the House for its very courteous consideration. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act divided into titles and sections may be cited as the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1940.

TITLE I—INCOME TAX

This title, divided into sections and paragraphs according to the following table of contents, may be cited as "The District of Columbia Income Tax Act."

Mr. NICHOLS (interrupting the reading of the bill). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that title I be considered as read.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I was going to offer this amendment immediately after the reading of section 1.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DIRKSEN: Mr. DIRKSEN moves to strike out the first section and to substitute for the bill the following, with notice that if the substitute is adopted, he will move to srike out all remaining sections of the bill and insert:

"That (a) section 2 (a) of title II of the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1939 is amended by striking the words 'domiciled in the District of Columbia on the last day of the taxable year' appearing in lines 2 and 3 thereof.

"(b) Section 4 (a) of title II of said act is amended by inserting the word 'resident' between the words 'of' and 'individuals' appearing in line 1 thereof.

"(c) Section 4 (b) of title II of said act is amended to read as follows:

"'(b) Of corporations and nonresident individuals: In the case of any corporation or a nonresident individual, gross income includes only the gross income from sources within the District. The proper apportionment and allocation of income with respect to sources of income within and without the District may be determined by processes or formulas of general apportionment under rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioners.'

"(d) Section 4 (c) of title II of said act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"'(11) Salaries paid to Justices of the Supreme Court and inferior courts established under article III of the Constitution of the United States; salaries paid to the members of the Cabinet of the President of the United States, and salaries paid to all elective officers of the United States, and to the clerks and secretaries to such elective officers when such clerks and secretaries maintain residence without the District of Columbia.'

"(e) Section 5 (b) of title II of said act is amended by striking out the words 'an individual' in the second line thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the words 'a resident.'

"(f) Section 5 (c) of title II of said act is amended to read as follows:

"'(c) Corporations and nonresident individuals to file return of total income: A corporation or a nonresident individual shall receive the benefits of the deductions allowed to it under this title only by filing or causing to be filed with the assessor a true and accurate return of its total income received from all sources, whether within or without the District.'

"(g) Section 43 of title II of said act is amended by adding the following new paragraph:

"'(22) The word "resident" means an individual domiciled in the District on the last day of the taxable year and every individual who for more than 6 months of the taxable year maintained a place of abode within the District, whether domiciled in the District or not; but any individual who, on or before the last day of the taxable year, changes his place of abode to a place without the District with the bona fide intention of continuing to abide permanently without the District shall be taxable the same as a nonresident is taxable under this title. The fact that a person who has changed his place of abode, within 6 months from so doing, again resides within the District, shall be prima facie evidence that he did not intend to have his place of abode permanently without the District. Every individual other than a resident shall be deemed a nonresident.'

"(h) Title II of said act is amended by adding the following new sections:

"'CREDITS AGAINST TAX

"'SEC. 44. (a) Allowed residents for income tax paid State or Territory: Whenever a resident individual of the District has become liable for income tax to any State or Territory upon his net income, or any part thereof for the taxable year, derived from sources without the District and subject to taxation under this title, the amount of income tax payable by him under this title shall be credited on his return with the income tax so paid by him to any State or Territory upon his producing to the assessor satisfactory evidence of the fact of such payment: Provided, however, That such credit shall not exceed that proportion of the tax payable under section 2 of this title that the portion of taxable income taxed by such State or Territory bears to the total net income of such resident subject to tax under this title. The credit provided for by this section shall not be granted to the taxpayer when the laws of the State or Territory under which the income in question is subject to tax assessment provide for credit to such taxpayer substantially similar to that granted by paragraph (b) of this section.

"'(b) Allowed nonresidents for income tax paid State or Territory: Whenever a nonresident individual of the District has become liable for income tax to the State or Territory where he resides upon his net income for the taxable year derived from sources within the District and subject to taxation under this title, the amount of income tax payable by him under this title shall be credited with such proportion of the tax so payable by him to the State or Territory where he resides as his income subject to taxation under this title bears to his entire income upon which the tax so payable to such other State or Territory was imposed: Provided, That such credit shall be allowed only if the laws of said State or Territory (1) grant a substantially similar credit to residents of the District subject to income tax under such laws, or (2) impose a tax upon the personal income of its residents derived from sources in the District and exempt from taxation the personal income of residents of the District. No credit shall be allowed against the amount of the tax on any income taxable under this title which is exempt from taxation under the laws of such other State or Territory.

"'SEC. 45. Information returns: Every person subject to the jurisdiction of the District in whatever capacity acting, including receivers or mortgagors of real or personal property, fiduciaries, partnerships, and employers making payment of dividends, interest, rent, salaries, wages, premiums, annuities, compensations, remunerations, emoluments, or other income, shall render such returns thereof to the assessor as may be prescribed by rules and regulations of the Commissioners.

"'SEC. 46. Withholding of tax at source.—Whenever the Commissioners shall deem it necessary in order to satisfy the District's claim for income tax payable by any foreign corporation or person not a resident of the District, they may, by rules and regulations, require any person subject to the jurisdiction of the District to withhold and pay to the collector of taxes an amount not in excess of 5 percent of all income payable by such person to a foreign corporation or nonresident. After such foreign corporation or nonresident shall have filed all returns required under this title, and the same shall have been audited, the collector of taxes shall refund any overpayment to the taxpayer.'

"SEC. 2. The provisions of section 1 of this act shall apply to the taxable year 1939, and succeeding taxable years. In the case of individuals required to file returns and pay income taxes under the District of Columbia Income Tax Act, as amended by section 1 of this act, which individuals were not subject to the provisions of the District of Columbia Income Tax Act as originally enacted, returns for the calendar year 1939, or for a fiscal year ended prior to the date of approval of the act, may be filed and the first half of the tax paid without penalty on or before 60 days after the date of approval of this act."

Mr. DIRKSEN (interrupting the reading of the amendment). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the substitute amendment be dispensed with.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire whether the gentleman proposes to offer that amendment as a substitute for all of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. As I understand, the gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out section 1 and substitute therefor his amendment with notice that in the event the substitute amendment is adoped, the gentleman from Illinois will move that the subsequent sections be stricken.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois that the further reading of the substitute amendment be dispensed with?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, if the members of the Committee will give me their attention for just a moment, I shall do nothing more than merely reemphasize what I have said on other occasions this afternoon.

The bill that is offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma, which is pending before this Committee, has three titles: First, to give the District of Columbia a new income tax in place of the income tax which it has now; second, to give it a sales tax; and third, to repeal the existing income-tax law, which is now on the books and which is working.

This substitute does nothing more than to seek to clarify the provisions of existing law and make them workable and, in substance, here is what it does.

It is the same bill as the one now before the Committee in that it makes the tax applicable to everybody. It is the same as H. R. 8980 now pending.

Second, this substitute amends existing law to define the gross income of nonresidents to include income derived from sources within the District of Columbia.

Third, it defines more nearly what constitutes a resident, namely, one who was domiciled in the District on the last day of the taxable year or one who maintained a place of abode in the District of Columbia for a period of 6 months.

Fourth, it makes specific exemptions of the President, the members of the Cabinet, the members of the Supreme Court and inferior courts, the Members of the House and of the Senate, and the clerks and the secretaries.

May I refresh your recollection with the fact that in title XX, section 756 of the Code of the District of Columbia there was a provision adopted in 1926, which is 14 years ago, in which this Congress exempted the Cabinet officers and the persons in the service of the United States Government elected for a definite term of office, and not to consider them as residents of the District of Columbia for the purpose of taxation on intangible personal property. So there is precedent for the exemption of that group over which there has been controversy before. This amendment makes that exemption specific.

Fifth, it extends to a resident of the District of Columbia a credit for taxes paid in another State where income may be taxable, and where there is no credit or offset.

Sixth, it restores to law a provision which we had in the original income-tax bill, which was stricken out in conference last year on the Senate side, namely, to set up a system of reciprocity whereby if people are taxed in the District of Columbia and at the same time their own local jurisdiction undertakes to tax them, there can be an offset for the amount of taxes that have been paid so as to avoid the possibility of complete triple taxation.

When we talk about double taxation, namely, by the Federal Government and the local jurisdiction, that applies to everybody. You, as Members of Congress are taxed by the Federal Government under the income-tax law. You are also taxed under the new interpretations of law, and under the provisions of the State income tax. Every butcher, baker, candlestick maker is in the same fix. So here we seek to revise it so that there will not be triple taxation. Those, in the main, and in addition some clarifying amendments relating to filing of returns and rules and regulations to be promulgated by the District of Columbia Commissioners will clarify this whole tax situation so that it is not necessary to bring in a new bill, and in addition thereto seek to impose a sales tax on the people of the District of Columbia.

Let me admonish you that this new venture in income taxation which is planned in the pending bill, and which I want to see defeated, starts an income tax on the basis of $10,000 exemption of earned income and $1,000 exemption of unearned income, before the tax applies. As I stated before, so far as the personal-income tax is concerned, we estimated a million dollars for this year, and the returns show over $1,530,000 have already been returned. We are somewhat behind on corporate taxes, because of certain provisions in the law whereby the tax base was reduced, though to answer some questions raised regarding a deficit in taxes, we can raise the real-estate rate if necessary by 10 cents on the hundred, and that will yield $1,200,000. So that there is ample law, there is ample authority, and with this substitute to clarify existing law, we can take this piece of legislation which is doubtful in its value, and which in my judgment has absurdities in it, and throw it to one side. This substitute will do the job.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I rise only to point out to the Members of the House what impresses me as being a rather peculiar situation. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] has complained all afternoon about the $10,000 exemption on earned incomes, and now under the provisions of his substitute he proposes to do the same thing, almost, but by a different method. He now seeks to name who will be exempted. He will exempt Members of Congress, he will exempt members of the judiciary, he will exempt those that he sets out in his amendment, and so, while it does not apply clear through, yet I am surprised that he would exempt them when the matter of exempting the first $10,000 on earned income was so abhorrent to him.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. Yes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Everyone must know, of course, that Members of Congress are not residents of the District of Columbia. There has been much confusion of thought as to whether or not they are so considered, and to make sure that there can be no doubt about it, this specific amendment is provided in the bill, and there is precedent for it in the law of 1926.

Mr. NICHOLS. I am still surprised that the gentleman, on the one hand, objected to the exemption provided in the bill and then offers a substitute which provides the same thing in another way. Insofar as adding 10 cents to the real-estate tax to raise this money, you can do that. You can raise all of the money to run the District of Columbia against real and personal property if you want to, but at the moment real and personal property in the District of Columbia bears 67 percent of the tax burden. Now, I think there ought to be some encouragement given to the man who is working for $2,000 a year in a Government department to build a little home for his wife and his kiddies, do not you?

I do not know why the necessity for heaping all of the tax burden on somebody's house. I do not think it is good taxing principles. All that we attempt to do in the pending bill is to widen the tax base and make it so broad that taxes can be paid by everyone, so that it will hurt no one. That is all there is to it.

By the Dirksen amendment you simply narrow it and you add to confusion. Whenever you pass an income-tax bill for the District of Columbia that will tax Government employees, practically all of whom are nonresidents, you add to the confusion. Even under the reciprocity provision of the gentleman's amendment, he might save the little girl or boy down here who is working in a Government department trying to get an education in George Washington University, if they happen to come from a State where they had an income-tax law, and had reciprocity, but if they come from a State where there was no income-tax law, then he or she would be paying a tax to the District of Columbia, and a tax to the Federal Government.

There is no other taxing jurisdiction in the United States like this jurisdiction in the District of Columbia. They are practically all nonresidents here. If we are going to collect money to defray the cost of the Government of the District of Columbia, a large portion of that money must be paid by nonresidents. I submit to you, in all fairness, that the best, the easiest, and the most equitable means of raising that money is by a sales tax, with the necessities, food, medicine, and rent, exempted. If that is not equitable and fair, then I have no conception of fairness.

As I stated earlier in the day, under the sales-tax provision of this bill, on the average clear across the whole score from $1,000 to $10,000, they would pay an average of only fifty-two one-hundredths of 1 percent of their gross income.

I trust the amendment is defeated.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. NICHOLS) there were—ayes 54 and noes 41.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered and the Chair appointed Mr. NICHOLS and Mr. DIRKSEN to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided, and the tellers reported there were—ayes 61 and noes 50.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts moves to strike out the remaining sections of the bill.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, this has been quite an extended day and I will only take a moment. I think this is now the crux of the bill against which a great deal of opposition has been leveled this afternoon. The motion I make is to strike out the so-called sales-tax provision of the bill. Those of us who have made a study of the tax situation in the District of Columbia have some idea of what is needed by way of revenue. This is not a new problem to me. I have given a great deal of thought and study to the particular tax situation in the District.

I hold in my hand again, as I did this afternoon, the report from the District auditor which sets up the estimates of expenditures within the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1940 which closes on the 30th day of June of this year, and the fiscal set-up for the fiscal year 1941. According to this fiscal set-up, if the returns were all in the form of cash from the income and corporate taxes in conformity with the present law, we would have a revenue surplus of $315,000 for the fiscal year of 1940. The only reason that we have this so-called $1,000,000 deficit is because the Congress a few weeks ago changed the income-tax law, which permitted the payment of the personal-income and corporate-income tax in two payments to the District. It so happens that the fiscal year is closing on June 30, and only one-half of the revenue from the tax was included within the estimates for 1940.

The facts are, however, that actually more money was received to date than was in the estimate by the District auditor of the amount of money that would be received from both the personal- and corporate-income taxes. In other words, we have already collected $100,000 in cash more than the auditor estimated in his tabulation would be collected in computing the balance for the fiscal year.

Now, if we have $1,300,000 in addition to that, with a deficit of only $900,000, it seems to me we will at least have a surplus of $300,000 to $400,000 at the end of this fiscal year if the payments were all made before that time. If that is so, why is it necessary to pass this bill and go into other channels to raise revenue by one of the most iniquitous of all taxes—and I think that statement will be agreed to by the tax experts—a tax of last resort, the so-called sales tax, which will yield additional revenue of about $5,000,000? In other words, where is the justification, as we consider the fiscal situation in the District, for raising $5,000,000 more, as this bill will do, than we actually need to run the District?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I simply want to make it plain to the Committee that the substitute which was adopted a moment ago was conditioned upon making a motion to strike out all subsequent sections of the bill. The amendment now pending, therefore, carries out the earlier action in order to make it consistent.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. And it eliminates the sales tax which we do not need. We do not need any other revenue legislation to take care of the fiscal requirements of the District, and the report of the District auditor shows this to be so.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. REES of Kansas. This report contemplates a contribution from the Federal Treasury, however, of from $5,000,000 to $7,000,000, does it not?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. It contemplates a continuation of what has been done through many generations, a contribution from the Federal Treasury toward the cost of running the District government. I do not know of anyone who can complain about a just contribution by the Federal Government to the District, particularly in view of the tremendous value of taxable property taken over by the Federal Government and the many services rendered by the District.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 3 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to use a portion of the time.

Mr. Chairman, let me point out to the Members of the House simply that if you send the District into the next fiscal year with a deficit you, not I, will have to be responsible if the Federal contribution is increased by any further sum above the present $6,000,000 to meet that deficit. Not only that, but the District auditor's figures, which my friend used, were compiled in March, he says. I say to you that no later than 2 days ago Major Donovan, the District auditor, told me that in the present situation without further tax legislation there would be a deficit in excess of $1,000,000.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. I yield briefly. I have only 3 minutes.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Does that not assume that the deficit is caused by a split in the payment of the tax?

Mr. NICHOLS. I do not know whether it does or not. All I can tell you is that if we are going to have a $1,000,000 deficit all we want you to do in this bill is to let the people of the District of Columbia tax themselves to pay for their own government, that is all, and not make my constituents down in Oklahoma, by Federal contribution, help pay the cost of a government they never see.

All I want you to do is to let the people who live here and use the protection of the police and fire departments, and the parks, and all the rest, pay the tax. If you adopt the Bates amendment, of course, you will be right back where you were, you will have another straight income-tax law and nothing else; confusion will prevail, and Federal contributions will soar.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. NICHOLS) there were—ayes 49, noes 36.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. RAYBURN, having resumed the chair, Mr. THOMASON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8980) to provide revenue for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, directed him to report the same back to the House with two amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure about the parliamentary situation. I want a separate vote on the two amendments. If I move the previous question on the bill and the amendments, shall I lose my right to demand a separate vote on the amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman does not lose that right by moving the previous question.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and the amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the Dirksen amendment and on the Bates amendment.

Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. NICHOLS. Is it possible to have a separate vote on these amendments at the same time, en bloc?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If a separate vote were not demanded, they would be voted on together.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TABER. If the gentleman from Oklahoma withdraws his demand for a separate vote, then the two amendments will be voted on together, would they not?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is correct.

Mr. TABER. And that would answer the entire question as to the amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair made that reply to the gentleman from Oklahoma. If the gentleman from Oklahoma does not demand a separate vote, then both amendments will be voted on together. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma withdraw his request for a separate vote on the amendments?

Mr. NICHOLS. I do, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on these amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin demands a separate vote on the amendments.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, in order to expedite action and give this bill the kiss of death, I withdraw my request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendments.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. NICHOLS) there were—ayes 72, noes 41.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Obviously a quorum is not present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors; the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 169, nays 92, answered "present" 1, not voting 168, as follows:

INTERSTATE MIGRATION OF DESTITUTE CITIZENS

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged resolution, House Resolution 63, and ask its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 63

Resolved, That the Speaker appoint a select committee of five Members of the House, and that such committee be instructed to inquire into the interstate migration of destitute citizens, to study, survey, and investigate the social and economic needs, and the movement of indigent persons across State lines, obtaining all facts possible in relation thereto which would not only be of public interest but which would aid the House in enacting remedial legislation. The committee shall report to the House, with recommendations for legislation, and shall have the right to report at any time.

That said select committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is hereby authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places within the United States, whether or not the House is sitting, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, by subpena or otherwise, and to take such testimony as it deems necessary. Subpenas shall be issued under the signature of the chairman and shall be served by any person designated by him. The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses. Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by authority of said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, willfully makes default, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any question pertinent to the investigation heretofore authorized, shall be held to the penalties provided by section 102 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. C., title 2, sec. 192).

Mr. TOLAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TOLAN: Page 1, line 11, after the period, add the following: "In the event the committee transmits its report at a time when the House is not in session, a record of such transmittal shall be entered in the proceedings of the Journal and CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the House on the opening day of the next session of Congress and shall be numbered and printed as a report of such Congress."

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present. This is an important matter to be considered with a handful on the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman may make his point of order without the criticism. The present occupant of the chair has consulted with everybody he thought it was necessary to consult with, and certainly the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], and the Chair understood that this is a matter in which every Member from the State of California, Republican or Democrat, is vitally interested. If the gentleman from Wisconsin wishes to insist on his point of order, however, that is his right.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I withdraw the point of order, Mr. Speaker, but I hope the resolution, which is a wide, sweeping one, will be thoroughly discussed.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from California explain his amendment and the resolution?

Mr. TOLAN. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the resolution is simply to have a congressional committee of 5 appointed to investigate the migrant problem in the United States. In the 150 years of our experience we have never had such an investigation. There are 27 agencies now that have been pecking away at the problem. The American Bar Association, the American Federation of Labor, the Russell Sage Foundation, the leading newspapers of the United States, former President Hoover, and Mrs. Roosevelt have all endorsed this investigation, saying it is the only way to go about it to get the facts on the basis of which we can possibly draft remedial legislation.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. As I understand, this is a unanimous report from the Committee on Rules?

Mr. TOLAN. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It is favored by every Member of the House from the State of California?

Mr. TOLAN. Yes; Republicans and Democrats.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. This is a tremendously important problem, and I hope the resolution will be agreed to.

Mr. COCHRAN. Does the gentleman say this is a unanimous report from the Committee on Rules?

Mr. TOLAN. As far as I know; yes.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOLAN. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Did I correctly understand from the reading of the resolution that it includes a provision that any citizen of the United States may be sent to jail for refusing to answer a question propounded by this committee?

Mr. TOLAN. I do not understand that this provision is different from similar provisions in other resolutions of this character, I may say to the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. It would be a pretty stringent penalty for refusing to answer a question.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Is not this the normal provision in resolutions of this kind?

Mr. GEYER of California. It is exactly what is in the resolution providing for the Dies committee, and all the rest of such resolutions.

Mr. TOLAN. It is the usual form.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOLAN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. LESINSKI. Will this committee investigate migratory labor moving from one plant to another and from one State to another?

Mr. TOLAN. There are 2,000,000 people in the United States who annually go from State to State. They are jobless and they are Stateless. We are trying to make an investigation that will at least give them some sort of a status in this country. They are the best people in this country. We have residential laws in one State that are different from those in another. Last year New York paid out $3,000,000 on nonresidents in their State alone, and they are trying to deport them up there.

Mr. LESINSKI. What I am interested in is the condition in some of our automobile plants in Michigan. A lot of labor comes from other States and takes the jobs of the men who live in a particular town and pay taxes there. Especially the Ford Motor Co. does this. The question is, Will this committee investigate that type of migratory labor?

Mr. TOLAN. It should investigate to this extent, to see where these people can get jobs and where they cannot, and try to keep them home.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOLAN. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. The gentleman knows that I am not particularly interested in the bill, yet I appreciate the statement the gentleman made before the Rules Committee and the importance of the whole problem. The gentleman, however, is making commitments which, if carried out, would mean that this will be an ambitious sort of investigation.

Mr. TOLAN. Well, not so much, I believe.

Mr. COX. I understood from the gentleman and others appearing along with him that this investigation ought to be carried through with an expenditure of not exceeding $10,000.

Mr. TOLAN. Twenty-five thousand dollars, and I may say that we have the reports and there will not be any extensive hearings at all and we should keep it within that amount and we will make it less, if possible. There will be no expensive investigation whatsoever.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOLAN. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. As I understand, the gentleman is mostly interested in his problem in California.

Mr. TOLAN. Yes; and we take in all the other States, too.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOLAN. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. And I ask this question in all seriousness——

Mr. TOLAN. I know that.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The gentleman does not propose to investigate in Mexico as well as the United States, as the Dies committee is going to do, according to recent announcements appearing in the press?

Mr. TOLAN. I do not know anything about going down into Mexico. I am quite sure we will approach the problem fairly sensibly and conservatively, and I think we can even satisfy the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. And you will give due respect to the constitutional rights of the witnesses and not try to throw them into jail for not answering questions which have no bearing on the issue?

Mr. TOLAN. I will do my very best.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOLAN. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. While this investigation is going on, do you expect, in California, to continue your advertising of your climate and the desirability of living there?

Mr. COX. Do not commit him on that.

Mr. HOFFMAN. No; that is a serious proposition. There is no use of trying to keep the people from going out there if they are going to direct a campaign to get them in.

Mr. TOLAN. I will say to the gentleman from Michigan that, of course, we will tell about our climate, just as Florida does, and just as Michigan about its automobile factories.

Mr. HOFFMAN. We are not asking anybody to take care of the folks in need there.

Mr. TOLAN. When you do, we will try to help you out, Clare.

Mr. HOFFMAN. That may be true, but I do not think it is fair to the rest of the country to coax them in, and then ask the rest of the country to pay after you get them out there.

Mr. TOLAN. Mr. Speaker, by calling up House Resolution 63 this afternoon, we are serving notice upon the Nation that Congress feels that we have a direct interest in any mass movement of our population.

Should the Speaker be authorized by this resolution to name five members of the House to study and recommend legislation relative to interstate migration, their immediate concern would be to ease the burden upon States and communities of destination of what is termed the "removal migrant." In other words we are interested in families in search of new homes, in America's roadside population, in human erosion in the Dust Bowl, and in the 350,000 homes on the move at this moment—victims of drought, depression, and mechanized farming.

We are not interested in the "bindle stiff," the congenital hobo, only insofar as he adds to the confusion and the dislocation of national relief standards.

MILLIONS ON THE MOVE

Every year 2,000,000 of our citizens cross State lines in search of employment. For the most part they know nothing of our so-called settlement laws which require a period of residence of from 6 months to 5 years in the various States before they can qualify for county, State, and Federal relief. They travel in search of opportunity through Atlanta, Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York, Detroit, Cleveland, Chicago, Denver, El Paso, Los Angeles, Portland. Mostly they travel West—instinctively following the line of travel which began 500 years ago in Europe.

OBJECTS OF THE INVESTIGATION

Congress ought to know what is causing the present wave of unprecedented migration of agricultural families, and what are the reasons that they remain cut off from the land.

Congress ought to know what is the best and most practical way to anchor families to the soil in the light of existing conditions, and also how to stabilize industrial employment over a greater number of months in each year.

Congress ought to know the sources of and the ultimate destination of our great uncontrolled population movement.

Congress ought to have a full knowledge of the provisions for relief, education, housing, health, and resettlement of nonresident families in every State, and the Federal relief allocation should be made in conformity with a program which would be integrated with State and local aid.

Congress ought to know when the destitute condition of American families is the result of circumstances completely beyond their control.

HOPE IN RECLAMATION PROJECTS

Congress ought to know if the opportunities for resettlement on irrigated land made available by the great western reclamation projects will be opportunities for our families in the greatest need; if these projects will provide self-supporting status for families now almost permanent public charges, and thus decrease public relief expenditures.

Congress ought to know why 24 separate Federal agencies are attempting to cope with problems of migration and what are the needs for additional legislative authority to coordinate their programs.

DO HIGH RELIEF PAYMENTS DRAW INDIGENTS?

Many authorities on the subject of the migration of destitute families are convinced that high relief allocations have been a magnet drawing indigents to particular States. If that be true, Congress should work with New York, Pennsylvania, California, Illinois, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut—the States now granting the largest sums—to the end that their standards will not be driven to the lower levels which are the best effort possible in neighboring States.

While it is true that the Farm Security Administration has granted 800,000 farm families rehabilitation loans, we have 500,000 additional farm families needing this kind of help. One hundred and twenty thousand of these families are in the 5 States from which most of the California migrants have come—Oklahoma, Texas, Arkansas, Kansas, and Missouri. We know that they are prolific sources of migration. Many of the citizens of these States are now bound to the land only by the ties of poverty. Certainly we can direct their movement better than toward California where the great central valleys are now filled with Midwestern farmers looking for work—in some areas 6 men stand in the fields today for every available job.

THE TRAGEDY IN MECHANIZED FARMING

The Department of Agriculture estimates that it requires 1,600,000 less farm workers today than in 1929 to meet the visible foreign and domestic demand for farm products. But instead of less workers there are more. With urban unemployment, the rapidly growing rural population has backed up on the farms.

Even without the production of the mechanical cotton picker, mechanization is rapidly pushing more families off the land. The accumulated pressures threaten a mass migration far beyond anything America has ever seen. With no frontiers to conquer, no unfilled jobs in industry, such a migration would present welfare and relief problems more troublesome by far than those now facing us.

FEDERAL COOPERATION WITH STATES

Mr. Speaker, the primary objective of the proposed committee would be to work out a procedure whereby the Federal Government could more effectively assist States and communities to give emergency assistance to the nonresident, and work with public and private organizations toward permanent settlement and a rebirth of economically sound community life in the United States.

Are our problems even more complicated because of the conflicting local laws relating to citizenship, migration, homesteading, and relief? Is it possible to seek out and eliminate some of these problems in advance? Is there anything the Federal Government can do to forestall or soften the effects of interstate migration?

MOBILE LABOR RESERVOIRS

From 1930 to 1936 the flow of persons from farm to city has been estimated at over 1,250,000 persons a year. In addition, in agriculture, lumbering, construction, canning and packing, and in shipping, there are large numbers of casual migratory workers who, because of intermittent employment and low earnings, are apt to become periodic public charges. The total number involved and the number of destitute families has never been measured.

Should migration be stopped? Virtually every authority and student of migration agrees that in terms of the individual, the local community, the State, and the Nation continuing migration is necessary and desirable for fullest social and economic development.

FRICTION BETWEEN MIGRANT AND COMMUNITY

It must be apparent from the meager available figures that the great bulk of migration is healthy, but that during periods of depression and partial recovery there is a resultant friction between the destitute migrant and the community that leads to the following types of problems: (1) Competition for jobs; (2) health, with 10 States having no provisions for even emergency aid; (3) housing; (4) education, some tax rates in communities of destination have had a school-district increase of 400 percent; (5) family and child welfare, the normal resident care hopelessly inadequate; (6) prevention of delinquency, migrants being "Oakies" and "Arkies" or "outsiders," are excluded from the normal and better community relationships; (7) civil liberties; (8) social and community programs of culture and recreation are not available.

PROBLEM IS NATION-WIDE

Mr. Speaker, while the problem is admittedly national, and very little is known of its many sources, we do know that the old Cotton Belt, the southern Appalachian coal plateau, the Great Plains, and the cut-over region of the Great Lakes, provide a good future supply of migrants. It is estimated that under our present lack of employment opportunity in these areas that about 10,000,000 families will need to move somewhere else to eke out bare subsistence. I do not believe that Congress can make such a movement painless to the communities they move into, but I do believe that we can do a great deal not to complicate the movement when it gets even heavier than it is today.

DISARRANGED HUMAN RELATIONSHIPS

In the not too distant future industrialized farming is going to move inland from the great farm factories of the Pacific coast. Under a system of skilled foremen, gang labor, piece rates, recruiting by labor contractors, the traditional relations between the farmer and the hired man does not exist. Work is irregular, and the workers will mill about from crop to crop. The average earnings per family now on the Pacific coast totals less than $400 a year. Some one has to make up the difference when that family uses up its reserve in the off-season months. Will the county in which the roving farm family stops have to take the full burden? That is a question which only the State and the Federal Government can answer after a thorough investigation of the true responsibility which should fall upon each.

Homeless piece workers in American agriculture will make for class warfare. Mrs. Roosevelt and former President Herbert Hoover are urging the resettlement of these people upon small plots of land where pride of ownership will lead them to have a stronger sense of community responsibility. But can this be soundly advocated until we have appraised the success of the resettlement efforts of the Federal agencies from an independent and critical viewpoint?

TROUBLE SPOTS IN INTERSTATE MIGRATION

In Colorado today we have trouble with the sugar-beet worker; in Georgia, problems with fruit, truck, and berry-worker migration; in Illinois, with Chicago as the vortex of the movement of large numbers of seasonal workers, 4,000 single transients and 1,500 families registering every day, woodsmen, industrial, and agricultural workers meet in search of work, piling up on each other from east and west. In Indiana tomato harvesting and canning attracts too many workers, who stay too long. In Michigan sugar beets, berries, soft fruits, and vegetables are the crops in which most migrants seek work. In Mississippi tomato and cotton pickers work on into Florida. In Missouri the movement is northward and westward between crops, with a serious Negro indigent problem in St. Louis. New Mexico, in the flow of traffic from east to west, annually needs five or six thousand nonresidents to harvest its own cotton, broomcorn, and peas; yet the State treasury is not able to support the workers for the balance of the year. In New York the State Department of Social Welfare estimates that it cost $3,000,000 last year to support nonresidents. In North Carolina the number of seasonal hands has been estimated at 20,000 to 30,000 annually. The situation in Texas is worse than in California, but there the problem is aggravated by a serious intrastate problem in addition to an annual flood of cotton pickers, onion setters and pullers from adjoining States. Virginia is disturbed by the flow of harvest workers from Florida to up-State New York.

Outside of these few scanty conclusions, we know nothing about the cost, the treatment, or any proposed remedies to alleviate the wasteful effects of these trouble spots in interstate migration.

THE F. S. A. CAMP PROGRAM

During the present fiscal year the Farm Security Administration has made available temporary housing in 7 States with its 26 stationary and 6 mobile camps. We have estimated that there are about 350,000 farm families living on the highways; 1,432 tent platforms, 749 shelters, and 166 labor homes are certainly never going to make an appreciable dent in the housing of these families.

Mr. Speaker, everywhere I have turned in my search for possible solutions to this problem I have met the necessity for facts. California counted the migrants crossing her border in automobiles in search of manual labor. In a little over 4 years they counted over 350,000 persons. But they did not count the migrants that left California. The Bureau of Agricultural Economics reports that 47 percent of these people ultimately found their way into Los Angeles County, and most of them that have been in the State over a year are on the relief rolls. San Francisco and Alameda Counties have absorbed about three-fourths of the balance—Alameda County getting the largest share.

AUTHORITIES CALL FOR CONGRESSIONAL ACTION

What can an investigating committee hope to accomplish? We can make some definite recommendations as to the most valuable suggested solution of the 27 principal recommendations made to date by the experts on this subject. Dr. Paul Taylor, of the University of California, puts it this way:

> We need comprehensive congressional action. We need Federal aid to the States for general assistance, as we now give Federal aid for the aged, blind, and dependent children. This is necessary to diminish relief differentials between States of origin and States of destination, to equalize responsibility between them, and to care more surely and decently for families who seek opportunity by migration.

Again he says:

> We know that continued or recurring agricultural depression or drought threatens the precarious foothold of many who still cling to the land. We know that more tractors were sold in 1937 than were in use on all the farms of the country in 1920, and read in our magazines of more and better machines soon to reach the market. By their very efficiency and advantage to some Americans on the land they spell tragedy for others. Surely the urgency of a national effort of first magnitude is not concealed by our lack of statistics.

A serious effort to obtain the facts by a thorough national study of this problem has the endorsement of the American Federation of Labor, the American Bar Association, the National Travelers Aid Association, the Russell Sage Foundation, the Secretary of Agriculture, the leading magazines and newspapers, every student of the problem, and practically every social-service agency, public and private, in the country. A special committee appointed by the President recommended such a study last year.

CAN THE STATES SOLVE THE PROBLEM BY JOINT ACTION?

Mr. Speaker, the Constitution—article I, section 10, clause 3—provides that—

> No State shall, without the consent of Congress * * * enter into any agreement or compact with another State.

It is my hope that the proposed committee study will provide the Congress with standards by which any agreements between the States as to the transfer of indigents may be examined in the light of its effect upon the whole Nation.

The so-called Uniform Transfer of Dependents Act which is presently being urged upon several State legislatures is no more than an interstate compact within the meaning of the above-quoted section of the Constitution. It seems apparent that Congress should have facts at hand which are the result of independent study before it undertakes to approve or disapprove action which the dictates of necessity now forces upon the States.

IS ANY TYPE OF STATE ACTION AFFECTING MIGRATION CONSTITUTIONAL

Under the doctrine of the Lottery Cases (188 U. S. 321); Cammenetti v. United States (242 U. S. 470); Hoke v. United States (227 U. S. 308); and Hague v. C. I. O. (307 U. S. 496); it would appear that trade and business are not necessary elements in the traffic of persons in the channels of interstate commerce to bring the subject matter within the exclusive Federal power to act in that sphere. That being true, no State statute can affect the travel of an American citizen from State to State in search of employment. Appeals upon constitutional grounds of the infringement of the right of citizens to freedom of movement and selection of their place of residence by State statutes are now in the courts in two States. Chirillo against State, New York Courts of Appeals; and People against Ochoa, Superior Court of California in and for the County of Tulare. If the proposed congressional investigation committee determines that the New York statute which seeks to deport an indigent migrant and family back to Ohio affects interstate commerce; and the California statute which gives the migrant the alternative choice of departure or 6 months in jail affects a constitution guaranty of freedom of movement within our sovereignty, the necessity for action still is not solved. Should the courts determine that the States do not have the power to act, is there any alternative but the conclusion that it is the responsibility of the Congress to exercise its exclusive power in an effort to alleviate the hardship and regulate the movement of persons? Migration has always been a normal, healthy, and valuable safety valve in American economy. Are we going to allow the lack of an intelligent approach to the problem lead us more deeply into the morass of wasteful movement of population which is the characteristic of our day?

STATES MUST DRAW ON FEDERAL RESOURCES

When the Thirteen Original States joined the Union and surrendered their power to the Federal Government to control the movement of persons and goods across their borders, they certainly did not expect that their citizens would be led into bankruptcy at some future date by the flow of poverty-stricken families from other States—good solid American families that must be fed, clothed, and housed, but which are refugees from the dislocated economy of certain blighted areas. They placed their trust in the resources of the Union, and every State which has since been brought into that Union feels the same sense of security. I do not believe that the Congress will throw up its hands and refuse to act.

I believe that after study and a well-considered definition of the national responsibility, assistance will be given within the limits of that responsibility. But first we must have the true picture based upon an independent search for the facts. I, therefore, urge the House to act favorably on House Resolution 63, so that we may be prepared to make recommendations to the various legislative committees of the House at the next Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. TOLAN].

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my gratitude to the House for the action taken on this Tolan resolution. One of the great problems that our country faces today is the problem of homeless people seeking new homes elsewhere. It is well for us to get the facts regarding this matter, and I believe that through this investigation we may be able to do that job.

I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix on two different subjects.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

PRESERVE PEACE FOR THE UNITED STATES

Mr. THILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. THILL. Mr. Speaker, the overwhelming majority of the people in the world want to live in peace. They want to give their energy to the arts and sciences, to agriculture and manufacturing, that they may enjoy life by creating and building. They do not want to produce military planes, bombs, machine guns, poison gas, and cannon for the destruction of property and human beings. They believe, as did the signers of the Declaration of Independence, "that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." People crave that peace which will give them a common opportunity to live in security—to maintain and rear their families—to guarantee for themselves and their children the right to live as God had intended them to live, in peace and love for one another. But today, many parts of the world are at war. Men of supposedly civilized nations are striving with all the cunning they can command to kill one another. It seems that the world has forgotten Christ's message of love, peace, and sanctity of human life.

We, as Americans, cannot be blind to this mad travesty of civilization. But we can and must stay out of the wars now going on in the world. By maintaining a well-ordered neutrality, by preparing for defense against all potential enemies, we can avoid those wars which might bring to the United States nothing except misery, death, and destruction.

War propagandists in our midst seek by vicious means to involve us in the European conflict. Through the radio and the press, they circulate deliberate falsehoods with emotional appeal to excite our sympathy or stir up hatred of such intensity, that it might induce us to stifle our strong desires for peace and take up arms for war.

We must avoid the snares of these paid warmongers and actively work to keep the United States at peace. Those who guard their country's welfare will follow the precepts stated by the Father of our country in his Farewell Address:

Excessive partiality for one foreign nation and excessive dislike for another, cause those whom they actuate to see danger only on one side, and serve to veil and even second the arts of influence on the other. Real patriots, who may resist the intrigues of the favorite, are liable to become suspected and odious; while its tools and dupes usurp the applause and confidence of the people, to surrender their interests * * *.

Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalship, interest, humor, or caprice?

Jefferson, too, was most outspoken against involvement in Europe. He said:

I have ever deemed it fundamental for the United States never to take an active part in the quarrels of Europe. * * * They are nations of eternal war.

We cannot disregard those words of wisdom and advice. We as citizens of the United States owe a sacred duty to our country to preserve those liberties which our forefathers willed to us. It is our job to make democracy work here, rather than to enter wars over there.

I detest war for the lies it lives, for the deaths it brings, for the undying hatreds it arouses, for the dictatorships it creates, for the starvation that stalks after it, and for the undying misery produced by it. I will do everything in my power to preserve peace for the United States.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include an address by Mr. James A. Farley, delivered before Westminster College in my State.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, APRIL 23, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. RAYBURN.

Rev. Vernon VanBuren, B. D., pastor of the Methodist Church, Wilmington, Ohio, offered the following prayer:

Loving Father, reverently we pray that on earth Thy kingdom may come and Thy will be done both among men and nations in this tragic hour. We are not unmindful of our grave responsibilities. As we have bountifully been given our daily bread, so may we seek to share our blessings with the needy of earth. Hasten the day when ignorance, disease, poverty, and greed shall no longer blight the earth. Forgive us as we are willing to forgive.

Lead us and guide us in paths of righteousness. When others seek the way of the sword, God grant that this Nation shall seek the way of peace, good will, justice, and truth.

Let Thy light dawn in us, O God. Let there be rekindled a heroic and mighty faith among legislators and citizens alike, that evil shall not prevail. Deepen our affections, confirm our confidence, unite our hearts, and make strong the bulwarks of democracy. Guide us in the noble and lofty purposes of life, with keenness of heart and mind, that in all honest endeavor we may find the ultimate fulfillment of life's glorious meaning. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD by including certain excerpts from a speech made by my late father.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in connection with the birthday of Edwin Markham and to include therein his poem The Man With the Hoe.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, in England on the 23d day of April 1564 William Shakespeare was born, and today marks the three hundred and seventy-sixth anniversary of his birth. To me the works of Shakespeare come next to the Bible. His writings are inspired, and no other author in history can approximate this master in the literary world.

As the years go by his greatness grows and appreciation for him by the peoples of the earth increases accordingly.

The heritage of the past, in spite of some of our modern thinkers, is worth preserving. It is ours. It costs us nothing. All of the contributions which the great men of the past ages have made to our civilization are worthy of being kept.

And so we celebrate the anniversary of the birth of Shakespeare and pay tribute to him. In point of genius and knowledge and ability, in his field of work, he stands alone. There is no subject that he ever touched to which he did not contribute something of the infinite.

His advice applicable to the men of public life in his day are words of wisdom for the leaders in government in this age and time. He said:

I charge thee, fling away ambition:
By that sin fell the angels.
Love thyself last: cherish those hearts that hate thee;
Corruption wins not more than honesty.
Still in thy right hand carry gentle peace,
To silence envious tongues. Be just, and fear not:
Let all the ends thou aim'st at be thy country's,
Thy God's, and truth's.

With the language that only a master can command, he pictures the downfall of men who achieve greatness and warns against a trait of character which we should avoid. He says:

'Tis a common proof,
That lowliness is young ambition's ladder,
Whereto the climber upward turns his face;
But when he once attains the upmost round,
He then unto the ladder turns his back,
Looks in the clouds, scorning the base degrees
By which he did ascend.

In this city of Washington it is proper that a monument be erected to the memory of William Shakespeare. Through the work of Henry C. Folger, the Folger Shakespearean Library has been built in the city of Washington, D. C. The cornerstone was laid in 1930, and this beautiful building, devoted entirely to William Shakespeare, symbolizes the reverence of the American people for the man who has enriched the thought and hopes of people in all countries and in all ages to come. It was dedicated on April 23, 1932.

The very language used by Shakespeare in one of his sonnets describes accurately his monument, builded not in stone or marble, which will crumble and decay, but in the heart and soul of mankind:

Your monument shall be my gentle verse,
Which eyes not yet created shall o'er-read;
And tongues to be your being shall rehearse
When all the breathers of this world are dead;
You still shall live (such virtue hath my pen)
Where breath most breathes, even in the mouths of men.

NATIONAL AVIATION DAY

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a resolution authorizing the recognition of American women's interest in aviation and directing their attention to, and urging their cooperation with, the coming Nation-wide celebration of National Aviation Day, on August 19, 1940, and for other purposes.

Whereas the development of aviation, both as an important industrial asset and as a strong arm of our national defense, is vitally essential to the welfare of our country; and

Whereas by Public Resolution No. 14, approved May 11, 1939, at the suggestion of the National Aviation Day Association, recognized and designated August 19, 1940, the birth date of Orville Wright as National Aviation Day, and further provided for Nation-wide celebration of that date; and

Whereas the patriotism of American women from the very inception of our Republic has been the inspiration of lovers of liberty, respected and admired the entire world over; and

Whereas today American women have a double interest in the advancement of aviation, first, as a potent means of defending their homes against invaders; second, as an increasingly important industrial factor contributing to the pay rolls, and thus aiding recovery and maintaining prosperity: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That in recognition of American women's interest in aviation Congress directs their attention to and urges their cooperation with the coming Nation-wide celebrations of National Aviation Day on August 19, 1940.

AIR CONTROL BOARD

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include an article from the Detroit News by Jay D. Hayden at this point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, today the people of the United States are enjoying the benefits of the finest system of air transportation in the world—a spirit of cooperation and partnership between the United States Government and private enterprise which we believe to be unprecedented in the history of American business and has achieved the rapid advances made by air transportation in recent years.

Neither the Government nor private enterprise alone could have made common-carrier transportation by air what it is today.

Mr. Speaker, this was not brought about overnight. It has come about only after years of hard, conscientious effort on the part of friends of aviation in both Houses of Congress to give to aviation that to which it is entitled, that which it is imperative it must have—separate, individual, specialized regulation in our complex system of government. It is imperative that this regulation, if possible, be kept free from political domination and political patronage.

Mr. Speaker, well do friends of aviation recall the days of the "reign of terror" in the aviation industry from 1933 to 1938.

The President now proposes, under Reorganization Plan IV, to throw the aviation industry back into the same state of chaos and turmoil that existed then. He has stated that the arguments against this reorganization are "a lot of spinach." Well, here is some "spinach" well written by Mr. Jay Hayden in the Detroit News of last Sunday. I hope every Member of this House and of the Senate will carefully read and digest this "spinach," and I assure you that, if nothing else, it ought to give you sufficient strength to vote against this reorganization plan.

[From the Detroit News of April 21, 1940]

ROOSEVELT FACES BATTLE ON PLAN TO REVISE AIR-CONTROL SET-UP—RECORD OF LAST YEAR FOES' BEST ARGUMENT—APPROVAL OF SYSTEM BY CONGRESS IN 1938 OVER PRESIDENT'S OPPOSITION STILL BELIEVED TO RANKLE CHIEF EXECUTIVE

(By Jay G. Hayden)

WASHINGTON, April 20.—Unless President Roosevelt withdraws his proposal to return the Civil Aeronautics Authority to Cabinet control, he is in for a fight which may upset his whole Reorganization Plan No. IV, it has become increasingly apparent during the last week.

The proposal to revise the aviation-control set-up is inexplicable. For 5 years Congress and the President wrangled over the issue before the present system was created on August 22, 1938. There were some misgivings then respecting the plan, based on its seeming division of authority between an Administrator, a General Control Board, and an Air Safety Board. In practice, however, the organization has worked well. Certainly there is no official in Washington today more popular and respected than Robert C. Hinckley, chairman of the C. A. A. and the man who is given major credit for success of the system.

Overshadowing all of these factors was the news widely heralded on March 26 last that for the first time in history American commercial airplanes had operated a full 12 months, in which they had carried more than 2,000,000 passengers without a single fatality.

SETS PRECEDENT

This is perhaps the first instance in history when a President has proposed to denude of its power an administrative agency possessed of an absolutely perfect record of performance.

Why did Mr. Roosevelt do it? Chiefly, it appears, because he has a passion for concentrated authority and the C. A. A. is a particularly glaring example of decentralized authority. In the act creating it Congress made a business of short-circuiting the President. He was authorized to appoint the top-ranking officials, subject to confirmation by the Senate, but he was completely prohibited from removing them. For their actions, once they were sworn in, they were made responsible exclusively to Congress.

In addition to the fact that this creation of another completely independent administrative branch, just when he was trying to bring the existing independent agencies under his wing, rankled in Mr. Roosevelt's mind, the C. A. A. has clashed from time to time with Cabinet departments.

CITE SARABIA CRASH

The War Department bitterly resented a recent report of the Air Safety Board respecting a crash in which the Mexican aviator, Sarabia, was killed, which cast reflections on military flying efficiency. The State Department has looked askance on inspections in foreign ccuntries, made, it is alleged, without previous international consultations. And it is probable that the Budget Bureau has resented the direct approach of the C. A. A. to Congress in matters of appropriations.

A more intimate reason for the reorganization order may have been the desire of Clinton M. Hester, Administrator of the C. A. A., to enhance his authority at the expense of Chairman Hinckley and his control board. In his third reorganization order the President proposed changes that would have increased Hester's powers. But when this brought a mighty howl from Hinckley's numerous congressional friends the President withdrew it and substituted the present plan of making the Secretary of Commerce supreme over the whole aviation set-up.

HANDLING ASSAILED

President Roosevelt's handling of the aviation problem from the beginning has been unfortunate. When the necessity for some sort of governmental regulation of commercial aviation first arose during the administration of President Warren G. Harding, Herbert Hoover, then Secretary of Commerce, was assigned the job, and he went at it with his usual vigor. By the time Mr. Roosevelt appeared on the scene in 1933 the Bureau of Air Commerce, under such able Administrators as Clarence M. Young and William P. McCracken, had attained a high efficiency.

Because the Department of Commerce was a Hoover creation and was charged with being promotive of big business, Roosevelt had a particular prejudice against it. One of his new economy moves as President was to decrease the Commerce Department appropriation from $10,000,000 to $5,000,000. The office of Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Aviation was completely abolished and all branches of the Bureau of Air Commerce were sharply curtailed.

At the outset of the Roosevelt administration also there was a great scramble among deserving Democrats for the aeronautical jobs. Senator Thomas P. Gore, of Oklahoma, thought the directorship of the Bureau of Air Commerce should go to his son-in-law, Eugene Vidal. Senator Thomas P. Walsh, of Montana, was backing John H. Geisse; and Senator Joseph T. Robinson, of Arkansas, sponsored J. Carrol Cone for this same place.

ALL THREE GET JOBS

Not wanting to antagonize any of these loyal friends, the President conceived the idea of naming all three of their proteges with substantially equal powers. No one was placed in top authority. Vidal was named assistant director in charge of air regulation; Cone, assistant director in charge of aeronautical development; and Geisse, chief inspector. A fourth coequal job as director of airways went to Rex Martin, whose principal political sponsor was Speaker Henry T. Rainey.

The result was a cat-and-dog fight between these and others of the Bureau officials which kept it in turmoil for several years. Ultimately Vidal was named Director, supposedly in complete control, but the effect of this was to make his rivals, each with a powerful political pull, more obstreperous than they had been before, and Vidal was not permitted to fire them.

The bill blow-off came with Postmaster General James A Farley's cancelation of air-mail contracts and the subsequent tragic fiasco of the attempt to substitute Army planes and pilots as mail carriers. In response to a wave of congressional criticism, President Roosevelt appointed a special commission, which recommended transfer of both commercial air control and the handling of air-mail contracts to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

HUNT FOR SUBSTITUTE

Then occurred a long legislative deadlock. Congress did not like the idea of air regulation by the already overworked Interstate Commerce Commission, but it found great difficulty in devising an acceptable substitute. It was not until 1938 that the present system was established.

The factors in the present arrangement which airmen say have been responsible for its success are its complete nonpolitical character and its separation of the three elements of policy making, rules enforcement, and the investigation of accidents.

The main Board, headed by Hinckley, deals with the establishment of air lines, freight, and passenger rates and the making of rules. The administrator's function is enforcement. The Air Safety Board, completely independent, has the sole job of fixing responsibility when an accident occurs.

The latter Board for example may find that the rules or lack of rules provided by the Air Board contributed to an accident or that the Government inspector was at fault—something that never happened when the rule makers, administrators, and investigators were all answerable to the same authority.

Similarly, the Hinckley board, which makes the rules and fixes rates, has no direct contact, except in consideration of specific cases presented to it, with the personnel of the private air lines.

PILOTS' VIEWS GIVEN

But the main argument of the people who contend that the present set-up should be preserved is that "the proof of the pudding is in the eating." In the words of David L. Behncke, president of the Air Line Pilots' Association, written to Representative FRED BRADLEY, of Michigan, this week:

"The regulation of air transportation and the civil aviation by the Department of Commerce is something that the pilots and, in fact, everyone in the industry look back upon with abhorrence. Crash upon crash, needless sacrifice of human life. During this dark period the pilots lost 146 of their number and a startling total of 473 persons lost their lives in air crashes. Congress passed the Civil Aeronautics Act in 1938; we all know the result. Crashes were cut to a minimum. There has been no fatality in the last 12 months. When Congress established the Air Safety Board it restored confidence in air travel with one stroke. If the President's reorganization plan, to place regulation and air-accident investigation back under the Department of Commerce, is approved, public confidence will be destroyed because where people's lives are involved they have a long memory."

THE FARM CREDIT ADMINISTRATION WRITES ITS STOCKHOLDERS

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, Washington papers have been carrying most unjust and bitter attacks on Secretary Wallace and Governor Black, of the Farm Credit Administration, under the news and editorial captions, "F. C. A. head accused of lobbying." "Unchecked lobbying." "Wallace using bill for votes." Since it appears to me that the memorandum of the Secretary, which was transmitted to stockholders of National farm loan associations by Governor Black, was not only justifiable but absolutely necessary and required under the law, I have informed myself and desire to pass on to my colleagues the facts in regard to the matter. I am convinced that the letter was needed to reassure farm borrowers, who are also perforce stockholders, because of the Nation-wide assaults upon the system conducted by dismissed and resigned employees. The truth is that the system has not changed except as to its governing chief, and a few other officials who have been flouting the will of Congress and stirring up discord, distrust, and dissension. It was clearly the duty of the head of that branch of the Government service to explain the situation to its borrowers who are also investors. Any financial institution under attack would have done the same.

I have, in two previous speeches recently made—see Appendix of the RECORD, page 1297 and the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Apr. 11, 1940, page 4360—explained to the Congress the details of the organization and work of the Farm Credit Administration. I have been greatly concerned over the attacks and have thought that others might give consideration to my voice, because I do speak from experience. I represent a constituency which is almost entirely agricultural and in need of seasonal credit. I am a member of the Committee on Agriculture which has been educated on this subject through prolonged hearings. I am a farmer myself, constantly associated with farmers, individually and in farm organizations to which I belong. I was formerly chairman of one of the local loan associations under a Federal land bank. I was formerly a borrower. I speak from the fullness of experience, and I believe I reflect accurately the views and opinions of farmers who have, through granges and other organizations, sent me resolutions of approval of my statements and my stand on pending legislation.

Those attacking Governor Black and Secretary Wallace are referring to a letter addressed, not to Members of Congress but to stockholders of national farm-loan associations throughout the Nation.

I should remind my colleagues that the Farm Credit Administration was placed under the Department of Agriculture following the Reorganization Act passed by this Congress. It was part of a plan submitted to the Congress by the President and accepted by the Congress through their acquiescence. When this transfer took place, the Secretary of Agriculture announced that it was only nominal and that the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration would have full administrative responsibility and that the agency would be really autonomous, simply reporting to the Secretary. The Comptroller General then ruled that the Secretary was wholly responsible for the Farm Credit Administration and must assume that administrative responsibility. Thereupon, Governor Hill resigned and protested in a long press statement given publicity throughout the Nation. This statement was calculated to shake confidence in the F. C. A. under the new set-up as provided by Congress.

SECRETARY SEEKS TO RESTORE CONFIDENCE

The Secretary and the new Governor soon found that there was ample cause for lack of confidence, but that it was based upon the previous conduct of affairs, rather than upon the administrative transfer. Results of careful investigation made it obligatory upon the Secretary to consider the acceptance of further resignations. Some of these resentful officials, before leaving their Government positions, used their offices to circulate further attacks upon the system and to destroy confidence in the new administration. After leaving their offices they again circularized the stockholders and published statements with the apparent intention of creating the impression that the agency was being disastrously affected by the administrative actions required of the Secretary under the new arrangement. In an effort to counteract the fear and suspicion engendered by these letters to Federal land-bank borrowers, and to give them an honest statement on what has been termed "their cooperative venture," Governor Black of the F. C. A. sent the letter to each stockholder, transmitting a memorandum made to him by Secretary Wallace.

My colleagues who attacked this memorandum were probably not aware that it was issued under definite provision of the law. I wish to make it clear to others, as it is to me, that the circulation of this letter was not only justifiable, but it was wise, and in compliance with the law. I quote the act in which this Congress required that such matters be brought to the attention of land-bank borrowers, using quotations for the salient phrase.

LEGAL REQUIREMENT COMPELLED THE LETTER

Section 664, chapter 7, title 12, U. S. C.:

Bulletins and circulars. It shall be the duty of the Farm Credit Administration to prepare from time to time bulletins setting forth the principal features of this subchapter (Federal land banks, joint-stock land banks, and national farm-loan associations) and of subchapter III (Federal intermediate-credit banks) of this chapter and through the Department of Agriculture or otherwise to distribute the same, particularly to the press, to agricultural journals, and to farmers' organizations; to prepare and distribute in the same manner circulars setting forth the principles and advantages of amortized farm loans and the protection afforded debtors under said subchapters, instructing farmers how to organize and conduct farm-loan associations, and advising investors of the merits and advantages of farm-loan bonds; "and to disseminate in its discretion information for the further instruction of farmers regarding the methods and principles of cooperative credit and organization." Said administration is instructed to lay before the Congress at each session its recommendations for further appropriations to carry out the objects of this section. (July 17, 1916, ch. 245, sec. 3, 39 Stat. 361, Mar. 27, 1933, Executive Order 6084.)

I invite your attention to the requirement that the Farm Credit Administration disseminate "information for the further instruction of farmers regarding the methods and principles of cooperative credit and organization." Every question Secretary Wallace placed in his memorandum invites discussion of the principles of cooperative credit. I notice that Governor Black opened his letter by saying, "This letter probably breaks a precedent." I know of no precedent for the breaking of which there was more justification. The stockholders should have been informed long ago. If Governor Black is breaking a precedent, then obeying the law is unprecedented. If inviting attention to the principles of cooperative credit breaks a precedent, then the system is not and never was cooperative. If the Congress desires that farmers participate in their agricultural credit structure, it should warmly commend an official who will provide those farmers with a chance to participate such as they have never before enjoyed.

There is not a thing in Secretary Wallace's memorandum which every borrower of the Farm Credit Administration is not entitled to know. In fact, Members of Congress also should have received the letter, and I now make good that oversight by inserting it for their information. It is important that all who vote on the Farm Credit Administration should know the facts about it. I am sure careful readers will agree with me that the letter is a logical and accurate statement of facts and an excellent brief discussion of fundamental issues.

FARM CREDIT ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D. C., April 10, 1940.

To Stockholders of National Farm Loan Associations:

This letter probably breaks a precedent, but here goes. I know of no better way of stimulating thought and discussion than writing to you. In fact, I plan to send you from time to time pertinent information about the farm-loan system.

Secretary Wallace and I have talked over repeatedly many of the problems confronting the Farm Credit Administration. I take it that you as a borrower and farmer also are interested, so I am passing on to you one of his memoranda in which he asks some very pertinent and far-reaching questions.

I hope this will stimulate your own thought, that there will be discussion of these problems among the farmers, and that many farmers will have things they will wish to contribute to our thinking on the subject.

Sincerely yours,

A. G. BLACK, Governor.

MEMORANDUM FOR A. G. BLACK, GOVERNOR, FARM CREDIT ADMINISTRATION

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington.

DEAR GOVERNOR BLACK: Our discussions of the various problems connected with the administration of the Farm Credit Administration have raised certain questions in my mind which I would like to pass on to you for consideration.

Your outline of conditions that have persisted for some time in the affairs of the land-bank system raises some grave questions, and I hope the facts have been laid before the borrowers. You say you have some doubts as to whether the borrowers are well informed. I was astounded to learn that more than half of the local national farm-loan associations in the United States are insolvent, and that only 40 percent of them are sufficiently solvent to be able to accept applications and sell their stock to members. Does this not raise the issue as to whether the stock which farmers have had to purchase in order to obtain loans has not carried a liability much larger than it should have borne? Also, I wonder if the borrowers have always been informed of the exact financial position of the association before they purchased stock?

What is troubling me is that many associations have been operating in territories where there seems to be a good deal of hazard, and consequently the borrowers assumed a liability which they should not have been asked to carry. After all, are not the loans made by the Federal land banks and not by the associations, although, of course, they are endorsed by the latter?

If in the future loans were to be made without farmers having to buy stock, the losses which might be incurred as a result of loans in a particular area wolud be spread on the books of the bank and not be confined to a single association. Of course, if loans were to be made in the future without requiring farmers to purchase stock, would it not be the equitable and just thing to pay off at par all the stock now owned by borrowers whether or not such stock is impaired?

In looking over the record of the Federal land banks and the so-called Commissioner loans made from the funds of the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation, I am greatly impressed with the amount of delinquency on the part of borrowers, totaling about 22 percent for the land bank and about 30 percent for the Commissioner loan. We have discussed the very heavy delinquency in some States, but I didn't quite realize the situation throughout the country was as bad as these figures indicate. Part of this condition, of course, is due to long-continued adverse climatic conditions, but that is by no means the only cause.

Interest rates charged borrowers of the land banks have been reduced temporarily now for several years by Congress appropriating from the Federal Treasury and paying to the land banks the difference between the interest rate which the farmers contract to pay and the emergency rate established by Congress. I doubt if this can go on indefinitely. We have discussed many times the cost to the Government of a continued subsidized farm-mortgage interest rate which is costing the Federal Treasury a good many million dollars a year. As the land-bank system is now set up, the banks obtain their funds from the sale of Federal land-bank bonds not guaranteed by the Government. Would it not be worth while to explore with responsible persons the possibility that if the Government should guarantee these bonds they could be sold at a sufficiently lower rate of interest to give the farmers permanently the same low emergency rates they are now receiving or even perhaps lower without costing the Government the subsidy?

In the current money market I believe a Government-guaranteed land-bank bond would bear a much lower rate of interest than is borne by the non-Government-guaranteed land-bank bonds outstanding. Why, then, couldn't the outstanding land-bank bonds be replaced as rapidly as possible with the lower-rate bonds and give the farmers the benefit of the difference in rates?

Since the Farm Credit Administration is now a part of the United States Department of Agriculture and not an independent agency or under a loan board, I personally am particularly impressed with the need for improving the farm-mortgage situation along these lines and not limiting our thinking to the existing system and procedures.

Sincerely yours,

H. A. WALLACE, Secretary.

FARM INVESTORS ENTITLED TO THE INFORMATION

This letter raises a number of questions of policy in the field of agricultural credit. It presents issues in a clear-cut way for consideration by the farmers for whose benefit the Farm Credit Act was passed. The letter gives them, for the first time, a real insight into the affairs of corporate credit institutions in which they have been required to invest. It gives farmers some notion about the status of the banks Congress has asked them to help to run. The letter raises questions which ought to be raised in every stockholders' meeting of any properly managed corporation, and it asks the farmers for their opinions. This letter neither recommended nor criticized pending legislation, nor did it advance any specific remedy for the evils of which every student of agricultural credit has been aware.

Secretary Wallace first expresses his astonishment and consternation at learning that only 40 percent of the national farm-loan associations are sufficiently solvent to accept applications and sell stock. He raises two questions—whether the liability of individual stockholders is too large and whether farmer-borrowers have been informed about the value of the stock they are required to purchase. What is wrong about that part of the memorandum? It is true. Why should not the stockholder know the facts? Why should not the farmer, making application for a loan, be told the financial condition of the association in which he is required to invest?

LIABILITY WITHOUT CONSENT

This is certainly not the first time farmers have wondered about the liability they were required to assume to get a Federal land-bank loan, but it is the first time any responsible administrative official has invited their participation in finding the answer. In my own State and in other States Federal land banks have made exorbitant farm loans and have saddled local associations with 100-percent liability for any loss, with flagrant disregard for the judgment and wishes of those associations. I believe that if I were to be held liable as surety for a loan I should at least be given an opportunity to decide whether I wanted to assume that liability. If the farmers in my district are going to be charged with responsibility for possible losses on other people's mortgages, I shall defend to the limit of my ability their privilege of deciding whether those risks should be incurred. I will also defend their right to express opinions as to whether the liability their Government is asking them to bear is too heavy. These are precisely the questions the Secretary of Agriculture has sought to bring to the attention of American farmer-borrowers. When the day arrives that such questions may not be brought to the attention of the people whose homes, lives, and incomes are vitally affected, we will have wandered far from the democratic concepts this Congress is established to perpetuate.

The Secretary of Agriculture asked farmers whether they knew the value of stock in national farm-loan associations which they were required to purchase in order to obtain credit. I cannot believe that any Member of Congress would criticize that query. This Congress in the last few years has established strict regulation of securities markets to prevent private investors being swindled. This Congress has declared, as a matter of policy, that bankers, investors, and other owners of wealth may not be imposed upon by sharp-witted, unscrupulous speculators. We have declared that securities put up for sale on the open market must have some intrinsic value. What kind of reasoning can now bring any of us to the conclusion that it is right or justifiable for corporations sponsored and backed by the Government to peddle gold bricks to farmers?

LOCAL ASSOCIATIONS IGNORED BUT HELD RESPONSIBLE

The farming business requires seasonal credit. Often a farmer gets into desperate financial straits before he asks for credit. He is in a position where advantage can be taken of him. He will buy stock if it is required, but I cannot bring myself to believe that right-thinking people would condone the practice of selling him stock which is actually valueless and which, indeed, may be a personal liability.

The Secretary's statement goes on to inquire whether the loans are not, after all, made by Federal land banks and not by the local associations. I have had sufficient personal experience with the land-bank system to know that no local association of farmers has been permitted to decide whether a loan should be made. That decision has been made, in the past, by members of the banking fraternity duly initiated into the service of these quasi-governmental institutions. Those carefully chosen gentlemen have zealously guarded the privilege of making ultimate decisions about each individual loan. They have, even more jealously, guarded their license to pass on to groups of farmer borrowers the responsibility for their mistakes. The local associations have no alternative but to accept that responsibility. It has been my hope that the Farm Credit Administration would put an end to this fiction of private ownership and enter into honest, open negotiations with its borrowers so they would know what they were getting. I have hoped that the 5-percent discount, or bonus, on all Federal land-bank loans, dressed up as a stock-purchase requirement, could be eliminated.

Secretary Wallace does not mention the Jones nor Kleberg bills, but he does suggest that if the farmer is relieved from taking the 5-percent stock off his loan, the losses can be spread over the entire system, further suggesting that it might be better this way, as furnishing a broader base. Then he suggests that if the change is made it would be no more than right to pay off at par all those who have been forced to buy this 5-percent stock. What is wrong about that? I have been saying that, in Congress and out, for 20 years. There is certainly nothing criminal in telling the plain truth and suggesting proper restitution.

DELINQUENCIES

In a cogent paragraph the Secretary suggests that perhaps some associations have been operating in territories where the hazards are great. That also is true. Here I ask a question brought to my mind by the Secretary's letter: Why are they operating there? Why, because the insurance companies will lend money cheaper and on easier terms in the good territories, leaving the hazardous risks to Government lending agencies. Where is the crime, I pray, in telling the stockholders that the Farm Credit Administration has been taking greater risks than the insurance companies have been willing to accept?

The Secretary's letter then calls attention to the fact that the delinquency today in the Federal land banks is about 22 percent of all loans, and 30 percent of Commissioner's loans. Why should not the stockholders know that? It is a fact. Who is responsible for that condition—Secretary Wallace? No, no! It was the outgrowth of the supervision and management of men who are now loudly crying that the Farm Credit Administration has been ruined by the Secretary. What inconsistency, and what injustice, for Congressmen to rush to the press with bitter criticism of the Secretary and the F. C. A. Governor.

Officials of Federal land banks and other farm-credit institutions have been telling prospective investors that their financial status was secure. Thousands of borrowers have entered the system in the mistaken belief that they were protected by sound financial methods and balanced accounts. If a commercial bank were in the same situation, it would be forced to close as a protection to its depositors and stockholders. Yet the Secretary of Agriculture is criticized because he invites discussion of disastrous trends in the land-bank system. I welcome the assurance that the F. C. A. has been placed in the hands of responsible officials who will patiently search out the facts, make them known to those concerned, and suggest changes, legislative or administrative, necessary to the solvency and efficiency of the whole national farm-credit system. Former officials were remiss in the fulfillment of their duties. There have been no changes in structure nor in policy outside of legal requirements, which are now rigidly observed. I am thankful that we have gained cooperative, honest, and forceful leadership.

INTEREST RATES

The remainder of the Secretary's memorandum invites attention to some very pertinent considerations regarding land-bank interest rates. He cites the fact that Congress has reduced interest on farm loans to the uniform rate of 3½ percent by emergency legislation expiring July 1, 1940. He states that if we could have Government-guaranteed bonds and take up the outstanding land-bank bonds, replacing them with bonds bearing lower rates of interest, we could give farmers the benefits. Who would be hurt by that? Refinancing at lower rates of interest is the order of the day, and it is certainly the way of wisdom for any business.

The Federal land banks can obtain, and are now obtaining, funds at interest rates of approximately 2 percent. The basic law permits the system to charge 1 percent more than it is required to pay. Nevertheless, the lowest contract rate of interest to farmers is 4 percent. In giving the farmer a 3½-percent interest rate in the emergency legislation, the Congress has provided that the Treasury would pay the remaining one-half of 1 percent or more.

There is abundant evidence that a properly managed farm-credit structure could now lend money to American farmers at 3 or 3½ percent, without any subsidy from the Treasury, if it would take advantage of existing conditions in the American money market. This is a far cry from the 4½ to 5, even 6 percent farmers have been forced to pay for Federal land-bank loans in years past. The Secretary further states that this act of Congress, which was twice vetoed by the President, under advice of the old F. C. A. group, and which has been twice passed over the President's veto, has cost the Treasury several millions of dollars. That is a fact. Wherein is the crime in calling attention to it and further suggesting that this cannot be continued indefinitely?

Who would be hurt by the sensible refinancing proposed, and who would be helped? Certainly the farmer would profit by it. The mortgage companies and insurance companies would be obliged to meet the lower rates. Therein lies the explanation of the flow of letters against the Jones bill and all other proposals to keep farm-interest rates low. No real farmer has written me a word of protest against the Jones bill. Those who have protested are money lenders or businessmen apparently influenced by them. I intend to publish for the information of farmers of my State the names of the firms which have protested against the Jones bill in the name of "protection of private enterprise," demanding a farm-money monopoly for these companies. Like all monopolies they would control rates and prices. Government lending furnishes a yardstick which they resent. The farmers of this Nation have at last been brought face to face with their enemies; by that I mean they are drawn up in battle array against those who would deny them the privileges of the low interest rates now enjoyed by all other businesses except farm producers.

MONEY MARKET FIGHTS FOR CONTROL

I submit that the real and underlying issue of this discussion of the Farm Credit Administration is whether the Congress is going to condone a continuance of unconscionable interest rates and sharp practices by credit agencies which are creatures of its own creation and use its capital. We now have, for the first time in my recollection, an opportunity to establish a farm-credit system which is responsive to and based upon the needs of American agriculture. The alternative to that type of credit is continuance, by a do-nothing policy, of the long-established practice of farming the farmer through credit manipulation. Those who control the money markets are in this fight up to their necks. They are in it, not because they love the Farm Credit Administration. They are in it to prevent any further reduction in the amount of unearned increment they can charge against agriculture. They are in it because they know that full understanding of farm-credit problems will lower the amount they can charge farmers for the use of idle money. It is time we realized that this economy cannot survive if those who hold idle money are able to charge rates of interest upon it which exceed the average increase in wealth. There has never been any real justification for an 8-percent interest rate on a farm mortgage through a private bank, or a 4-percent interest rate on a mortgage to a Federal land bank. The security of good farm land is normally the best security that can be offered. The farmer-borrowers, as a whole, have more reasons to want to pay than any other type of borrower, but they have been unorganized; they have been unable to defend themselves in the money market as in the commodity market. They could not establish their own rates of interest any more than they could establish the rates at which they sell their wheat. They took what they could get. They will use and are using every argument and artifice available to them to prevent a lowering of the interest privilege.

I have made these observations in the firm conviction that we can, and the sincere hope that we will protect productive farm labor from usury.

WHO WANTS AN INDEPENDENT F. C. A.?

In the last paragraph, our much-abused but ever-efficient Secretary of Agriculture says that since the F. C. A. has been placed in the Department of Agriculture, and no longer is an independent agency, he has been impressed with the need for improving the farm-credit situation for the benefit—of whom? The farmer or the money lender? The farmer is the man whom the Secretary of Agriculture has in mind, the man he wants to help and protect.

I have observed the work of the Department of Agriculture very carefully during the last 8 years, and I should like to say that this letter is an example of Secretary Wallace's underlying philosophy of democracy in Federal administration. He has asked and has received the enthusiastic cooperation of farmers everywhere, in the administration of the Agricultural Adjustment Act; in county land use planning work, and in all the varied problems in bringing about orderly, systematic consideration of the problems of agriculture. Neither Governor Black nor the Secretary has mentioned or referred, in that letter, to any pending legislation. Anyone who can see pressure tactics or lobbying in the Secretary's statement is seeing ghosts. But, of course, this is a good year for ghosts.

Enemies of the Department of Agriculture, which has ever been dear to the heart of the farmer, in whose behalf it was created, assert that the Farm Credit Administration is political when it is under the Department and free from politics when it is independent. In either case it is subject to an appointing power. If there are to be independent commissioners, they will be appointed by the President. If it remains where it is now placed, its head is appointed by the President. I consider it pertinent to point out in this connection that under the independent agency it became necessary for the Federal Government to acquire a stake of millions of dollars in this so-called independent agency. Members who now sit in this Congress were called upon to vote $125,000,000 to buy stock in order to maintain an appearance of solvency. The independent agency did not make a brilliant record, and it was responsible for the mistakes which have made the experiment so costly. It has thrown into the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture a miserably involved Government agency. The whole story has not yet been told. What will be revealed in the future we can only surmise, guided by some of the facts which have rightly been brought to our attention recently in the Secretary's letter.

The Farm Credit Administration is truly in no sense independent of the United States Government. It is, indeed, very dependent, having been furnished $684,000,000 of Government capital for its four agencies, only one of which—the Federal land bank—has any substantial private investment. Where would they be if Government capital were withdrawn? Let that consideration be the test; and we must conclude that the agency is best placed and safest in the strong Government department concerned with the agricultural life of our country. That Department can be trusted to improve the farm-mortgage situation.

THE COMPANY THEY KEEP

As I think of the arguments which have been made against pending farm-credit legislation in hearings and letters, I realize that they chiefly consist of constant reiteration of the same arguments, in the same phrases, undoubtedly from the same agencies. The saviors of the farmer, who are determined at any cost to help him by keeping his interest rates high and taking their pound of flesh in the form of a 5-percent bonus payment, seek to divert attention from the real issue by talking about higher prices for farm commodities. Surely, give us higher prices and lower interest. Can it be that these friends of the farmer, who are so anxious to protect the Farm Credit Administration, are like the character described by the English poet, whose lines kept running through my mind during the hearings?

> He was a man
> Who stole the livery of the Court of Heaven
> To serve the Devil in; in virtue's guise,
> Devoured the widow's house and orphan's bread;
> In holy phrase, transacted villainies
> That common sinners durst not meddle with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I would like again to draw the attention of the membership to the Federal blitzkrieg against the State of California. I noticed yesterday that Assistant Attorney General Thurman Arnold has gone after the moving-picture business, this time trying to divorce the producers from owning theaters, likening the methods of control in the film industry to those of Adolf Hitler in Germany, saying that it is un-American. I know of nothing more un-American than to destroy business like the attempt being made today out in California.

I say to Mr. Arnold that the film industry has built motion pictures up from nothing and made the industry what it is today, bought their theaters and paid for them. He now wants to set himself up as a bureaucrat, go into the State and tell them how to run their own business even to the extent of destroying it. [Applause.]

[From the Washington Post of April 23, 1940]

FILM INDUSTRY "UN-AMERICAN," ARNOLD SAYS

Assistant Attorney General Thurman Arnold, the Government's chief "trust buster," yesterday charged that the motion-picture industry is a "type of dictatorship which is distinctly un-American."

Arnold opened hearings before a Senate judiciary subcommittee on the Neely bill with a bombshell indictment of the film industry, going so far as to liken its control methods to those of Adolf Hitler.

The Neely measure would compel divorcing of theater holdings from film-producing and distributing companies. Such proposals have been strenuously fought by major movie producers.

COMPARED TO HITLER

Arnold, the first witness, declared the picture-making industry is controlled by a "cartel similar to the vertical cartel set up by Hitler in Germany," and added that the Government's antitrust case against major producers is moving "with incredible slowness."

He condemned the industry as wasteful and extravagant, and declared it has become clear that Congress and the courts "must share responsibility for determining what combinations are desirable for orderly marketing" in the film world.

The hearing was recessed until May 16 on the vigorous request of C. C. Pettijohn, counsel for the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, who claimed the industry had not been given sufficient time to prepare its case against passage of the bill.

NEELY IN CLASH

Earlier, Pettijohn and Senator NEELY, the measure's author, clashed when the attorney claimed the bill was introduced only 15 days ago and that only 24 hours' notice was given of opening of hearings. NEELY retorted, "We don't wait until people grow old and totter before taking action in the Senate."

PROMOTION OF PROMOTION-LIST OFFICERS OF THE ARMY

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 466.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of H. R. 9243, a bill to provide for the promotion of promotion-list officers of the Army after specified years of service in grade, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Military Affairs, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Colorado is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], and at this time I yield myself 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Colorado is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, this resolution, House Resolution 466, is a rule providing for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9243) to provide for the promotion of promotion-list officers of the Army after specified years of service in grade. It is an open rule and provides for 2 hours of general debate on the bill H. R. 9243, after which the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. Speaker, up to now I have received no applications for time on the rule. But I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 15 minutes, and I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed out of order for half of that time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, there is no objection that I know of to either the rule or the bill. The bill seems to be a necessity in order to take care of a situation that arose as a result of the World War, when some 4,000 or 5,000 officers enlisted in those 2 years and continued in the Regular Army. This has created a hump in the rank of colonel and lieutenant colonel at the present time.

The purpose of the bill is to retire colonels and lieutenant colonels at the age of 60 rather than at the age of 64 for what is supposed to be—and I agree—the best interests and the efficiency of the Army. In most of the other armies of the world colonels are generally retired at a much younger age, at 54 or at 55. Any veteran who served overseas knows that a colonel in a combat regiment during the World War was around 45 years of age. It is self-evident that beyond 60 years of age an officer has not the physical energy to properly lead a combat regiment. Without, therefore, going into the details of the bill, I hope the proposal will be adopted for the good of the service. Why it was not submitted before I do not know, for it should have been years ago regardless of the hump that now exists, because 60 years of age for a colonel is about 10 or 15 years too old for a combat officer, and particularly in modern warfare, which has become even more a matter of physical endurance.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The gentleman has explained the purpose of the bill. I therefore want to ask him a question on an important matter, as long as he has mentioned warfare. Some distinguished rear admiral or general stated that we would eventually have to go to war with Japan. Now, what has been troubling me for some time is this: We notice in the papers through statements made by high-ranking naval officials that Japan is building a tremendous navy. It occurs to me that the United States, through the sanction of our Government, is providing Japan with the raw materials with which to build this tremendous navy that we must fight sometime in the future if these generals are right. Now, what can be done to stop the shipment of these war materials which we are now sending over to Japan and prevent them from building up a big fleet which we will eventually have to fight?

Mr. FISH. I am very glad to answer the question of the gentleman from Minnesota, but I want to point out right now, because we are discussing an Army promotion bill and not a Navy promotion bill, that as far back as I can remember there has never been a general or an Army officer who tried to proclaim new foreign policies for the United States. The gentleman from Minnesota referred to a general. I never heard of a general or any Army officer making similar statements to those made yesterday by Admiral Taussig or by a number of other admirals, notably Admirals Woodward, Yarnell, and Sterling, all of whom have made, and are still issuing, provocative statements. In all fairness to the Army, I want to rise to their defense, as no Army officer has taken upon himself to promote war hysteria or to join in the propaganda of the interventionists that war is inevitable.

The gentleman asked what Congress can do to prohibit the sending of munitions of war—arms and ammunition—and particularly the supplies from America that will build up a great navy in Japan. In all fairness to the administration, and the gentleman knows I am not exactly the strongest administration supporter in the Congress, it has already taken certain proper and sound steps in that direction through the creation of what it calls a moral embargo prohibiting the sale of airplanes, airplane parts, instruments, and machinery that go to make up airplane gasoline processes, and I believe the sale of airplane gasoline. I have had a bill pending in the Foreign Affairs Committee for 2 years which calls for the prohibition of the sale of scrap iron to Japan, but up to the present time no action has been taken.

Personally, I am in favor of the Congress prohibiting the sale of all arms, ammunition, and munitions of war, including the sale of scrap iron, to Japan, because it is self-evident they are being used in the Chinese war; and, as the gentleman from Minnesota stated, many of these materials are now going into the Japanese Navy to make a greater and bigger navy; but so far, outside of the moral embargo, nothing has been done to stop the flow of war supplies to Japan.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. As I understand it, prior to the passage of the last Neutrality Act last year, all shipments of war materials and supplies to any country had to be sent out under an authorized permit from the State Department; is that correct?

Mr. FISH. Does the gentleman mean to belligerent countries?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The administration did not recognize there was any belligerency on the part of Japan in China, nevertheless they were belligerent countries; and, as I understand it, any war materials that went out had to go out under a permit from the Secretary of State.

Mr. FISH. Yes; I believe that is correct.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Is that still the practice?

Mr. FISH. I believe it is necessary to have a license to sell arms and ammunition to all nations.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Then the State Department could stop the issuance of licenses for the sale of war materials to Japan, and if we did that it would not take long before the war in China would be stopped?

Mr. FISH. That I cannot answer, because I believe Japan could get most of these supplies elsewhere.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. What does the gentleman understand by a "moral embargo"?

Mr. FISH. It is simply that the State Department says to our exporters, "We do not want you to export airplanes or airplane parts or machinery that goes into factories that make gasoline, to Japan."

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Still they are issuing licenses to do that. It is only a sort of a prayer and a suggestion that they do not do so.

Mr. FISH. Yes. They simply ask the American manufacturers, and the American manufacturers have to agree. They have agreed in the last 6 months not to sell any airplanes, and none are being shipped.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. That does not stop the shipment of copper, scrap iron, and all the other things?

Mr. FISH. No. The difficulty is that cotton also is considered war supplies, and no one on the Democratic side wants to prevent the shipment of cotton to Japan, which is one of our greatest cotton buyers.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. They are getting most of their cotton from Brazil, Mexico, and other countries.

Mr. FISH. They are getting a large part from us. I do not disagree with the gentleman. I think we could do more. We have not recognized a state of war to exist in China; therefore we have not put into effect the Neutrality Act. I am in accord with what the State Department has done in regard to placing a moral embargo. I would like to see the Congress do a little more, particularly about passing my scrap-iron bill.

Mr. Speaker, in view of what the gentleman has just said, I want to make some reference to the remarks made yesterday by Admiral Taussig—perhaps the most provocative, inflammatory, and dangerous remarks that have been made by any Navy officer in our time and generation. He took the trouble to tell the Congress and the American people that war with Japan is inevitable—just adding fuel and flames to the war hysteria that now exists and increasing the dread and fear of war that now prevails in America. He practically sets up a hobgoblin and says that it will get us if we do not watch out unless we increase the size of our Navy, which is the greatest navy in the world today. He virtually states that unless we have a bigger, better, and greater navy that we have at the present time, Japan will take over Asia and will then come over here and wipe out the United States. He tells us that we must fortify the Philippines and Guam and become allied with the British and French in order to protect Singapore and Indochina and other foreign possessions. I do not believe Admiral Taussig speaks for the Navy or for any considerable number of admirals. He only claimed to speak for himself.

The Secretary of State very properly rebuked Admiral Taussig, but, unfortunately, he is not the first admiral who has talked out of turn. Only yesterday Admiral Sterling had an article in the newspapers practically saying the same thing. The question that arises in my mind is, Is this Navy of ours for peace or is it to drag us into war? Is it primarily to defend our interests here on the American Continent or is it aimed for aggression—to take us over into the Far East to fight someone else's war? These jingoistic admirals remind me of a group of little children striking matches over a powder magazine. They do not seem to care at all whether they involve us in a war. Very obviously these warmongers, chauvinists, and fire-eaters have a Japanese complex. They seem to think that the only duty of our Navy is to get into war with Japan and to defeat the Japanese Navy.

We have a situation in America today where the dogs of war are barking and yelping and pulling at their leashes, ready to go, and along come these admirals saying war is inevitable, why not now? This is exactly the same argument I heard in Europe last summer—that war is inevitable, why not now? We are armed and ready; therefore, why not have a war?

Every time we have a Navy bill before us we have this type of propaganda, this inspired propaganda from some of the admirals of our Navy, and all these attacks upon Japan. We are now told that Japan is building 65,000-ton battleships; that the Japanese Navy is larger than our Navy; that we are defenseless; and that we are almost in the same category as China or Abyssinia or Poland. However, just as soon as the Navy appropriations have gone through, all the war talk over Japan subsides for another year.

The gentleman from Minnesota asks what can be done about it. I do not know what can be done about it. All we seem to do is rebuke one admiral, and a week later another admiral says the same thing. The question is whether the Congress should not do something and have a thorough investigation of this war propaganda from our Navy officers. They do not permit it in the Army. No one has ever heard an Army officer make a statement of that kind, yet it is repeatedly done in the Navy. I would like to know whether the Navy is to maintain peace or to drag us into war.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I understand that the President of the United States is Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy. Do you not suppose he could take a hand in closing the mouths of his admirals and rear admirals, or does he want these statements to come out?

Mr. FISH. I believe any other President in the past would have done it within 24 hours, but might it not be that these admirals are repeating in other words precisely what the President of the United States has said, particularly in his Chicago speech of 2 years ago, that it is the duty of America to quarantine these foreign nations? That is practically what Admiral Taussig said. In other words, he says that it is our duty to quarantine all of the Far East and Japan and become allied with England to protect Singapore, and that we must fortify Guam and the Philippines, which Congress refused by a substantial vote to arm.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

The Congress, by an overwhelming vote, has voted independence for the Philippines, and I voted for it. One of the main reasons I voted to free the Philippines and give independence to them is simply that I believe the Philippines are the Achilles' heel of the United States. I would never vote, and no one else in the Congress would ever vote, to give up the Philippines in time of war or under threat. Way back in 1907 President Roosevelt wrote a letter to Secretary of War Taft and said:

> We must give up the Philippines because the Philippines are the Achilles' heel of the United States, and we must do it in peacetime.

Now along comes an admiral and says we must spend more millions of dollars to fortify the Philippines and to fortify Guam.

Are we, the Congress of the United States, going along with any such change of our foreign policies? Do we propose to extend the Monroe Doctrine 10,000 miles into the Far East, and back it up with our Navy? If this is true, then we had better appropriate two, three, or four billions more for our Navy.

There seems to be a great misunderstanding about the size of our Navy, even among our friends of the D. A. R. They laughed some speaker down the other day—I believe it was Senator WALSH—who said that we have the largest Navy. They ridiculed him. What are the facts? The facts are that we have the largest Navy in the history of America today. For the first time in our history our Navy is greater than the British Navy, and every day it is getting relatively greater and greater because every day some English battleship, cruiser, submarine, torpedo boat, or destroyer is sunk, and every day some German warship is also sunk.

At the outset of this war our Navy was three and one-half times the size of the German Navy. Today our Navy is probably five or six times as large as the German Navy. Our Navy is probably 30 or 40 percent larger than the Japanese Navy, and we have already appropriated practically a billion dollars additional to complete even a greater Navy. Yet the D. A. R., a highly intelligent American organization, and highly patriotic, ridiculed a statement made by a man who knows as much about it as anybody in America—Senator WALSH, head of the Naval Affairs Committee of the Senate—that we have the greatest Navy in the world. Because of this kind of propaganda emanating from the admirals and others, the American people back home and even the D. A. R. think that we are defenseless and that we can be attacked by Germany or Italy or Japan. They do not tell the D. A. R. that under cross-examination every admiral says that any navy to attack us must be three times the size of the American Navy, even to dare to attack us; yet our Navy is larger than the British Navy, and gradually, every day, it is getting proportionately stronger, and it is much larger than the Japanese Navy and five times larger than the German Navy.

What are the American people to think when an American admiral urges fortifying the Philippines and Guam and having a bigger Navy and stating that we will have to go to war with Japan in order to extend the Monroe Doctrine 10,000 miles into the Far East?

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. MASSINGALE. The gentleman made a significant statement to me a while ago to the effect that our Navy is 30 to 40 times as large as the Japanese Navy.

Mr. FISH. Thirty or forty percent larger.

Mr. MASSINGALE. The gentleman said 30 or 40 times larger, and I was going to ask the gentleman——

Mr. FISH. I meant to say 30 or 40 percent larger, and I am glad to be corrected.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 more minute.

Mr. Speaker, I trust there will be no more of these provocative and inflammatory speeches by the admirals of our Navy. If there are, then the American people will be looking under the bed every night to see if there is not some Jap there ready to pounce out upon poor, little, defenseless America and gobble up both North America and South America with one bite.

We in Congress know that we have the greatest Navy, and we propose to continue to have the greatest possible Navy to defend the United States of America, but none of us is looking for any naval program of expansion that will take us over to foreign lands for wars of aggression or to extend the Monroe Doctrine 10,000 miles to the Far East or to get us into any foreign wars. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from New York if he has any further applications for time.

Mr. FISH. No; we have completed our argument for the day.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS].

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the distinguished gentleman from New York who has just spoken has made a very serious mistake. We are not today debating a Navy bill but the Army promotion bill. Taking as his text and springboard the fact that there was no Republican opposition to the pending bill, he proceeds to give us a political lecture [laughter], and it seems to me there should be just a word or two spoken in reply.

I resent very vehemently his criticism of the President of the United States and of Admiral Taussig and of the other Admirals of our Navy whom he characterizes as a bunch of small boys striking matches over a powder keg. I respectfully submit that if there be any justification for the criticism and censure which has been meted out to Admiral Taussig it should be heaped upon the heads of the committee who permitted the release of Admiral Taussig's testimony for publication. There can be no escape from the point that any witness summoned to appear before a committee of Congress who tells the truth as he sees it, and testifies under oath to his honest convictions, is not and should not be subject to censure. [Applause.]

Admiral Taussig did not give his testimony to the press—he gave it to a congressional committee.

Then I think that the criticism that the President of the United States did not within 24 hours issue a reprimand comes with very poor grace from the distinguished gentleman from New York, who knows that Republican Presidents throughout history have been as deaf and dumb as oysters in situations demanding condemnation—which this one did not.

The present Commander in Chief of our Army and Navy has repeatedly spoken out in advocacy of discreet silence in aid of neutrality. Every officer has complied with his injunction. But when summoned to speak before one of our committees, a witness has no choice but to speak. The President, therefore, is perfectly right not to censure Admiral Taussig and shows commendable restraint in not criticizing the committee permitting publication of his testimony.

The Admirals of our Navy are men whose patriotism flames not only in word but in deed. When called upon to speak, they speak; and they usually know whereof they speak. No other group speaks with as much authority when they talk on the subject of national defense, unless it be those officers of similar grade in the Army.

With that preliminary statement, then, let us look at this bill. I want to congratulate the great Military Affairs Committee of this House upon the production of this bill, and I also want to congratulate the War Department for agreeing to it. Last year, that age-in-grade bill, which the War Department desired and for which the Military Affairs Committee of this House acted as a derailing switch, was not for the best interest of the Army or the Government or the people generally; but here we have a modification of that plan, which will take out the World War hump in our Army officer personnel, will give us, not an age-in-grade bill, but a vitalizing act that will stimulate and surcharge the batteries of our Army officers, will give new hope to those boys who are coming out of our splendid schools and through the ranks, will give hope and courage to them of attaining their life's ambition, and not only hope but assurance of an honored career in Uncle Sam's fighting forces. It is therefore with great pleasure that I congratulate not only this great Military Affairs Committee of ours, but also the War Department, for solidly backing this meritorious piece of legislation which, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] so creditably said, has the support of the Republican and the Democratic sides of the committee and of this House. So it is with these deserved felicitations that we today face the task, the pleasant task, of improving our Military Establishment by passing the most constructive promotion bill which has been presented to this or any other Congress since the World War. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I have no more applications for time, and I understand the gentleman from New York has none. The bill will be fully explained by the Military Affairs Committee. I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

KRIKOR HAROUTUNIAN (H. DOC. NO. 704)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read:

To the House of Representatives:

I am returning herewith, without my approval, H. R. 2487, an enrolled bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Krikor Haroutunian."

The purpose of the bill is to reimburse the person named for an alleged claim against the Government arising out of the forfeiture of a $1,000 immigration bond which he executed in 1925 in behalf of two aliens named Varter Zakarian and Vehanush Bagdasarian.

The bond was exacted by the immigration officials as a condition precedent to the admission of the aliens into the United States for a period of 6 months. The major obligation of the instrument was that the aliens would leave the country on or before the date they were required to do so, and guaranteed that that would be done without causing any expense to the Government. Through liberal extensions of time granted them by the immigration authorities the stay of the aliens was extended until January 1, 1928. When they failed to depart on or before that date, the bond was declared breached and its $1,000 collateral security turned into the Treasury on or about May 21, 1928.

One of the aliens persisted in remaining in the country until around January 25, 1929, when she went to Canada and, after obtaining the required immigration visa, was lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence on the same day. The other never departed from the country. She acquired in 1934, through the process of registration under a special statute in force and effect for 1 year, the status of a lawful resident.

The bond in question was posted to guarantee the departure of the aliens without expense to the United States. They were allowed generous extensions of time so as to enable them to arrange their affairs and voluntarily leave the country without causing any expense to the Government. When, without any reasonable excuse, they failed to do so, the bond was properly forfeited, not only as a punitive measure, but as compensation for the expense the aliens had caused the Government.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 22, 1940.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the journal.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill and the message be referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered printed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

ALLEGHENY FORGING CO. (H. DOC. NO 705)

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States which was read:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, H. R. 3674, Seventy-sixth Congress, third session, entitled "An act for the relief of the Allegheny Forging Co."

This enactment would authorize and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the company out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, "the sum of $1,700 in full settlement of all claims against the United States for payments due it on account of forgings for kitchen trailers manufactured for the use of the United States Army, as a subcontractor of the Ohio Trailer Co., under contract with the Government dated October 3, 1918." The liability of the United States, if any, for the cancelation of the contract in question was to the Ohio Trailer Co. (or its successor, Ohio Motor Vehicle Co.), and not to its subcontractor, the Allegheny Forging Co. At a time when there was pending a suit against the Ohio Trailer Co. by the subcontractor for the purpose of determining the former's liability for the transaction here involved, the Allegheny Forging Co. in consideration of certain payments made to it from allowances by the United States released the contractor of all liability under the contract. Such release appears to be entirely valid, made with full knowledge of the facts, and serves effectively to extinguish any claim against the contractor and consequently against the United States. The granting of additional relief to a claimant who, after accepting an amount in full satisfaction of an obligation, attempts to retain the benefits obtained by the agreement but to ignore its own commitments thereunder, would, in my judgment, be entirely unjustified and would establish a dangerous precedent.

Furthermore, there is no clear authority under existing law, statutory or general, for the allowance of claims of other claimants under such circumstances, and after consideration of the record in this case I am not convinced that there are here present such elements of equitable merit as would justify the according of preferential treatment to this claimant.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 22, 1940.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill and message be referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered printed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

PRIEST LUMBER CO., INC. (H. DOC. NO. 706)

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, H. R. 5295, Seventy-sixth Congress, third session, entitled "An act for the relief of the Priest Lumber Co., Inc."

This enactment would authorize and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the Priest Lumber Co., Inc., the sum of $749.96, in full settlement of all claims against the United States for the remission of liquidated damages assessed against the said company because of delay in the delivery of lumber to the United States under War Department purchase order No. 537–A, dated April 7, 1934.

It appears the purchase order was issued under a contract which provided for the assessment of liquidated damages in the event of delays in delivery; that there were delays in delivery of the lumber; and that the amount here involved was properly and legally deducted from the amount otherwise due the claimant in accordance with the provisions of the contract.

It is not unusual for Government contracts to contain provisions with respect to liquidated damages similar to the one contained in the contract executed by the Priest Lumber Co., Inc., and the courts have held that such provisions are to be enforced in accordance with their terms. The contract here involved was freely entered into by the claimant and the liquidated damages were withheld in accordance with the agreement of the parties. The claimant apparently could have protected itself against the assessment of liquidated damages by obtaining the lumber from a source other than that originally contemplated and making delivery within the agreed period. There is no authority under existing law for the allowance of claims of other contractors under similar circumstances and the allowance of this claim would, in my judgment, be entirely unjustified as according preferential treatment to this claimant and as establishing an undesirable precedent.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 22, 1940.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill and the message be referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

K. E. PARKER CO. (H. DOC. NO. 707)

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, H. R. 2055, Seventy-Sixth Congress, third session, entitled "An act for the relief of the K. E. Parker Co."

This enactment authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the K. E. Parker Co., of San Francisco, Calif., the sum of $1,878.98 in full settlement of all claims against the United States for repairing damage to roofing on a machine and electric shop building, Puget Sound Navy Yard, Bremerton, Wash., caused by the severe storm of October 21, 1934, which building was being constructed by the K. E. Parker Co. under contract NOy–1942, dated October 21, 1933.

It appears without question that the United States is under no legal obligation to reimburse the claimant for the expenses incurred in repairing the damage, and while the enactment contemplates the granting of relief on "equitable grounds alone" the claim does not, in my judgment, contain such elements of equity as to justify reimbursement to the claimant at the expense of the United States. The Government was in no way responsible for the damage and it obtained no benefit from the repairs it was not entitled to receive under the contract for construction of the building. In undertaking construction of the building the claimant assumed the risk of storm damage and could have guarded against such risk by obtaining adequate insurance. The fact that it did not obtain such insurance and that it encountered an unexpected difficulty, resulting in additional expense, in the performance of the contract, did not lessen its responsibility or operate to shift that responsibility to the United States. It is not the practice or purpose of the Government, in connection with its contracts, to indemnify contractors against loss from risks they assume, and the circumstances of the present claim are not such as would justify the according of preferential treatment to this claimant. There is no authority under existing law for the allowance of claims of other contractors who have suffered similar losses in the performance of their contracts with the Government and allowance of this claim would, in my judgment, be entirely unjustified and establish an undesirable precedent.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 22, 1940.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill and the message be referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered printed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ARMY PROMOTION

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9243) to provide for the promotion of promotion-list officers of the Army after specified years of service in grade, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 9243.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 9243, with Mr. PACE in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes. I shall make a very brief statement of the purposes of this bill. It is the result of long and continuing study in the War Department and by your Committee on Military Affairs, with many hearings and much consideration, in an effort to find a solution to the problem of promotion stagnation in the Regular Army. The stagnation of the Army is the result of the large number of World War officers that volunteered and were inducted into the Army shortly after the war closed and during the period of the war. We have endeavored in the consideration of this measure to bring to you a bill that would meet just as little opposition as possible. Last year, as you all know, we reported a bill on this subject that carried with it an expression of minority views by several members of the Committee on Military Affairs. That bill remained on the calendar until just a few days ago, and in an effort to reconcile the differences between those who reported the bill and those who were opposed to it I, as chairman of the committee, appointed a special committee of three members from the number who were opposed to that measure to collaborate with and discuss the matter with the War Department.

After that committee was appointed there were a large number of discussions and conferences between the special committee and officials of the War Department, and as a result of all of those discussions we were enabled to draft and report this bill in the nature of a compromise. I am happy to say to you today that the entire membership of the House Military Affairs Committee, both the majority and the minority, are supporting this measure.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. Not just now.

The bill is a measure that will do equal justice to every member of the Army promotion list and render great public service in bringing about efficiency in the Army.

I would like to quote very briefly from the testimony of the Secretary of War before our committee in the hearings recently had on this measure. He stated:

> It discriminates against no group and it vitalizes the two most important grades in the Army, those of colonel and of captain.

Then, in speaking of the importance of the legislation, he said this:

> If some such legislation is not enacted we will have a situation in a few years where officers in obscure positions must be very suddenly advanced to high rank and command and control over matters of great importance without the proper training in the grades that they are skipping over rapidly, and this is the most critical phase, I think, of the whole problem that is before us.

In other words, what he meant to convey was that under existing law we would promote captains, probably, to the grade of major or lieutenant colonel without proper preparation.

In the consideration of the matter there was no opposition to the measure whatsoever. It met the approval of all of the officers of the Army. It has been O. K.'d by the Bureau of the Budget and the President of the United States.

In view of the fact that members of the committee will debate the measure, some gentlemen who have had wide experience in military affairs, who have had actual experience in the Army and in actual active service, I am not going to take any more of the time of the Committee to make any further detailed explanation of the matter.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Earlier in your remarks you made the statement that these officers were inducted into service.

Mr. MAY. If I used the word "inducted," I did not mean it. They volunteered to become officers in the Regular Army at the close of the World War, even though they had had the terrible experience of the battlefield in France.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. That is correct. I did not want the apparent mistake to remain in the RECORD.

Mr. MAY. Neither did I. I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania for his correction of my remarks.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to extend my remarks by including a memorandum which I will hand to the reporter, and I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, H. R. 9243 is the result of long continuing study in the War Department and by your Committee on Military Affairs, to find a solution to the problem of promotion stagnation in the Regular Army. This stagnation is the result of the great increase in the strength of the Regular Army immediately following the World War. The large increase in the required number of officers was secured by commissioning a large number of World War officers whose service originated in the period of 2 years from November 1916 to November 1918. At the present time 4,200 of these officers, more than a third of all the officers on the promotion list, still remain on the active list. They are known as the World War "hump." They average 46 years of age and have approximately equal service. They occupy the lower 400 files of the grade of lieutenant colonel, the entire grade of major, and the top 900 files of the grade of captain. The fact that they are of the same average age and length of service gives them a rate of removal from the active list by death, retirement for physical disability, and other retirements, which is so low that it results in stagnation in promotion of the lower part of their own group and of the officers who follow them on the promotion list.

The problem is immediate. Officers in the grade of major have from 22 to 23 years' commissioned service. Officers in the grade of captain have from 10 to 22 years' commissioned service. The senior officer in the grade of major and the junior officer in that grade are separated by over 2,900 files on the promotion list and have approximately the same length of service, yet the promotion rate is such that the senior major will be a lieutenant colonel in a month or so, and the junior major must wait 10 years. The top 900 captains, all World War officers, are faced with similar prospects. This condition is demoralizing to the World War "hump" officers and to those who follow them on the promotion list, and is critical for the future. An officer entering the grade of captain today faces years of monotonous service in that grade so detrimental to his interest, initiative, and efficiency that it cannot fail to be reflected in the effectiveness of the Military Establishment.

Aside from the demoralizing effect of the lack of a career on the part of the officers affected, the matter is far more serious from the standpoint of the national defense. If the Army is to have an efficient officer corps, a promotion system must be devised which will provide opportunities to exercise command, executive, and staff functions appropriate to every grade at an age when the officer is in full possession of the mental and physical capacity required for such command duties. An officer should reach each grade at a proper age and have a reasonable length of service in each grade. The large majority of officers should have opportunity for selection as general officer, yet the system devised should avoid any undue hardship to any individual.

The solution of the promotion problem presented in H. R. 9243 is that of promotion after specified years of commissioned service. It is an extension of the provisions of the act of July 31, 1935, which provided for promotion from second lieutenant to first lieutenant after 3 years' service, for promotion from first lieutenant to captain after completing 10 years' commissioned service—7 years in the grade of first lieutenant. The extension provides a similar method of promotion to the grade of major, to the grade of lieutenant colonel, and to the grade of colonel. Specifically the bill provides for—

Promotion to first lieutenant after 3 years of service, same as present law; to captain after 10 years of service, same as present law; to major after 17 years of service; to lieutenant colonel after 23 years of service; but an officer must serve 6 years as a major before being promoted to lieutenant colonel; to colonel after 28 years of service, but an officer must serve 5 years as a lieutenant colonel before being promoted to colonel, and the number of colonels is limited to 705, the present number, since appropriate peacetime assignments cannot be found for a greater number of colonels. For example, at the present time there are only 157 actual regimental commands for colonels in the peacetime Army. The remaining five-hundred-odd must be placed on other duty away from Regular Army troops, and it can be realized that there is a limit to the number of appropriate positions for a full colonel in the latter category.

Lieutenant colonels with over 28 years' service are made eligible for selection as brigadier general of the line or as chief of branch. This insures that approximately 3,900 of the 4,200 officers in the World War "hump" who are now less than 54 years of age will become eligible for selection as a general officer if they do not elect retirement prior to attaining 28 years' service. The present law limits such selections to officers in the grade of colonel.

In addition to the present laws governing retirement, the bill provides, beginning June 30, 1942, for mandatory retirement of brigadier generals at age 62 and other officers at age 60, with the exception that the Secretary of War may exempt not to exceed 5 percent of the colonels from retirement at age 60 and carry them on the active list to age 62. This permits the retention of outstanding colonels on active duty until age 62—the age for retirement of brigadier generals. The 2-year delay in applying this provision is to permit due notice to the officers concerned. The present mandatory retirement age is 64 years. H. R. 9243 leaves that age for major generals, but lowers it to 62 for brigadier generals and to 60 for other officers. The requirements of modern war demand too great physical requirements to warrant the retention on the active list of regimental commanders and staff officers over 60 years of age. The requirements for selecting and training general officers makes it undesirable and impracticable to select a brigadier general aged 62 for appointment as a major general, since he then has only 2 years to serve before reaching the statutory retirement age of 64 years. A colonel 60 years of age has already been passed over several times for selection as a brigadier general, since a brigadier general must be appointed at an age less than 58 if he is to have opportunity to exercise command for a period adequate to qualify him for the higher general officer grades.

The bill also provides that any officer with World War service may retire at any time with three-fourths pay. If he has 23 years of service and has not reached the grade of lieutenant colonel because of the requirement of 6 years' service in the grade of major, he can retire with the grade of lieutenant colonel. If he has 28 years of service and has not reached the grade of colonel, he can retire with the grade and pay of a colonel.

One effect of this measure will be to increase the number of field officers immediately by 1,350, largely in the grade of major, due to the promotion of those officers with from 17 to 22 years' service who are now stagnated in the grade of captain. However, the number of field officers will become less each year thereafter, and after 8 years will fall below the present authorized 40 percent of the authorized number of promotion-list officers. By 1953 the number will be approximately 34 percent, which, with the recently increased strength of the Regular Army, is considered a more appropriate percentage. At 28 years' service officers will be in the grades of lieutenant colonel and colonel, due to the limitation of 705 colonels. Because of this limitation, and while the hump is in the grade of lieutenant colonel, officers will not reach the grade of colonel immediately upon completing 28 years' service. When the "hump" is entirely separated from the active list that ideal can be attained. Retirement in the grade of colonel and the opportunity for selection as a general officer afforded by this bill to lieutenant colonels with over 28 years' service nullifies to some extent the effect of limiting the number of colonels.

The bill provides for promotion after specified years of continuous commissioned service in the Regular Army. However, in order to recognize the fact that in the World War hump there are a large number of officers whose commissioned service in the Regular Army dates only from July 1, 1920, but who had commissioned service in the National Guard or National Army during the war, a provision is made in the bill that any officer shall be credited for promotion and retirement purposes with at least the same length of continuous commissioned service in the Regular Army of any officer junior to him in his grade on the promotion list. Some such provision as this is necessary. Officers in the World War hump were originally placed on the promotion list by a method which accounted for all active commissioned service subsequent to April 6, 1917, in the National Army, the National Guard, and the Regular Army. Credit for all World War service was recognized then and is recognized now. During the World War a large number of officers were appointed directly in the Regular Army. These officers are in groups placed in the promotion list in accordance with length of active commissioned service. By crediting officers on the promotion list with the greatest amount of continuous commissioned service in the Regular Army of officers junior to them on the promotion list there is insured that there will be no change in relative order of officers on the promotion list. It also assures that the credit which such officers will receive will be by reason of the commissioned service of an entire group, such as, for example, the June 1917 provisional appointments in the Regular Army. Had another system been adopted, such as crediting all active commissioned service, it would result in one individual carrying forward a large group of officers in some cases to undesirable lengths of constructive service. Under this bill officers of the World War "hump" will have credit for service from 23 years at the top of the hump to over 21 7/12 years near the bottom. It is now 23 years since the United States entered the World War. Officers who were commissioned over a period of a year and a half thereafter prior to November 11, 1918, the date of the armistice, can truly be said to be World War officers. It can also be seen that they receive under this provision of the bill appropriate credit for such service.

The method proposed in the bill therefore is fair to every officer in the World War group, and it applies directly to all the officers who came into the Army after the World War group.

H. R. 9243 also provides that an officer shall serve 6 years in the grade of major and 5 years in the grade of lieutenant colonel. Since the bill provides for promotion to major at 17 years' service, to lieutenant colonel at 23 years' service, and to colonel at 28 years' service, it would appear that the stipulation of 6 years' service in the grade of major and 5 in the grade of lieutenant colonel is unnecessary since the difference between 23 and 17 years' service is 6 years and between 28 and 23 years' service is 5 years. The stipulation is made necessary by the World War "hump" officers who are stagnated in promotion. The entire purpose of the proposed legislation is to provide that officers shall be promoted after appropriate years of service in each grade, these being 3 years as second lieutenant, 7 years as first lieutenant, 7 years as captain, 6 years as major, and 5 years as lieutenant colonel. The senior captain now has 22 years' service. If this provision for 6 years' service in the grade of major were not in the bill, he would serve only 1 year as a major and upon completing his twenty-third year of service would be immediately promoted to lieutenant colonel, in effect practically jumping the grade of major. Inasmuch as this captain has 22 years' service he has served 5 years longer in the grade of captain than will be necessary for promotion to major under the proposed bill; accordingly there is provision in the bill that an officer shall receive constructive credit for half the period in excess of 17 years' and 23 years' service with which he is credited upon promotion to the grades of major and lieutenant colonel, respectively. In the case of officers now serving in the grades of major and lieutenant colonel it is the intent of this provision that they receive constructive credit on the remaining years of service required in those grades of half the amount of service in excess of 17 years and 23 years, respectively, which they would have had under the provision of this bill at the time they were promoted to major or lieutenant colonel. The entire purpose is to prevent officers jumping the grade of major. As stated, the constructive credits are also applied to officers who are now in the grades of major and lieutenant colonel.

The costs of this measure will be less than the present system. The estimating agencies predict that additional costs will average about $300,000 the first 4 years; thereafter savings will run from $1,400,000 in 1945 to $4,300,000 in 1956—an average of $2,300,000 annually for the 12 years.

The important thing which the enactment of H. R. 9243 will do is to insure that officers will proceed through the various grades at a regular rate which will provide proper age within each grade and proper opportunities for training of the officer in that grade. Such an attainment is vital for the development of leadership. Leadership in the Army must extend down from the general officer through all grades to that of second lieutenant. If in each grade there are officers of appropriate age and appropriate length of service, the continuity of leadership is assured. That continuity is lost if there is stagnation in promotion such that officers of equal service and equal age serve in three of the grades of the Army—the condition which now exists with respect to the World War "hump"; it is also lost if officers remain in one grade too long and then jump intermediate grades.

The test of the value of our Regular officers is not whether or not they are performing satisfactorily routine duties of peace, but is what will we have if war comes? The really valuable element must be younger officers of zeal and ability, whose interest and efficiency has been maintained by reasonable advancements during their service in peace when preparing themselves and the Nation for the use of its armed forces should war come. They become qualified for service in war by virtue of experience gained during service in peace.

To sum up:

H. R. 9243 benefits national defense by—

First. Insuring a proper flow of promotion through all commissioned grades, with proper period of training and development in each grade.

Second. Making possible a continuity of vigorous, active, and trained leaders in each grade from the highest to lowest.

Third. Raising immeasurably the morale of our officer corps by insuring a reasonable career with proper advancement for each competent officer.

It benefits the World War officer by—

First. Affording to a large majority an opportunity for consideration for selection as brigadier general which is not possible under the present system.

Second. Assuring that practically all of them will reach the grade of colonel or retirement as a colonel.

Third. Insuring proper promotion for those near the bottom of the group.

It benefits the post-war officer by—

First. Giving him the opportunity for a real career and a chance to advance through all grades.

It does all this without introducing any hardships or injustices to any individual and without increasing the cost of national defense.

The primary objective of H. R. 9243 is to bring officers into the various grades of the Army at ages and with the experience appropriate to the command with which a grade is associated. The bill provides that officers who fail to reach the grade of general officer shall be retired upon reaching age 60. This retirement at age 60 is the essential vitalizing feature of the bill. It will provide younger, more energetic regimental commanders and at the same time permit savings in the pay of the Army which will amount to some $26,000,000 over the next 15 years.

Retirement at age 64, as at present, would throw the primary objective of the bill entirely out of line insofar as lieutenant colonels and colonels are concerned. The majority of the age 60 retirements will occur in the grade of colonel—without such retirements the World War veterans in the "hump" will stagnate in the grade of lieutenant colonel with the grade of colonel filled to its limit of 705 with increasingly older officers. Furthermore, to increase the number of colonels would be fatal to the efficient administration of the Army—a serious error.

We cannot build an effective leadership throughout the grades if the grade of colonel—the regimental command grade—is choked with older officers. Regardless of long and faithful service, a colonel or lieutenant colonel at 60 is too old to meet the physical requirements of active field leadership of regimental troops, either in peace or war. Our Army is the only army of a great power which has not recognized this fact. Colonels are forced to retire at age 59 in France; at age 58 in Italy; and at age 55 in Great Britain and Japan—these ages apply in peace and war. In our own Navy, captains, commanders, and lieutenant commanders who are twice passed over for promotion, are retired after 30 years', 28 years', and 26 years' service, respectively, at ages averaging 53, 51, and 49 years—much lower than the age 60 in this Army bill.

The Army officer and the civilian are not to be compared on the basis of age. Far greater physical vigor and stamina are required of an Army officer. Even in peacetime a regimental commander should possess the physical energy and drive to supervise the training of his command and to dominate its leadership in the field under all conditions of terrain and weather without regard to hours, or lack of food or sleep. A weary colonel means a disheartened regiment.

May I quote General Marshall, the Chief of Staff, testifying before the House Military Affairs Committee on this point:

> Before the Senate committee yesterday I referred to the fact that I saw 27 different divisions of ours engaged in battle—we employed 29—and there were more reliefs of field officers, those above the grade of captain, due to physical reasons than for any other cause. But by that I do not mean that they were definitely relieved because of a physical limitation, but because their spirit, their tenacity of purpose, their power of leadership over tired men, was broken through physical fatigue. They became pessimistic. They became nervous possibilities in positions of leadership. A man must have a great deal of stamina to stand the racket of campaign. Many of our mistakes were due to physical deficiency, and as I remarked, the majority of the reliefs, I think, were due specifically to physical exhaustion.
> Retirement at 60 years is, in my opinion, the most essential feature of this legislation. If retirement of colonels is deferred to 64, the procedure under this bill will not only involve a material increase in cost, but it will delay the advancement of a number of lieutenant colonels and will definitely operate to the disadvantage of leadership in the officer corps.

Brigadier generals should be selected from officers less than 58 years of age in order to have sufficient useful time in the grade of general. Officers over 60 are, therefore, denied opportunities for promotion. With only 157 regimental peacetime commands to which younger colonels should be assigned, the remaining 550 colonels must be assigned to other duties—Organized Reserves, National Guard, Reserve Officers' Training Corps, and so forth, which also require vigorous leadership. The War Department now experiences difficulty in placing its older colonels.

If the retirement at age 60 provision were eliminated, it would wipe out all the economy which this bill has over the present system. By 1956 the increased annual costs of our present system will be about $5,000,000 over present costs. The passage of this bill as written will increase costs by $300,000 per year for the first 4 years. Thereafter it will decrease costs on an average of $2,300,000 annually over the next 12 years.

Concerning these costs, they are for active and retired pay combined. They are estimates, of course, and I am informed that they are outside costs—that is, the predicted increased costs the first 4 years will probably be less than the figures given and the savings indicated for the next 12 years will probably be greater. The estimating agency of the War Department plays safe when it has to estimate so far in advance. The increased cost the first 4 years is due to two things: First, the immediate promotion during the next few years of officers who are now stagnated will result in some changes in pay periods since there are a very large number of World War officers who count for pay purposes periods of enlisted service, periods of active duty prior to the war, and a percentage of years of service as National Guard officers, which are not counted for promotion purposes. Second, because of the lowering of the retirement age from 64 to 60, a number of second lieutenants will have to be commissioned from 1 to 4 years earlier than had been anticipated. This makes an initial increased cost over the present system which is based on age 64 retirements. These officers will probably be brought in over a period of 2 or 3 years to avoid a slight "hump" in 1942, when the retirement at age 60 becomes effective.

Thereafter the second lieutenants coming in each year to replace officers retired at age 60 will be those who would have been brought in when officers retired or died at ages between 60 and 64, but since they are already included in the estimates of the future costs of the present system they do not add to the costs of the present bill. Therefore, after the reduction of the retirement age to 60 years there will be savings of the difference between active and retired pay of officers retired at age 60 for a period of from 1 to 4 years, since, except for the 60-year-retirement proviso, these officers would have continued on the active list for from 1 to 4 additional years up to age 64. Most of these officers will be retired in the grade of colonel. The maximum pay and allowances of a colonel is $600 per month, his retired pay is $375 per month; the difference is $225 per month. Over a period of 4 years this amounts to $10,800. For 100 officers this would mean a savings of $1,080,000. Retirements under this bill are estimated at from about 100 in 1943 to 325 in 1956. In estimating costs, of course, the savings are spread over 4 years in accordance with the attrition estimates for ages between 60 and 64, and are cumulative to the fourth year.

I believe my colleagues will agree with me that no great injustice is done by retiring an officer at age 60 with retirement pay of $375 per month.

REASONS NECESSITATING A NEW METHOD OF PROMOTION FOR PROMOTION-LIST OFFICERS OF THE ARMY—PRESENT SYSTEM OF PROMOTION

For promotion-list officers (promotion list—all officers except those of Medical Corps, Dental Corps, Veterinary Corps, and Corps of Chaplains): Second lieutenant to first lieutenant after 3 years' service; first lieutenant to captain after 10 years' service; captain to major, major to lieutenant colonel, lieutenant colonel to colonel, as vacancies occur, authorized 6 percent colonels, 9 percent lieutenant colonels, 25 percent majors; colonel to general officer, by selection from colonels, except assistant chiefs of branches may be from officers of 15 or more years' service. Variant: Air Corps officers have temporary promotion to field grades—major, lieutenant colonel, and colonel—and to general officer grades to meet Air Corps expansion needs.

For non-promotion-list officers—Medical Corps, Dental Corps, Veterinary Corps, Corps of Chaplains: First lieutenant to captain after 3 years' service; captain to major after 12 years' service; major to lieutenant colonel after 20 years' service; lieutenant colonel to colonel after 26 years' service; to general officer, by selection.

RESULT OF PRESENT SYSTEM IS STAGNATION IN PROMOTION

Affects officers on promotion list, except Air Corps officers. Latter have temporary promotion.

Example: Senior captain has now 22 years' service, is 1 of 900 World War officers still in grade of captain, has age and experience appropriate to a lieutenant colonel, but it will take him 10 years to go through the grade of major. In fact, officer is about same age and has within 1½ years of the same amount of service as has the junior lieutenant colonel. Prospects are he will be a colonel in 16 years, with 38 years' service, at age 62, too old for grade and for selection general officer. Approximately 1,000 junior majors and the top 2,000 captains face similar career.

WHY IS THERE STAGNATION IN PROMOTION?

Army was greatly increased in 1920, following World War, and some 7,200 World War officers were commissioned in the Regular Army, creating a "hump" of officers of approximately the same average age and length of service. "Hump" now numbers 4,200—over one-third of all promotion-list officers. "Hump" occupies lower 400 files of lieutenant colonel; entire grade of major, 2,900; upper 900 files of captain. Being about same age—average 46—their attrition rate is low and does not provide enough vacancies to create flow of promotion. With expected attrition, it will take "hump" 11 years to pass through grade of colonel, and by 1953 they will average 62 years of age, and all field grades will be filled with seriously overage officers.

WHAT HAS BEEN DONE ABOUT IT IN THE PAST

1926. Congress directed a study—act of July 2, 1926. Study recommended age in grade and service in grade retirements. No legislation enacted.

1929. Bill providing for promotion after years of service died in conference.

1935. Act of July 31, 1935, ended stagnation in lieutenant grades by providing promotion—second lieutenant to first lieutenant after 3 years' service; to captain after 10 years service; increased percentage of field officers from 26½ percent to 40 percent, thereby providing more vacancies.

1936. Act of June 16, 1936, ended stagnation for Air Corps officers by providing temporary promotion to meet requirements.

1939. Age-in-grade retirement measure proposed by War Department. Objected to because it would have retired officers less than 60 years of age.

WHY IS STAGNATION IN PROMOTION SERIOUS FOR THE NATIONAL DEFENSE?

Continuity of leadership is vital to provide an efficient corps of officers. This continuity must extend from the highest-ranking officer down through each grade in the chain of command. Continuity of leadership is secured by having in each grade a body of officers of proper age and experience. It is lost when officers remain too long in one grade or are promoted so rapidly that they jump a grade or pass through grades too rapidly. It is also lost when, as at present, there is a large body of officers of about the same age and experience—the "hump"—occupying three grades, and preventing the orderly promotion of younger officers to the higher grades. The ideal continuity is provided by service of 3 years second lieutenant, as at present; 7 years first lieutenant, as at present; 7 years captain; 6 years major; 5 years lieutenant colonel; enter grade of colonel after 28 years' service at average age 52. To attain this objective is the aim of this bill.

WHAT ARE THE GENERAL PROVISIONS OF THIS BILL?

This bill provides for:

Promotion: For promotion-list officers after years of service—3 years to first lieutenant; 10 years to captain, same as present law; 17 years to major, officer must serve 6 years as major; 23 years to lieutenant colonel, officer must serve 5 years as lieutenant colonel; 28 years to colonel, with a limit of 705 colonels. Promotion to the grade of brigadier general of the line and promotion of chiefs of branch to be made from officers in the grades of colonel and lieutenant colonel who have had 28 years of commissioned service.

Retirement: Same laws as at present plus—mandatory for brigadier generals at age 62; mandatory for all other promotion-list officers at 60, except temporary generals and 5 percent of the colonels at the discretion of the Secretary of War. Above retirement provisions effective June 30, 1942. World War officers may retire at any time with three-fourths pay.

Results: Attains the War Department objective of promotion after appropriate years of service in grade to all grades except colonel. Vitalizes promotion list by 60-year—62-year for brigadier general—retirement age. Increases number of field officers initially, but after the first 8 years the number will drop below the present authorization of 40 percent and eventually will reach about 30 percent of the commissioned strength. Attains partial parity with the Navy and nonpromotion list.

COMPARATIVE COSTS (ESTIMATED)

New bill compared with present system: Average additional costs of $300,000 per year first 4 years, then savings which will average $2,300,000 annually for next 12 years.

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, our principal problem in dealing with the Regular Army promotion system is to determine what is the best-balanced program or plan of advancement in rank and what are the best ages for the various grades in the officer personnel of the Regular Army. The true objective is, of course, to secure for the Nation the maximum of effective and efficient service from the officer personnel, and the best results can undoubtedly be obtained if we have due regard for the welfare of the individual officer. The thorough understanding of the problems of the individual officer and careful consideration of his treatment will inevitably result in the lifting of the officer personnel morale to a higher plane and result also in better service by the officers themselves. On the other hand, the fundamental training of the officer leads him to consider the Nation's welfare first and foremost, and that should be our own position in the study of and consideration of any bills affecting the personnel of the Army.

It might be well to deal briefly with the history of our promotion plans in the Army. Prior to 1890, promotion was by regiment. This system of promotion was found to be entirely unsuited to the best interests of the service. From 1890 to 1920, promotion was by branch. In other words, all officers in the Infantry were promoted by file within their branch of the service. This was found to be inadequate for our needs and the cause of much jockeying and maneuvering for positions of favor by the various branches of the service.

One of the greatest steps forward in service legislation came in 1920, when the officers of all branches except a few of the professional branches were placed on a single promotion list, so that promotions should move along uniformly and smoothly without regard to the regiment or the branch of service in which the individual officer is serving. Without any doubt, this change of system threw a tremendous load upon the General Staff to keep the officer personnel well placed within the various branches, notwithstanding any irregularities in numbers that may fall to their allotment. The disproportion of rank would naturally strike hardest the youngest branch of service, namely, the Air Corps; and the problem of the Air Corps was so great that special legislation was found necessary later on under the act of June 16, 1936, to give temporary increase in rank to the older officers in order to administer that branch properly.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I do not wish to interrupt the way in which the gentleman intends to discuss his subject, but I am wondering if before he concludes he plans to place in the RECORD the cost of the bill and the savings it is estimated will be received through its eventual operation.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. I plan to discuss the cost of the bill later on. The hearings and the committee report contain some analysis of the costs.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I think it would be well to have in the RECORD the figures which appear in the committee report in order that the Committee on Appropriations may have the legislative history of the bill when the item comes before them later on.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. At the very time the transition was being made to the single promotion list, a huge and sudden extension of the Regular Army personnel took place under the provisions of the National Defense Act of 1916 and the National Defense Act of 1920. Starting in the fall of 1916, 6,003 officers were commissioned in the Regular Army under the National Defense Act of 1916, and on July 1, 1920, an additional 5,032 officers were commissioned in the Regular Army under the provisions of the National Defense Act of 1920. This made a total of 11,035 officers commissioned in the Regular Army in that brief space of time. However, attrition was so great during and immediately following the World War, due to death, physical disability, and resignation, and other causes, that the group of officers commissioned from November 1916 to include July 1, 1920, stood on July 1, 1920, at 7,200. This group of officers was the original war "hump." By 1926 it had reduced to 5,800, and today it stands at 4,200. Some idea of its relative size may be gained from the statement that the total number of officers on our Army promotion list as of October 20, 1939, was 11,677. In other words, the war "hump" still forms more than one-half of our total officer personnel on the promotion list. The size of the "hump" is even more of a problem now that these officers are growing older and should be advanced to grades commensurate with their age and experience.

Congress has wrestled with this problem long and hard throughout the period from 1920 down to date. In 1926 Congress directed a study of the problem, and a very interesting document of 268 pages on the subject of promotion and retirement was submitted to Congress in December 1926. No legislation was enacted. In 1929 a bill providing for promotion after years of service died in conference.

In the act of July 31, 1935, promotion by length of service was established in the junior grades of the Army providing for promotion from second lieutenant to first lieutenant after 3 years of service and to captain after 10 years of service. This act also increased the percentage of field officers from 26½ percent to 40 percent, thereby providing more vacancies and thereby resulting in the hump being pushed ahead into the grades of major and captain.

As referred to above, the act of June 16, 1936, provided temporary promotion for Air Corps officers to meet requirements in that branch. In 1939 an age in grade retirement measure was proposed by the War Department. This bill was passed by the Committee on Military Affairs, but never came on the floor of the House for consideration because of strenuous objections to the forced attrition provided in the bill through retirement provided therein of captains at age 50, majors at age 55, lieutenant colonels at age 58, colonels at age 60, and brigadier generals at age 62. That brings us up to date and to the consideration of the present bill.

You can readily see that if nothing is done the war hump will soon completely fill the senior grades of the Army, and that they will stay there until removed or until a promotion system is devised that is flexible enough to absorb them without submerging the officers in the lower part of the "hump" and below the "hump" in grades far below the grades in which these officers should serve. This situation would exist until the war "hump" passed out of the picture because of age, with the inevitable result of a sudden advancement by the submerged officers within a short space of time during the final period of the war "hump's" passing out of the picture.

If nothing is done the officers of average age at the bottom of the "hump" and just under the "hump" will not reach the grade of colonel until the age 62, which, of course, is far too old for effective service and further promotion. By 1953 the average age of our colonels will be 62, and all field grades will be filled with seriously overage officers. That constitutes the problem that is facing us today.

Mr. EDMISTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. EDMISTON. I think the House will be interested in knowing that in comparing this bill with the bill reported last year, a great many World War majors will not be forced to retire from the service as they would have had to do under that bill, about which a great many Members received complaints. This does not take place under the new bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. I thank the gentleman for his suggestion. That is probably the most important difference between this bill and the bill that was considered by the House last year that we had so many echoes of discontent over, because that bill sought to cut them out by surgical operation without reference to merit or ability to serve. This bill does provide promotion commensurate with their service and experience. We will take up the matter of forced attrition after a little more thorough study later on.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. ALEXANDER. As I understand it, this bill will force promotions along. That is, make them more rapid.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Not necessarily more rapid. It may slow them up as well as make them more rapid. It does provide a definite length of service in a grade before being eligible for promotion to the next higher grade. To show how it could slow up promotions, may I say that my class in the World War was promoted to the grade of captain with less than 3 years' service. Under this bill you cannot get to the grade of captain with less than 10 years' service. So it works both ways.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Admiral Taussig, according to today's reports, made a startling statement yesterday. I think he is about as honest a man as I have had occasion to get a report on. He stated that it will be only a short time before we get into the present war. We will not have to worry about this thing if we get into another war situation like we had in 1917 and 1918, will we?

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. This problem will not be solved by war. A war might relieve the problem momentarily through the medium of temporary advancement in grade on the promotion list of the Regular Army, much as we did in 1917 and 1918, but it will not solve the problem. The solution we have proposed here will not interfere in any way whatever with the judicious handling of the officer personnel if war comes.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I notice in this chart on page 4 of the committee report it shows that after 1944 the cost occasioned by this bill will be less. Is that not an assumption based on going along as we are now and not on a condition such as Admiral Taussig pointed out?

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. That table is based entirely on the cost of the promotion list as it exists and assuming that it goes ahead with normal attrition. That certainly would not cover the problem in case of war.

Mr. ALEXANDER. That is what I thought.

Mr. THOMASON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. THOMASON. Is it not a fact that unless you reduce the retirement age and also fix an arbitrary limitation on term of service in grade, to be followed by automatic promotion, there is no chance or hope of ever getting rid of the hump?

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. That is right.

Mr. THOMASON. Is that not the main purpose and objective of this bill, and does it not go to the real merits of the situation; that is, it does work out a practical plan by which we can get rid of this World War hump?

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. That is right.

Mr. THOMASON. That is the only way we can get rid of it or else we will not have efficiency in the Army.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Will the gentleman explain the mechanics with reference to how these World War officers are going to be retained in the service under this new set-up?

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. I will be very glad to do that as I go along. I have that point covered.

Mr. THOMASON. Under this bill there is not the slightest discrimination against them, is there?

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. That is correct. I may say that this bill generally is a protection to the World War group. That is the fight we put up against the bill last year. That bill discriminated against the World War class, and gave them a court martial without hearing for the one offense of being 50 years of age in the grade of captain, and so on up, up to 60 years in the grade of colonel. We objected to that because it would have crucified the World War class. This bill does not crucify the World War class, but, on the contrary, protects them.

Mr. THOMASON. In that connection, may I pay a tribute to the gentleman from Iowa, to which I think he is entitled. I voted in committee for the bill reported last year, because I did not know the details or the machinery involving promotions in the Army; but the gentleman from Iowa, and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN], who took the leadership in that opposition, together with several others on the Military Affairs Committee, filed a very illuminating minority report. It was strong enough that in my judgment that bill never had the slightest chance in the world of becoming law. I know the gentleman's modesty, so I would like to say that he and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] took this bill up with the War Department, and it now has the enthusiastic approval of the War Department, plus the unanimous report of the House Committee on Military Affairs; therefore it must have considerable merit. [Applause.]

Mr. SPARKMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Is it not also true that this protects the World War officers, and it also gives to them a chance to attain grades they never would have had the opportunity to attain under either the old bill or the present system?

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. That is correct.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. THOMASON. Since we seem to have plenty of time and there is no opposition to this bill, and since I know the gentleman can get all the time he wants, I believe it would be pertinent, at this point in the gentleman's remarks, to place these figures in the RECORD in connection with World War officers, in whom all of us have a very deep interest because they have been done an injustice.

I asked the War Department only this morning for the figures of the number of officers in the different grades.

The War Department advised me a few minutes ago that of the approximately 14,000 officers we now have in the Army there are about 67 major generals and brigadier generals, 700 colonels, 3,950 lieutenant colonels and majors, 3,262 captains, and 2,757 lieutenants.

This deplorable situation must be corrected, if General Marshall, our very able Chief of Staff, knows his business, and I am sure everyone who knows him and who has ever heard him testify before any of our committees will admit that he probably has no superior and, if we are to be relieved of this hump, we must do something to give these 4,200 World War officers and in fact all our officers an opportunity for promotion. Army officers are human and they must have the incentive of bettering their condition, if we expect to bring out the best in them.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. That is right.

Mr. THOMASON. In that connection, too, they gave me these statistics from the War Department, which I believe would also fit into the picture at this particular point. These figures I have given relate to officers who are on the promotion list as distinguished from the officers who are in the Medical Corps and chaplains. The lower 400 lieutenant colonels, the entire group of majors, and the top 900 captains were commissioned in the Army between November 1916 and November 1918.

I believe in view of the great interest the gentleman from Iowa has shown in this situation it is important to have these exact figures in the RECORD at this particular place in his remarks. No army in the world ranks higher than ours in personnel and morale. I only plead for justice for these men.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. I am glad to have them in the RECORD at this point.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. BROOKS. In line with what has already been said about Rear Admiral Taussig's testimony and the statement of the two columnists in the White Book recently about the fact that this country is slowly moving toward war, I wish to say that it impresses me, especially in view of the manner in which the gentleman puts the statement, that this bill is designed to keep us out of war by increasing the field efficiency of our officers.

In other words, the war showed us one thing, and that is that in the field we have to have very active officers physically, and does not the gentleman feel that this bill goes a long way toward promoting the efficiency of our field officers by giving them a proper age and proper physical stamina to carry on in the face of an emergency?

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. I agree with the gentleman absolutely. The younger and more vigorous force we have already prepared and in harness, the more we are protected against any sudden and unexpected attack.

I now turn to the consideration of the solution here proposed. As we undertook the solution of this problem, we were confronted by many factors that were conflicting. On the one hand, we were very desirous of preserving this last group of war-experienced officers insofar as possible. It is very shocking to those of us who have given special study to the problems of national defense to realize that practically the entire wartime Army has passed out of the picture so far as availability for effective military service is concerned. Of our 127,000 commissioned officers in the Regular Army, National Guard, and Officers' Reserve Corps, less than 22 percent have seen service in time of war—of the Regular Army, 53 percent; of the National Guard, 40 percent; but of the 100,000 Officers' Reserve Corps, only 15 percent. In other words, we are losing the value of any direct contribution by our war-experienced men so rapidly that we cannot avoid the conclusion that we must retain this last group in active service as long as it can possibly be considered advisable. On the other hand, we cannot lose sight of the fact that leadership and the resulting efficiency of the Army depends to a very great degree on experience and physical condition.

General Marshall saw 27 or 29 American divisions engaged in action in the World War, and it is his statement that the majority of reliefs of officers above the grade of captain were due to physical rather than any other reason, not necessarily because physical limits had been reached but because the spirit was broken through physical fatigue. Those relieved became pessimistic and nervous impossibilities in the position of leadership. After a long and tedious ordeal of replacements of older officers, the results stand out in contrast to the situation we now face today.

Deputy Chief of Staff General Gasser has told us:

> In analyzing the ages of officers who served in combat units during the World War, the following data are of interest. The average age of the World War colonel of a combat unit in France was 43 years. The average age of the present Regular Army colonel is 57 years. The average of the World War lieutenant colonel was 37 years. The average of the present Regular Army lieutenant colonel is 49. The average World War major was 34 years of age. The average of the present Regular Army major is 46½ years. In other words, the Regular Army field officer of today is 13 years older than his World War contemporary. Even if all the present Regular Army majors could be promoted two grades, to that of colonel, in the event of war, their average age would be 3 years greater than that of the World War colonel.

General Pershing cabled to The Adjutant General at Washington on July 28, 1917, as follows:

> For the Chief of Staff. My observations of British-French Armies and most exacting arduous service conditions at the front fully convinces that only officers in full mental and physical vigor should be sent here. Contrary course means certain inefficiency in our service and possible later humiliation to officers concerned. General officers must undergo extreme efforts in personal supervision of operations in trenches. Very few British-French division commanders over 45 or brigadiers over 40. We have too much at stake to risk inefficiency through mental or physical defects. Strongly recommend conditions be fully considered in making high appointments and suggest that no officer of whatever rank be sent here for active service who is not strong and robust in every particular. Officers selected for appointment as general officers of line should be those with experience in active commanding troops. Officers not fulfilling above conditions can be usefully employed at home in training troops.

As we undertake the solution of our problem, the factor of age becomes uppermost, and this bill represents a studied effort to devise a promotion plan for the active list of the Army that is sufficiently flexible to permit advancement of the large war hump into grades commensurate with their training and experience and age. It seems to me that this problem is the greatest problem confronting us today in the field of personnel legislation, and it seems to me that all other matters shrink to relative unimportance for the time being. Legislation of this character should be restricted to the field of developing a constructive promotion plan and should not be confused with various other classes of legislation in the personnel field. For example, the promotion list revision which was so thoroughly studied in 1926 should not be thrown into this particular legislation, or at least not without much further study and analysis than we have yet given it in this Congress.

Another field that should be treated separately is that involving the problem of attrition. Any legislation having for its purpose the acceleration or forcing of some rapid attrition should be taken up and studied most carefully in order to avoid unjust and unfair hardship.

Another field that should be carefully barred from the present bill is legislation having for its purpose the various adjustments that may be desired in the lists of those already retired.

By keeping these other various fields of personnel legislation out of the bill now under consideration, I believe we can accomplish the greatest good for the service with the least delay possible and we can then turn our attention to the various other fields of personnel legislation and give them the study they deserve with a greater assurance that our efforts will provide fair and just and effective results.

The only divergence from the promotion plan that is made in this bill is the provision offering voluntary retirement to war veterans, and that provision is placed in this bill only in the hope that it will help the War Department in the practical administration of this law after its enactment through the relieving of part of the hump.

Briefly, this bill provides for promotion to first lieutenant after 3 years, to captain after 10 years, to major after 17 years, to lieutenant colonel after 23 years, and to colonel after 28 years of service; provided, however, that not more than 705 officers shall service in the grade of colonel at one time.

This schedule of promotion will bring the average officer to the grade of colonel at the age of 52, and the bill provides for retirement at the age of 60, unless the colonel is selected for promotion to general, or unless he is selected as one of the 5 percent of colonels whose further services are considered by the War Department as most needed.

The bill provides for eligibility of lieutenant colonels as well as colonels for selection to the grade of brigadier general after 28 years of service. I wish to emphasize the importance of eligibility of lieutenant colonels with 28 years of service for selection to the grade of general. This provision will enable 3,900 of the 4,200 in the hump today to become eligible for selection to general grade provided they are still in active service when they reach the 28-year mark. This provision not only gives the outstanding officers already down in the hump an opportunity to attain maximum promotion but it also guarantees our Nation the service of outstanding officers who are unfortunately submerged in that hump.

You may wonder why we hit upon the length of service set out in this bill. I will tell you frankly that I am personally in favor of promotion at younger ages than herein provided, but that I have withheld my own personal ideas along that line because of the increased cost of any different plan. The periods of service set out in this bill conform closely to the pay periods set out in our present law, and for that reason this change in the promotion plan involves practically no extra expense because of promotion alone. If these service periods were shortened, however, it would reflect immediately in greatly increased costs.

That brings us to the crux of the question, namely: At what age should retirement be provided? I fought strenuously last year against the bill H. R. 6632 largely because it provided retirement at too young an age when the only ground for retirement was the age set out in the bill.

As we have been confronted with the problem of leaving the service periods at practically the same length for promotion as they are for pay periods in the interest of economy, so are we now confronted with the problem of cutting down the expense involved in retaining these officers in the senior grades. Our own experience and the practice of all of the major foreign powers has taught us that we must adjust the retirement age at some figure calculated to give us the benefit of experience and training and yet set the figure young enough to assure us of vigorous, energetic leadership in the field. After long and careful study this age has been set at 60 years for the grades of colonel and below. It is thought that this age limitation will provide young and vital leadership and will give us young and vigorous regimental commanders.

The observation and study of the systems provided in other leading nations have led us to the conclusion that the physical vigor and energy of a line officer over 60 is inadequate for war and for vigorous peace programs. The United States combat colonels in the World War averaged only 43 years of age. Colonels are forced to retire at 59 in France; at 58 in Italy; at 55 in Great Britain and Japan in peace and war.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. I yield.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. A moment ago the gentleman from Iowa mentioned about younger men officering the Army, especially during a period of war. Some weeks ago Col. "Wild" Bill Donovan advocated that men of about 45 or 50 years of age should fight the wars in the future rather than the younger men. Since the gentleman from Iowa has had much military service, I would like to ask his opinion on the suggestion of Colonel Donovan.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. The point there is just the same, namely, the need for youth and vigor. Any of us who served under older officers knows the difficulty for them to undergo field conditions and combat conditions, and I am very much in favor of the younger officer in the name of efficiency, but when it comes to deciding what age groups shall fight our wars, I have the idea they may have been thinking somewhat of placing the burden of warfare on the fellows responsible for bringing it on, rather than the military efficiency of the Army, and I am trying to approach consideration of this bill from the military-efficiency point of view.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. The gentleman from Iowa recognizes the fact, when it comes to fighting a war, it takes youth, energy, and a man who is willing to take a chance, and many of them. The conservative or older men are best as members of the command or General Staff.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. That is right.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. McCORMACK. I agree with my friend the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT], but I think that an important part of the conduct of a war is the brains that direct it.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. You have to have the combination of youth and vigor and brain power and experience. You cannot put your brains out on crutches and win your battles.

Our discussion of the retirement age would not be complete if we did not consider the matter of cost. This discussion of cost should be made by way of comparison of the proposed plan with the cost of the present plan.

The costs of this measure, active and retired list, over the present system, are estimated as follows:

1941	cost	$290,177
1942	cost	260,948
1943	cost	197,068
1944	cost	412,128
1945	savings	1,420,591
1946	savings	1,648,560
1947	savings	1,565,607
1948	savings	1,405,412
1949	savings	1,352,605
1950	savings	1,596,974
1951	savings	2,106,614
1952	savings	2,496,538
1953	savings	2,857,410
1954	savings	3,313,764
1955	savings	3,904,932
1956	savings	4,298,698

The Bureau of the Budget advises that the proposed legislation would not be in conflict with the program of the President.

Under our present system officers retiring for age are replaced with newly commissioned officers in the grade of second lieutenant, and promotions have been heretofore made all the way up the line by file. Under this proposed plan the newly commissioned officer must serve his allotted time in the various grades, which time dates from his original commission. The change herein provided, reducing the retirement age from 64 to 60, will cause the replacement of these older officers by younger officers 4 years sooner than would be the case under the old law, and that will result in the additional cost of accelerating the commissioning of new officers sufficiently to absorb these 4 years' replacements. However, as soon as the 4-year cycle has passed, the replacements under the old system and under the new will just about counterbalance one another.

During the early years that we are adding these additional replacements the costs are shown to increase from $200,000 to $400,000 every year. The reason this increase in costs is not greater during these years is due to the fact that the Government is saving the difference between retired pay and active pay of the officers retired for age. As soon as the new 4-year replacement has been absorbed, the savings in the pay of officers retired for age starts to manifest itself very strongly, as shown by the tables included in these hearings. These savings in the 5 years start at about one and one-half million dollars and increase to about four and one-fourth million dollars in 1956.

In conclusion, I wish to express my appreciation for the cooperation of the Committee on Military Affairs and the War Department, as well as the General Staff of the Army. I think that we can properly catalog the bill here under consideration as one of the great milestones in perfecting and adjusting the flow of promotion and retirement in the Regular Army. It is my prediction that if this bill becomes law, the results will manifest themselves many times in the coming years through giving us a vitalized Regular Army officer personnel imbued with an improved morale in the knowledge that their problems have finally been given thorough study and fair consideration. It is to the everlasting credit of the Committee on Military Affairs, the War Department, and the General Staff that they have been willing to retract from their former position as sponsors of the former bill, H. R. 6632, and reexamine the problem in the light of our objections and prepare and substitute this measure in place of that bill. And if this bill is enacted into law, we will be free to turn our attention to many other pressing problems in the personnel field that have thus far been deliberately kept out of the bill here under consideration. [Applause.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON].

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Chairman, in presenting this bill to the Congress, please do not confuse it—H. R. 9243—with the age-in-grade retirement bill which was introduced at the first session of this Congress and which has been withdrawn. My colleagues will remember that the age-in-grade bill brought considerable criticism from Members of the Congress and from Army officers from all grades throughout the Army. It provided mandatory retirement in all grades of the commissioned personnel unless the officer reached a particular grade by a particular age. For instance, the age-in-grade retirement measure which was proposed by the War Department would have retired captains at 50, majors at 55, lieutenant colonels at 58, colonels at 60, and brigadier generals at 62. There was considerable opposition to the retirement of these officers below the age of 60, and, as a result, further study was given to the situation, and an entirely new measure has been prepared. This measure (H. R. 9243) has been reported unanimously by the Committee on Military Affairs.

The situation for the commissioned personnel of the Army is so bad as a result of the stagnation in promotion and the superannuation in the field grades that it is felt that something must be done at once to correct it. The Secretary of War in his statement before the committee said:

> The veterans of the World War have grown old without corresponding increase in rank and positions in command to which their age and war experience entitle them. A thousand or more officers commissioned after the war group have reached age and service appropriate to a lieutenant colonel while still serving, as today, in the grade of captain. The morale of the service is adversely affected by the uncertainty of the situation of the senior group, and the future leadership of the Army is jeopardized by the hopeless war hump.

The bill which we are now introducing and which we hope to pass before Congress adjourns, provides promotion as a reward for length of service rather than the penalties of the age and grade retirement proposed in the former measure introduced the last session.

The present bill extends the principle of promotion by length of service, which was provided by Congress a couple of years ago for the grades of first lieutenant and captain, to the grades of major, lieutenant colonel, and colonel. Specifically it provides for promotion to first lieutenant after 3 years of service, which is the same as the present law, and promotion to captain after 10 years of service, which is the same as the present law. In other words, after an officer has served 3 years as second lieutenant, he is promoted automatically to the grade of first lieutenant if he is physically qualified; and after he has served 7 years in the grade of first lieutenant, or a total of 10 years' commissioned service, he is promoted to the grade of captain.

This bill provides for promotion from captain to major at the completion of 17 years' service, from major to the grade of lieutenant colonel at the completion of 23 years of service, and promotion from lieutenant colonel to the grade of full colonel at the completion of 28 years of service. As a matter of fact, it provides promotion for the backbone of the Army—the Infantry, the Field Artillery, the Cavalry, the Signal Corps, the Coast Artillery, the Engineers, and the other combat branches which are now far behind in the promotion which is due them. At the present time all members of the Medical Corps—doctors, dentists, veterinarians, and nurses, are promoted by length of service; the chaplains are promoted after specified years of service, and, as a matter of fact, there has been argument to promote the lawyers, that is, the Judge Advocate General's division, on length of service.

This bill will take care of the Judge Advocate General on the same basis as the combat branches—as the Infantry and the Cavalry. It will not quite put them on a parity with the doctors, the dentists, the veterinarians, and the chaplains, but it will go a long way in correcting the present evils. It also eliminates to some extent the disparity now existing between the officers of the Air Corps, who now have temporary promotion, and the other combat arms. At the present time an Air Corps major, for example, who is a temporary lieutenant colonel under the Air Corps law, is about 10 or 11 years ahead of his contemporary officers in the Infantry, Field Artillery, Cavalry, Coast Artillery, and other combat branches. Such a condition of affairs does not make for high morale for the commissioned persons of the Army upon which so much rests. One of the important features of this bill is that it will save the Government money. There will be an average additional cost of about $300,000 annually for the first 4 years and thereafter a net saving of approximately $2,300,000 for the next 12 years. As a matter of fact, more money will be saved in 5 years than the additional cost for the first 4 years.

The reason for this saving is: Under the present system of promotions all officers go on to age 64 when they must retire. Therefore, in estimating cost for a period of years under the present system the officers will be on the active list unless they reach 64. When an officer reaches age 64 costs drop from those computed for active pay to those computed for retired pay, but there must be added to this apparent saving the cost of the newly commissioned second lieutenants who must be brought in to replace the officer going out at age 64, and the cost of the promotion of officers through the various grades. The current bill provides for the retirement age for officers other than general officers to be 60. When this proviso is first put into effect it will necessitate, therefore, bringing in an additional number of new second lieutenants who would otherwise have been brought in during the next 4 years as officers retire. The active pay and allowances of a colonel at age 60 is $600 per month, retired pay is $375 per month; the difference of $225 per month over a period of four years amounts to $10,800. It can be seen, therefore, that if a hundred officers are retired at age 60 the saving will be $1,080,000.

The War Department believes that after an officer has served 17 years he should be promoted to the grade of major, and that by the time he has served 23 years he should be qualified for the grade of lieutenant colonel. The promotion of captain to major at the termination of 17 years and from major to lieutenant colonel at the completion of 23 years of service and from lieutenant colonel to colonel at the completion of 28 years of service corresponds to the present pay periods. For example, if a captain has 23 years of service and he is not going to be promoted to the grade of major, nevertheless, he draws a major's pay because he has completed 23-years service. He is not at the present time given the opportunity to exercise the command of major but he draws a major's pay. Furthermore, if a major who has completed 23 years of service is not promoted to the grade of lieutenant colonel, he draws a lieutenant colonel's pay. This bill promotes these officers to their proper grades, and will not cost the country one more cent of pay. They get the pay at the present time; all we want to do now is to give them their proper grade.

The Army has captains who have served as high as 22 years and are still captains. It can be seen that all of these captains and all the majors who have served 23 years could all be promoted to the grade of lieutenant colonel the same time, and many of them would jump from the grade of captain to the grade of lieutenant colonel without serving in the grade of major. In order to take care of this the bill specifies that a major must serve 6 years in that grade before being promoted to lieutenant colonel, and that a lieutenant colonel must serve 5 years in that grade before being promoted to colonel. In order to spread the advancement into the grades of major and lieutenant colonel for officers who have served 22 and 23 years and are now only captains, and to insure that these officers will have some service in every grade before being promoted into the next, the bill provides that an officer who reached or reaches the grade of major or lieutenant colonel with more than 17 and 23 years' service, respectively, will receive credit toward the 6 and 5 years of service required in those grades, of one-half the years of service he has in excess of 17 and 23 years' service. This means that a captain who on July 1, 1940, is promoted to major after 22 years' service will have a credit of 2½ years on the 6 years of service in the grade of major.

The bill provides that the number of colonels shall be limited to 705, which is the number at present authorized, because the War Department cannot find appropriate peacetime assignments for a greater number of colonels. However, it is provided that lieutenant colonels with 28 years' service are eligible for selection as brigadier generals of the line or as chiefs of branches in the same manner as is now provided for colonels. In other words, instead of limiting the selection of brigadier generals to 705 colonels as under the present law, this insures that approximately 3,900 of the 4,200 officers in the World War "hump" who are now less than 54 years of age will become eligible for selection as a general officer if they do not elect retirement prior to obtaining 28 years of service. The Army and the country are entitled to the best brains available for the selection to general officer. This selection should not be confined simply to 705 colonels because they happen to be at the top of the promotion list by reason of some accident of age or a few days' greater length of service. The War Department proposes—and I believe it is a sound principle—to extend the opportunity for selection to include any officer who has 28 years of service. All officers of 28 or more years of service will be colonels or lieutenant colonels. Therefore the provision is made that any officer, or rather any lieutenant colonel or colonel, who has completed 28 years' service will be eligible for selection to brigadier general. It is automatic that no officer who has 28 years of service will be at least a lieutenant colonel. They will all stand on their own records, and after 28 years of service the best of the lieutenant colonels or the colonels will be selected to brigadier general. It will give the Army an opportunity to select from nearly 4,000 officers instead of 705. The day is past when the selection to brigadier general should be confined to the top colonels of the Army.

I desire to point out that in case of a war, the services of these retired officers—I mean these officers who are retired at the age of 60 or at the age of 62—will not be lost to the Nation. The present regulations and laws give the War Department authority to recall to active duty any retired officer in time of emergency. These officers can be brought back and given assignments in the Army for which their training has prepared them but which do not require the high standard of physical endurance that is necessary for the leading of troops in battle, such as command of recruiting centers and replacement depots. It is a matter of fact the War Department would put these older officers on the same duty as they would be put on if they were kept on the retired list. I am told that under the present scheme older officers now on the active list will be given assignments in recruiting depots and mobilization centers, while younger officers will be pushed up into the posts of command.

But the important difference is this: Under the provisions of this bill, these officers will be placed on the retired list now, and the opportunity will then be given to younger officers to exercise the posts of command which are now held by the older officers. It is necessary to train these younger officers to command regiments and brigades in peacetime so that, if war comes or if there is a national emergency, they will have had some background and training for the job they are supposed to do. But they cannot get this training if the grades are cluttered up with aged colonels who, if war does come, will have to go into the positions of recruiting depots and replacement centers, and so forth, which they will be assigned to anyway if they were on the retired list and called back to active duty. Retirement at age 60 is the essential vitalizing feature of the bill.

Efficiency of the Army depends to very great degree on leadership—leadership in command and in battle. Leadership depends on experience and physical condition. Experience and physical condition depend largely on age. Age must be regarded in the Army from a little different point of view than in other activities in life. Experience and judgment is acquired with years, but unfortunately resilience of tendons and muscles is lost; leadership in the field and in battle depends to quite an extent on legs, stomach, and nervous system; on ability to stand hardships, lack of sleep, often in the face of grave danger, and still energetically, aggressively, and in a commanding fashion dominate the situation.

General Marshall, the Army Chief of Staff, who saw 27 of the 29 divisions engaged in the World War, stated in his testimony before the Military Affairs Committee that the majority of reliefs of officers above grade of captain was due to physical rather than any other reasons, not necessarily because physical limits had been reached, but because the spirit was broken through physical fatigue. Those relieved became pessimistic and nervous impossibilities in the position of leadership. A man needs a great deal of stamina to stand the racket that occurs in campaigns. Many mistakes were made through physical deficiency, and the reliefs mentioned were due specifically to physical, not mental, deficiency.

May I quote General Marshall in his testimony before the House Military Affairs Committee:

> Before the Senate committee yesterday I referred to the fact that I saw 27 different divisions of ours engaged in battle—we employed 29—and there were more reliefs of field officers, those above the grade of captain, due to physical reasons than for any other cause. But by that I do not mean that they were definitely relieved because of physical limitation, but because their spirit, their tenacity of purpose, their power of leadership over tired men, was broken through physical fatigue. They became pessimistic. They became nervous possibilities in positions of leadership. A man must have a great deal of stamina to stand the racket of campaign. Many of our mistakes were due to physical deficiency; and, as I remarked, the majority of the reliefs, I think, were due specifically to physical exhaustion.

I would like to again quote General Marshall in his statement before the Military Affairs Committee:

> Retirement at 60 years is, in my opinion, the most essential feature of this legislation. If retirement of colonels is deferred to 64, the procedure under this bill will not only involve a material increase in cost, but it will delay the advancement of a number of lieutenant colonels and will definitely operate to the disadvantage of leadership in the officer corps.

It can be seen that retirement at age of 64 would throw the primary objectives of the bill entirely out of line insofar as lieutenant colonels and colonels are concerned. The majority of the age-60 retirements will occur in the grade of colonel—without such retirements the World War veterans in the "hump" will stagnate in the grade of lieutenant colonel with the grade of colonel filled to its limit of 705 with increasingly older officers.

We cannot build an effective leadership throughout the grades if the regimental command grade is choked with older officers. Regardless of long and faithful service, a colonel or lieutenant colonel at 60 is too old to meet the physical requirements of active field leadership of regimental troops, either in peace or war. Our Army is the only army of a great power which has not recognized this fact. Colonels are forced to retire at age 59 in France; at age 58 in Italy; and at age 55 in Great Britain and Japan—these ages apply in peace and war.

I invite attention to the table showing retirement in foreign countries which was published on page 11 of the hearing by the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate. This shows that not a single nation in the world except the United States keeps colonels or any other officer on the active list after they have attained 60 years of age.

The Army officer and the civilian are not to be compared on the basis of age. Far greater physical vigor and stamina are required of an Army officer. Even in peacetime a regimental commander should possess the physical energy and drive to supervise the training of his command, and to dominate its leadership in the field under all conditions of terrain and weather and without regard to hours, or lack of food or sleep.

Brigadier generals should be selected from officers less than 58 years of age in order to have sufficient useful time in the grade of general. Officers over 60 are therefore denied opportunities for promotion.

The elimination of the retirement at age 60 provision will wipe out all the economy which this bill has over the present system. By 1956 the increased annual costs will be about $5,000,000 over the present costs.

The retired officers who are now being brought back to active duty for the purpose of R. O. T. C. work and other similar assignments are all less than 55 years of age and will be placed on duty away from troops thereby saving the War Department of detailing active Regular officers for those duties. The augmentation of the Army to 227,000 enlisted men has placed a heavy burden on the Regular Army officers and this burden is being temporarily filled by the use of junior Reserve officers of limited experience who are being placed on extended active duty. The War Department does not need more officers over 60; it has a surplus of such officers now.

According to estimates prepared by the War Department in the year 1942 there will be 292 colonels retired for age. In 1942 there will also be 85 lieutenant colonels and 69 majors retired for age, or an estimate of about 446. The next year, 1943, there will only be 51 colonels retired for age, 36 lieutenant colonels, and 7 majors. In 1944 it is estimated that there will be 66 colonels, 46 lieutenant colonels retire for age, and no majors. Note that all retirements after 1944 are in the grades of colonel and lieutenant colonel—none are captains or majors. I am inserting in the RECORD an estimate which has been made by the War Department of the number of retirements for age up until 1956 under the provisions of this bill. It is interesting to note that these officers who are retired at the age of 60 would be retired anyway between ages of 60 and 64. Some would be retired for physical disability occurring between ages 60 and 63 and the others by the statutory retirement age of 64.

The bill vitalizes the two most important command grades below that of general officer; that is, those of colonel and captain. It immediately provides that all officers will reach field grades after several years of training in the lower grades and at an age that will enable the Army to receive full value from their services. No bill has ever been introduced which makes certain that those officers who had service in the World War, those officers who entered the Army in 1917 and 1918 and who were then in their early twenties, will have the opportunity to reach high command in the Army, and if they are not selected for higher command, they can retire. The bill provides that officers of the World War service may retire at any time with three-fourths pay. If he is a major with 23 years' service but has not yet reached the grade of lieutenant colonel he retires as a lieutenant colonel with three-quarters of his pay; and if he is a lieutenant colonel with 28 years' service, but has not yet reached the grade of colonel because of the limit on the number of colonels he can retire in the grade of colonel with three-quarters of his pay.

Stagnation in promotion has been in evidence since prior to 1926. It is due to what is called the World War "hump"—a group of officers whose commissioned service began between November 1916 and November 1918. In 1926 this group numbered 5,800 officers—now it numbers 4,200 officers—over one-third of all officers on promotion list, who average 46 years of age and have approximately equal service. They now occupy the lower 400 files of the grade of lieutenant colonel, the entire grade of major, and the upper 900 files of the grade of captain, blocking promotion to field grades. Nine hundred World War officers are still captains.

There is little hope of appropriate promotion for officers behind the World War "hump," commissioned since 1920. Officers should serve 3 years as second lieutenant, present law; 7 years as first lieutenant, present law; 7 years as captain; 6 years as major; 5 years as lieutenant colonel; reach colonel after 28 years' service.

Officers in the World War "hump" will begin to enter the grade of colonel in 1946, will continue to enter that grade for next 11 years with increasing average ages; from 1954 to 1957 that average age will be 62 years. Officers following "hump" to include class of 1925 have prospects of entering grade of colonel after 37 to 34 years of service at average ages from 61 to 58. Result: Superannuation of all field grades.

This bill does not change the position of any officer on the promotion list. The present promotion list was established in 1920 and gave credit at that time to officers for their service in the Regular Army, the National Guard, or the National Army. Credit for all World War service was recognized when the promotion list was made up by accounting for all commissioned service subsequent to April 6, 1917. That same principle is recognized now, and no change is to be made on the promotion list. No officer is to be promoted over another officer now senior to him under the provisions of this bill. All this bill does is to provide for promotion by length of service. This bill does not provide for the forced elimination of any officer. That is an entirely different subject.

The bill provides for promotion after specified years of continuous commissioned service in the Regular Army. However, in order to recognize the fact that in the World War "hump" there are a large number of officers whose commissioned service in the Regular Army dates only from July 1, 1920, but who had commissioned service in the National Guard or National Army during the war, a provision is made in the bill that any officer shall be credited for promotion and retirement purposes with at least the same length of continuous commissioned service in the Regular Army of any officer junior to him in his grade on the promotion list. Some such provision as this is necessary. Officers in the World War "hump" were originally placed on the promotion list by a method which accounted for all active commissioned service subsequent to April 6, 1917, in the National Army, the National Guard, and the Regular Army. Credit for all World War service was recognized then and is recognized now. During the World War a large number of officers were appointed directly in the Regular Army. These included the Military Academy class of 1917, the provisional appointments of June 1917; the provisional appointments of August and October 1917; the provisional appointments of May 1, 1918; the Military Academy classes of August 1917, June 1918, and November 1918. By crediting officers on the promotion list with the greatest amount of continuous commissioned service in the Regular Army of officers junior to them on the promotion list there is insured that there will be no change in relative order of officers on the promotion list. It also assures that the credit which such officers will receive will be by reason of the commissioned service of an entire group, such as, for example, the August 1917 Military Academy class. Had another system been adopted, such as crediting all active commissioned service, it would result in one individual carrying forward a large group of officers, in some cases to undesirable lengths of constructive service.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] 15 minutes.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, following those who have gone before me and the very fine analysis they have given of this bill, I find very little that I can add to it. I do want to carry out the thought that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON] has just uttered, asking you not to confuse this bill with the bill that was passed out of the committee last year, H. R. 6632, which was known as the age-in-grade retirement bill. Associated with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MARTIN] and eight other members of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House, I filed a minority report on that bill. In supporting this bill today I take occasion to call to your attention some of the differences, even at the risk of saying something that has already been said. In that minority report we said this:

> We admit the presence in the promotion list of the "hump," and we are agreed that some method of giving an orderly and more rapid promotion back of the "hump" is desirable. However, we cannot agree from the meager evidence presented to our committee that this proposed plan is the way out of the present difficulty. There are many possible plans, some of which we believe should be explored, in an effort to find one that will not so ruthlessly throw out many of our most efficient officers in the prime of life and ripeness of experience, at an age when they can be most useful. Certainly no other plan was explored in the few hours this bill was under consideration by the committee.
> The officers forced into retirement should this bill be enacted into law are of long service. The majority of them served in the World War. They know the art of war not from theory alone but from a first-hand experience. They know the hardship of service in the trenches, and they know the difficulty of leading troops under all kinds of adversities. Among them are some of the best line officers, some of the most efficient construction quartermasters, some of the ablest engineers, ordnance experts, and experienced officers in every line. An efficient army cannot afford the luxury of granting promotions in the lower grades (as desirable as that is) at the terrific loss of these efficient officers.

As a result of that opposition it was decided that we should try to work out a bill that would accomplish the objective desired by all of us—that is, to give relief to this "hump" and yet without ruthlessly throwing out that great group of World War officers who, through no fault of their own, had become enmeshed in this thing that we call the "hump." This bill that we are presenting to you today with the unanimous endorsement of the Military Affairs Committee is the result of that study and that work.

I feel that no officer can complain of this bill. It gives an automatic promotion. It is true that while this great "hump" is before us, there must be in effect some manner of retardation, and for that reason the requirement is written in that they must have served so long in certain grades before they can be promoted to the other grades. But in order to take care of those who have already served a long time in some of the grades, longer than they should have had to serve, constructive service is given toward promotion to the next grade, by reason of that excess time they have served in the lower grades.

Not a single officer is thrown out as he would have been under H. R. 6632; that is, below the age of 60, and even then he is given the right to retire or given retirement privilege at a grade commensurate with the length of service he has had.

Furthermore, as I pointed out in a question to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MARTIN], every officer who has served as long as 28 years, the length of service within which he would ordinarily be promoted to the grade of colonel, yet by reason of the fact that we can have only 705 colonels has not attained the rank of colonel, even though a lieutenant colonel is eligible for selection to the grade of general officer. This takes care of virtually all of the World War officers. Those that are not taken care of in that respect cannot complain, because certainly under the present law they would have had no chance for consideration in any event.

In our minority report we made certain recommendations. One of them was tightening up on the physical examinations of our officers. This was done last year, and we have been assured by the officials of the War Department that they are just as anxious as we are to have able-bodied officers at all times, and we are assured that they will continue to require rigid physical examinations.

Another thing we suggested was the optional retirement after 30 years of service. As a matter of fact, this bill gives every World War officer the right to retire at any time upon three-quarters of his base pay. Therefore they are taken care of in this respect in this bill.

I do not think this bill is perfect. That is, I do think that, as far as the single objective that it seeks to attain is concerned, it is just about as nearly perfect as it could be made, but it does not cure all of the ills with which the War Department is confronted in its personnel problems. I still believe we ought to have some means of being sure that the officer who is going to benefit by the automatic-promotion provisions of this bill would be required to do a good job. By saying that I do not intend to cast any aspersions upon any officer in the United States Army. I want to pay my tribute to the personnel of the United States Army, both commissioned and noncommissioned, and to the very fine job that they have been doing and are doing, often under most trying circumstances and adverse conditions. But under this bill we are saying to the young officer who comes into the Regular Army, "If you keep your health and stay on the job so that you can stay in this service, you know that out yonder some time in the future, 28 years after you have entered into the commissioned service, you will attain the grade of colonel, and you will be eligible for selection to one of the general grades."

I do believe that we ought to go further, and I have made this statement many times heretofore. I believe that we ought to say to that officer, "Not only will you have to keep your health and simply dodge the class B board as it is presently run, but you will have to do a good job." This bill does not do that and the present law does not do it. I still believe just as I believed, and as those who cooperated with me believed in the statement of the minority report last year, that the provisions of our law should be tightened up in order that the officer would be required to render efficient service. I believe I am correct in saying that the officials of the War Department are in sympathy with that view, and I am certainly hopeful that they will submit to this Congress some proposed plan for putting that into effect.

I have heard no criticism of this bill except with reference to one or two items. I did hear it said by some officer that it did not go far enough because we did not go back and disarrange the promotion list that was established in 1920. I want to say that I am rather in sympathy with that group of officers, because I do believe, and I am sincere in my belief, that a great many of those officers were discriminated against. I do not say it was willfully done, but by the way the promotion list was set up they were perhaps discriminated against. Had I had anything to do with it, or were it to come up now, I would certainly raise my voice in protest against it. But after that condition has run for 20 years, I do not believe that anyone could rightly argue that we should disturb that promotion list at the present time.

I have heard some objection to the retirement at the age of 60, and I am in sympathy with that objection. As a matter of fact, I dislike very much to see these officers retire at the age of 60 because I still think that many, many of them will be in the full vigor of life and able to perform their duties until their regular retirement age. I call your attention to the fact, however, that under the law as it now exists the President can, if he wishes to do so, retire any Army officer at the age of 62. So, after all, the only thing this bill does, so far as the present law is concerned, is to cut down the retirement age in the grade of colonel from 62 years to 60.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. This bill, of course, is an extension of the act of July 31, 1935, which dealt with lower-grade officers. I arose particularly to say, however, as chairman of the Military Affairs Committee of the House, that this very excellent bill is due almost entirely to the efforts of the gentleman from Alabama, who now is addressing the House; the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MARTIN]; and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FADDIS]. These gentlemen constituted a special committee I appointed to confer with the War Department and they are entitled to the chief credit for this fine legislation.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I appreciate those remarks from the chairman of our committee. Permit me to say that we who filed the minority report are deeply appreciative of the very fine cooperation we received from the chairman, from the members of the committee, and from the officials of the War Department. We found an absolute desire on the part of all to work out this most perplexing question, and when we got to work on it we found no great difficulty in arriving at this solution of the problem. I believe it is a good bill. I was absolutely sincere in my opposition to H. R. 6632, not moved by any personal motives or the interest of any individual officer. I simply believed that that bill ruthlessly threw out, without rhyme or reason, a great many officers whom we could not afford to lose, and did it on the basis of age alone.

The pending bill seeks to remove the "hump," but does it with a saving to the Government of the United States. As the chairman mentioned, it extends the act of 1935 by making automatic promotion to the grade of colonel instead of stopping at the grade of captain, as the present law does. It also insures the young officer who comes into the service that he will have a career; that he will be enabled to serve in the various ranks and have command of the various forces commensurate with the length of service that he has given; and that before he goes out he will at least have attained the rank of colonel—the highest rank which the average officer can reasonably hope to reach.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. BROOKS. The important thing with reference to this bill is that it increases the efficiency of the Army without doing any substantial injustice to anyone.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I certainly think that is a correct statement.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. BECKWORTH. The gentleman has stated that the bill will save the Government money. Has the gentleman figured out what the savings will be?

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is set out on page 4 of the report.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield to the distinguished chairman of my committee.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman is especially well informed on this bill. Will the gentleman explain the fine method of retirement whereby it does save money for the Government in the different ranks?

That is set out, of course, on page 4 of the report and, I believe, also in the hearings. Over a period of years there will be considerable savings by reason of this bill over the present law, and the saving is brought about by reason of the fact that whereas the active pay of a colonel with 30 years' service is $600 a month, his retirement pay is $375. This is a difference of $225 a month, which would be more than enough to pay the second lieutenant who would come in at the bottom to take his place when he retires. Another point to remember when thinking about savings is the fact that pay does not depend upon rank but upon length of service; in other words, our officers are paid according to performance based upon length of service rather than upon rank alone. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Chairman, for many years our Military Affairs Committee, with the assistance of the War Department, has been studying the problem of promotion stagnation in the Regular Army. The problem is not a simple one, and many of the solutions which were offered had to be eliminated in whole or in part because of the many elements involved. After the experience of many years and many months of hard work your Military Affairs Committee brings to you, without a dissenting vote, H. R. 9243.

Before discussing the details of the bill it might be well to say something about the conditions which make the bill necessary. At the present time the promotion list of the officers of the Regular Army contains the names of over 4,000 officers who entered the service during the World War. All of these officers are approximately the same age and have approximately the same length of service and experience. These officers are now the junior lieutenant colonels, all of the majors, and the 900 senior captains. Under the present law these captains will have served 38 years in the Army and be approximately 62 years old before they reach the grade of colonel. Those officers who entered the Army after the World War find this large group of officers, often referred to as the World War "hump," blocking any chance they have for normal promotion. This is very discouraging to this large group of officers and is unquestionably reflected in their efficiency, but this is only a small part of the story. Under existing law our Army will have majors who are 56 years old and lieutenant colonels who are 60 years old. I am not referring to the isolated cases of officers who entered the Army older than the average. I am referring to many of those groups who entered the service between the ages of 24 and 26 just after the World War. In emergencies these officers will not have swivel-chair jobs. They must be in the field leading their troops. They must be strong and vigorous and able to direct the placing of artillery, the barricading of roads, the erection of barbed-wire entanglements, and do these things in all sorts of weather and under the most adverse conditions. Men of 56 are seldom able to stand these rigorous duties. The result is that the efficiency of our Army suffers and our defense is weakened. It is things of this kind that H. R. 9243 is designed to cure.

In the first place, this bill assures a normal rate of promotion for all officers up to and including the grade of colonel. It prescribes the maximum number of years an officer will serve in each grade. This should encourage the junior officers, because it gives them an opportunity for promotion and relieves the promotion stagnation which they now face. Furthermore, it will decrease the average age of officers in the grades of captain, major, lieutenant colonel, and colonel. This is accomplished in a very simple and effective way. Under the present law a second lieutenant is promoted to first lieutenant after 3 years of service and to a captain after 10 years of service. There the promotion for length of service stops. This bill does not alter these promotions, but simply adds that promotion to major will be after 17 years of service, to lieutenant colonel after 23 years of service, and to colonel after 28 years of service.

In order to prevent any officer now in the Army from practically jumping one grade due to excessive years of service in a junior grade, a restriction in the bill requires an officer to serve 6 years as a major and 5 years as a lieutenant colonel. If an officer served more than 17 years before being promoted to major or more than 23 years before being promoted to lieutenant colonel, he is given credit for one-half year for each year so served. No restriction is placed on the number of officers in each grade except that of colonel, which is limited to the present number of 705. This restriction was necessary, because the War Department has found it very difficult to find suitable assignments for more than that number of colonels. Let us examine how this method of promotion will affect the ages of the officers in the different grades. Assuming a man enters the Army when he is 24 years old as that is the average age, he will become a first lieutenant at 27, a captain at 34, a major at 41, a lieutenant colonel at 47, and a colonel at 52. That is a marked improvement over the present law and will enable all officers to exercise the functions of command and gain experience in the several grades at more suitable ages. This is very necessary to our national defense.

The next consideration is cost. How much will it cost to perfect the national defense as set forth in this bill? The average cost for the first 4 years will be about $300,000. After that the savings will average $2,300,000 a year for 12 years. While this bill will promote officers more rapidly than under the present law, it will not affect the officer's salary until he reaches the grade of colonel. Under the present law an officer with 17 years' service draws the salary of a major, even though he is only a captain, and an officer with 23 years' service draws the salary of a lieutenant colonel although he may be a major. H. R. 9243 merely promotes the officer to the grade for which he is drawing the salary under the present law. Furthermore, this bill makes it mandatory for all officers to retire at 60 except brigadier generals, at which the age is 62, and major generals at 64. A provision of the bill authorizes the Secretary of War to keep 5 percent of the colonels on the active list until they reach the age of 62. The present law makes it mandatory for all officers to retire at the age of 64. If this bill is enacted into law, the reduced age of retirement will not go into effect until 1942. This will give all officers affected adequate time to adjust themselves. The reduced age of retirement is necessary, because without it the grade of colonel will be filled to its limit of 705 with older and older officers and the World War veterans in the "hump" will stagnate in the grade of lieutenant colonel. Furthermore, any colonel 60 years old, who has not been selected for brigadier general, has already been jumped several times and after reaching the age of 60 years will not be selected.

With the European war spreading rapidly from one neutral country to another all of us should give thanks that we are Americans, but we should not allow the peace which we are enjoying to lull us into a sense of false security. George Washington warned us when he said, "In times of peace prepare for war." All of us listened with rapt attention to the Army appropriation bill, because we knew that it was vitally important to our national defense. We studied with care the number of tanks, antiaircraft guns, planes, and other material that was to be purchased. But these items were merely the mechanisms necessary for defense. Behind those mechanisms must be hundreds of thousands of trained men, men trained and guided by the officers of our Army. I am asking you to pass this bill, because I am firmly convinced that it is just as important for our national defense to revitalize the officer personnel of our Army as it is to equip it with the latest mechanical devices. [Applause.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARTER].

Mr. HARTER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, there is very little I feel can be added to the explanations that have already been given of the measure we are considering. Let us bear in mind, however, the fact that this bill is designed to promote the efficiency of the officer personnel of the Army. In addition to that, however, it is eminently fair in its treatment of this problem because it gives consideration to those officers who came in during the World War, who formed the hump in the promotion list. They are not objecting to the bill; in fact, I have it from various officers who are scattered over the country at different Army posts who have familiarized themselves with this legislation that they feel it is the fairest and most equitable method of dealing with this problem that has been presented.

None of us know the age of colonels in the German Army, the very efficient organization that is now functioning in Europe. We do know something of the make-up of the other armies of the leading nations of the world. We know that the retirement age of colonel in France, Britain, Italy, and Japan is much less than the age fixed for retirement of colonels in the bill that is under consideration. These ages in other countries apply in peace and war.

Retirement at age 60 is the most vitalizing feature contained in this bill. Without this provision it would be better that the bill be not enacted, since continued retirement at age 64 throws the primary objectives of the bill entirely out of line insofar as lieutenant colonels and colonels are concerned. The majority of these age-60 retirements will come in the grade of colonel—without those retirements the World War veterans in the "hump" will stagnate in the grade of lieutenant colonel with the grade of colonel filled to its limit of 705 with increasingly older officers.

Retirement of senior line officers at age 60 is vital to our national defense—we cannot build an effective leadership throughout the grades if the regimental command grade is filled with superannuated officers. Regardless of long and faithful service, a colonel or lieutenant colonel at age 60 is too old to meet the physical requirements of an active command in peace and war. The United States Army is the only army of a great power which has not recognized this fact. The army officer and the civilian are not comparable with respect to age. Far greater physical vigor and stamina are required of an army officer. Even in peacetime a regimental commander requires the physical energy and drive to thoroughly supervise the training of his command in garrison and then to lead it actively through maneuvers in all conditions of terrain and weather. A weary colonel makes a weary regiment. It takes youth to march and fight.

At age 60 a colonel has been passed over for promotion to general officer. A brigadier general must be selected from officers less than 58 years of age—otherwise, there is too little time remaining for him to gain experience and be advanced to the grade of major general with a useful period of service before him. Line officers over 60 are therefore isolated from promotion opportunities; they are also isolated from command opportunities; there are only 157 regimental peacetime commands, and the younger colonels must be assigned to them in order that they may gain experience and be eligible for selection as brigadier generals. The remaining 550 colonels must be assigned to other duties—a majority to duty with Organized Reserves, the National Guard, the R. O. T. C. These vitally important elements of the national defense require the best instructors we can give them; experience is not enough; the instructor must supply young, vigorous leadership, too. These civilian components do not want old officers who are just waiting to retire. Right now I am informed that the War Department experiences extreme difficulty in placing its older colonels.

The elimination of the retirement at age 60 provision wipes out all the economy which this bill has over the present system. The bill will then incur the same costs as the present system—a gradually increasing cost of the active and retired lists as the World War group reaches the higher-pay periods and goes on to retirement at age 64 at a higher rate of retirement pay. By 1956 these costs will be about five million over those at present.

The bill with retirement at 60 provides a younger, more vital command at less cost to the Government. After average additional costs of $300,000 per year for the first 4 years, average annual savings of $2,300,000 will result during the next 12 years.

Continuity of leadership is vital to provide an efficient corps of officers. This must extend from the highest ranking officer down through each grade in the chain of command. Continuity of leadership is secured by having in each grade a body of officers of proper age and experience. It is lost when officers remain too long in one grade or are promoted so rapidly that they jump a grade or pass through grades too rapidly. Under the provisions of this bill men will be lieutenants, captains, and majors at the age in life when they are most physically fit, and when they will be able to best exercise the commands of their rank. To my mind, some observations made to me in a letter from an old friend, a World War officer, now a major, are most enlightening, coming from one who has spent most of his life in the Army and knows how his fellow officers feel about this measure.

He says:

H. R. 9243, the newly proposed Army promotion bill, has great merit, and I am not hesitating to say so, though it does not benefit me one iota. We have here a good cross section of the Army, having Infantry, Field Artillery, Quartermaster Corps, Coast Artillery, and Signal Corps. Have talked with officers ranging in grade from captain to colonel, inclusive, and have found none that are not thoroughly in accord and enthusiastic over the bill. Many of them will be promoted, but it does not mean a penny increase in their pay, inasmuch as they already are in the increased-pay period. The bill seems to be most fair, particularly to war-service officers, by permitting their voluntary retirement after June 30, 1941. Morale will be greatly increased by its passage. It will provide a minimum of junior officers (lieutenants and captains), which will allow of expansion of the Army's commissioned personnel if and when the occasion arises, which God forbid will ever happen. The greatest pacifists in the U. S. A. are not the prayer-singing sisters, but those of your and my Army, who know what war really is, and who want only defense and not a huge standing (still) Army.

It is my hope, Mr. Chairman, that this bill will pass without a dissenting vote.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BROOKS] such time as he may desire.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, this bill could very aptly be termed a bill to promote the efficiency of the national defense system rather than a bill to provide for the promotion-list officers. Its prime purpose is to promote the efficiency of the United States Army and to increase the standard and morale of its officers. During a time of emergency, this purpose should commend itself to the profound consideration of this Congress.

For over 2 years, the best efforts of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives and a large part of the effort of the General Staff of the Army has been directed to the elimination of one of the great problems of the Army; namely, "the Army hump." During the year 1939 the committee reported to the floor of this House a bill which would have accomplished this purpose but only at the expense of an injustice being done to many of the splendid officers who for years have served the Army with energy and ability. As a result of this fact, the Military Affairs Committee reconsidered its action by which the bill was reported out of the committee and decided not to press for a vote in the House. The committee now comes before the Congress with a new bill reported out of the committee by unanimous consent.

This new bill will accomplish the purpose intended, and at the same time, will work no injustice on anyone.

As a result of the World War, in the year 1926 the Army found itself in possession of what is called an unfortunate situation. In other words, at that time there were in service 5,800 officers in a condition of stagnation and superannuation. In 1940, this number has been reduced to some 4,200. Those officers, in this hump, find promotion very slow, and when received these promotions come late in their Army life. Those officers below the hump, on the other hand, find that they are denied the normal promotions, and the normal responsibilities incident to promotion, and must wait long periods of time until retirement of all of those ahead before they can hope to advance to the next higher grade and rank. It has been stated that the average officer, as a result of their condition, is 17 years behind in his normal promotion.

This bill provides for the mandatory retirement of brigadier generals at the age of 62, and for the retirement of all other officers at the age of 60. The Secretary of War, however, may exempt 5 percent of the colonels at the age of 60, and carry them forward until the age of 62 is reached. In this way, the most valuable part of the mature years of the higher army officers are available to the Army, and yet the way is made clear for the younger officers, upon whom the rigorous burden of field duty falls. The promotions will come to these young officers at regular intervals.

One effect of this bill is to increase the number of field officers immediately by 1,350. From year to year, this number will be increased until the proportionate number of field officers is reached. All this is done without doing injustice to anyone.

It has been said that the early retirement of some officers will result in increased costs to the Government. Such is not the case; and one is interested in knowing that this will actually result in time in a substantial saving to the Army. So that this saving may be fully understood, I present to you a chart showing the financial effect of the bill upon the expenses of the Army.

Fiscal year:
1941 additional cost	$290,177
1942 additional cost	260,948
1943 additional cost	197,068
1944 additional cost	412,128
1945 savings	1,420,591
1946 savings	1,648,560
1947 savings	1,565,607
1948 savings	1,405,412
1949 savings	1,352,605
1950 savings	1,596,974
1951 savings	2,106,614
1952 savings	2,496,538
1953 savings	2,857,410
1954 savings	3,313,764
1955 savings	3,904,932
1956 savings	4,298,698

We are not unmindful in Congress of the fact that Europe is now engaged in a most disastrous war. In my opinion, this war will increase in intensity from day to day, as it will likewise increase in destructiveness. We must exert every effort to keep out of it—and our best way of doing so is to increase the strength and effectiveness of our Army and Navy. To this end this Congress has voted vast sums of money and has authorized increases in the land and water strength of our forces. There can be no reasonable doubt but that this measure will increase the efficiency of our Army and make it better prepared to face the emergencies which may be ahead of us.

And it may accomplish all of this without in any way doing injustice to any one of that splendid corps of fine officers who through the years have given patriotically of their talents. These officers, who under the bill will reach retirement, will receive three-fourths of their basic pay. Their services will have been fully appreciated by the Army and by the Nation; and I say to you today that our Army officers, from the Chief of Staff to the lowest ranking second lieutenant, have carried on through the dull, drab time of peace in the highest traditions of the service and are entitled to the commendation and thanks of our people.

I have just read the testimony of Admiral Joseph K. Taussig, of the Navy, in which he states:

> I do not see how we can escape being forced into an eventual war by the present trend of developments in the Far East.

I have also just read a newspaper account of two columnists who in a daring manner consign the future of our Nation to a part in the bloody war in Europe.

Mr. Chairman, I do not agree with these gentlemen or with those others who from time to time profess interest in our Nation's future by consigning us to war. I believe that this Nation intends to and will keep out of war. I believe this, the present bill, will go far to increase the efficiency of our Army and by doing so inspire respect from other powers in our ability to take care of ourselves. Our best way of avoiding war is by being prepared; and I, for one, except to devote my abilities and efforts to the end of building up our Army and our Navy.

This House, I believe, is fully conscious of the perilous course of events in the world today. This House is conscious of the real need of utmost possible protection from the war-mad powers of Europe, a protection which will guarantee our safety and our integrity, come what may in the vicissitudes of the affairs of the Old World.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ANDERSON].

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, this bill has been pretty well covered by the members of the subcommittee and the committee. It has been discussed very fully. I cannot at this time see why there should be a dissenting vote.

There seems to be some controversy regarding retirement age, and for the information of the members of the Committee I submit the following:

Retirement at age 60 is vital because:

First. It provides young and vital leadership at lesser cost.

Second. Entire bill is built on it—stagnation in grades of colonel and lieutenant colonel without it.

Third. Effective leadership requires young and vital regimental commanders. Experience and judgment is acquired with the years, but unfortunately the body's ability to withstand the physical requirements of maneuvers and campaign lessens. Fatigue weakens judgment. As stated by General Marshall, the Chief of Staff, failure of older officers during World War due primarily to physical weariness affecting their leadership, spirit, and tenacity of purpose.

Fourth. Physical vigor and energy of line officer over 60 inadequate for peace and war. United States combat colonels in World War averaged only 43 years of age. Colonels are forced to retire at 59 in France, at 58 in Italy, and 55 in Great Britain and Japan—in peace and war.

Fifth. Impossible to make enough jobs for officers over 60. Civilian components do not want old officers for instructors. There are only 157 peacetime regiments—younger colonels must be assigned to those regiments to provide proper leadership and to permit training for selection as general officers, and to insure that senior officers on general staff and in branch offices have had recent command of troops; hence officers over 60 must go largely to civilian components.

Sixth. Colonels and lieutenant colonels over 60 are past their greatest usefulness, yet draw active pay of $600 per month.

Seventh. Selection of brigadier generals is made from officers under 60. Therefore officers over 60 are isolated from command and promotion opportunities.

Eighth. Retirement at age 60 is the proviso which permits the greater part of the saving of $26,000,000 over the next 15 years. Without the proviso—little if any savings.

Retirement at age 64 with promotion system of this bill disadvantageous because:

First. Will stagnate the grade of colonel, limited to 705, with over-age officers—by 1953 practically all colonels will be over 60.

Second. Will cause stagnation in grade of lieutenant colonel where World War "hump" of 4,200 officers will pile up during next 6 years.

Third. Will create large body of high-pay officers too old for active command of regiments.

Fourth. Will necessitate assignment of many over-age officers to duties appropriate for company officers.

Fifth. Will necessitate going far down the list of colonels initially and the list of lieutenant colonels and majors eventually to find officers young enough for selection as brigadier generals.

Sixth. Will turn the expected savings of S. 3712—H. R. 9243—into additional costs.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, there are no further requests for time, and I suggest that the Clerk read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act of July 31, 1935 (49 Stat. 505), is hereby repealed.

SEC. 2. Section 3 of the said act of July 31, 1935, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. The number of promotion-list officers that shall be in the respective grades at any time after the effective date of this act shall be such as results from the operation of the promotion system hereinafter in this section prescribed. Promotion-list second lieutenants and first lieutenants shall be promoted to the respective grades of first lieutenant and captain immediately upon completing respectively 3 years' and 10 years' continuous commissioned service in the Regular Army, but not otherwise. Except as hereinafter provided promotion-list captains, majors, and lieutenant colonels shall be promoted to the respective grades of major, lieutenant colonel, and colonel immediately upon completing respectively 17 years', 23 years', and 28 years' continuous commissioned service in the Regular Army: Provided, That at no time shall the number of promotion-list colonels exceed 705: Provided further, That promotion-list majors and lieutenant colonels shall not be promoted to the respective grades of lieutenant colonel and colonel until they shall have completed respectively 6 years' and 5 years' continuous commissioned service under permanent appointments in the grades of major and lieutenant colonel, except that for the purpose of determining years of such service in grade officers promoted to or serving in the respective grades of major and lieutenant colonel shall, in addition to receiving credit for all actual continuous commissioned service in the Regular Army in those grades, receive constructive credit of one-half the amount of their continuous commissioned service in the Regular Army in excess of 17 and 23 years, respectively: Provided further, That each promotion-list officer shall be assumed to have, for promotion purposes, at least the same length of continuous commissioned service in the Regular Army and service in grade as any officer junior to him, in his grade, on the promotion list, except that an officer sentenced by courts martial to loss of files on the promotion list shall be assumed to have for promotion purposes no greater service than the officer next above him in his new position on the promotion list: Provided further, That no officer shall be promoted, under the provisions of this section, in advance of any officer in the same grade whose name appears above his on the promotion list, except that the promotion of an officer shall not be withheld by reason of the fact that an officer senior to him on the promotion list is for any reason not eligible for promotion: And provided further, That hereafter all promotion-list officers in any grade shall take rank among themselves according to their standing on the promotion list."

SEC. 3. That section 5 of the said act of July 31, 1935, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"That whenever any officer on the active list of the Regular Army or Philippine Scouts shall have completed not less than 15 nor more than 29 years' service, he may upon his own application be retired, in the discretion of the Secretary of War with annual pay equal to 2½ percent of his active-duty annual pay at the time of his retirement, multiplied by a number equal to the years of his active service not in excess of 29 years: Provided, That the number of years of service to be credited in computing the right to retirement and retirement pay hereinbefore provided in this section shall include all service now or hereafter credited for active-duty pay purposes, any fractional part of a year amounting to 6 months or more to be counted as a complete year: Provided further, That any officer on the active list of the Regular Army or Philippine Scouts who served in any capacity as a member of the military or naval forces of the United States prior to November 12, 1918, shall upon his own application be retired with annual pay equal to 75 percent of his active-duty annual pay at the time of his retirement unless entitled to retired pay of a higher grade as hereinafter provided, except that officers with less than 20 years' service and officers who are under investigation or who are awaiting trial by courts martial or the result of such trial, or whose cases are pending before courts of inquiry shall be retired only when the application for retirement in each case has been approved by the Secretary of War: Provided further, That on June 30, 1942, all brigadier generals of the line who are then 62 years of age or over and all promotion-list officers who are then 60 years of age or over shall be retired, and thereafter all brigadier generals of the line shall be retired at the age of 62 years and all promotion-list officers shall be retired at the age of 60 years, except that all officers in the grade of general officer whose names are carried on the promotion list are exempted from the operation of this proviso and in addition thereto the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, exempt from the operation of this proviso such number of colonels as will result in there being on active duty at any time a number of colonels who would otherwise be retired not greater than 5 percent of the total number of colonels then on the promotion list, but such exemption shall terminate in each case when the officer reaches the age of 62, or sooner in the discretion of the Secretary of War, and colonels so exempted shall be included within the authorized number of promotion-list colonels: Provided further, That any promotion-list officer retired for any reason except by operation of section 24b, National Defense Act, or wholly retired, who has completed 28 or more years of continuous commissioned service in the Regular Army and who has failed to reach the grade of colonel by reason of the limitation on the number of promotion-list officers in the grade of colonel or by reason of the restriction of years of service in grade of major or lieutenant colonel shall be retired in the grade of colonel with retired pay computed as otherwise provided by law for a colonel with the same length of service including all service now or hereafter credited for active-duty pay purposes, and any such officer who has completed more than 23 but less than 28 years of continuous commissioned service in the Regular Army and who has failed to reach the grade of lieutenant colonel by reason of the restriction of years of service in grade of major shall be retired in the grade of lieutenant colonel with retired pay computed as otherwise provided by law for a lieutenant colonel with the same length of service including all service now or hereafter credited for active-duty pay purposes: Provided further, That each promotion-list officer shall be assumed to have for retirement purposes, at least the same length of continuous commissioned service in the Regular Army as any officer junior to him on the promotion list: Provided further, That the number of years of service to be credited in computing the right to retirement and retirement pay in the case of officers retired by reason of having reached the age of 60 years or over shall include all service heretofore credited for retirement at age 64: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall operate to deprive any officer of the retired rank to which he is now entitled under the provisions of law: And provided further, That all officers retired under the provisions of this section shall be placed on the unlimited retired list."

SEC. 4. That hereafter brigadier generals of the line shall be appointed from among officers of the line commissioned in grades not below that of lieutenant colonel who are credited with 28 years' continuous commissioned service in the Regular Army as hereinbefore provided and whose names are borne on an eligible list prepared annually by a board of not less than five general officers of the line, not below the grade of major general; and hereafter appointment as chief of any branch shall be made from among officers commissioned in grades not below that of lieutenant colonel who are credited with 28 years' continuous commissioned service in the Regular Army as hereinbefore provided, and who have demonstrated by actual and extended service in such branch or on similar duty that they are qualified for such appointment.

SEC. 5. Except as otherwise provided, this act shall be effective July 1, 1940, and all laws and parts of laws, so far as they are inconsistent with or in conflict with any of the provisions hereof, are hereby repealed as of that date.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. RAYBURN] having resumed the chair, Mr. PACE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9243) to provide for the promotion of promotion-list officers of the Army after specified years of service in grade, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 466, reported the same back to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered on the bill to final passage.

The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to extend their own remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY]?

There was no objection.

APPOINTMENT TO COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution which I send to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 471

Resolved, That CLARENCE E. KILBURN, of New York, be, and he is hereby, elected to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the House of Representatives.

The resolution was agreed to.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HARTER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HARTER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARTER of New York. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, the President's unique request of last week to eliminate the Woodrum amendment and permit Mr. Roosevelt or Colonel Harrington to spend next year's Presidentially recommended amount in 8 months, if necessary, rather than during 12 months, attracts attention. Unique, yes; because the President says the amount recommended is too small for the year with present need as an indicator, but he takes care of the period through November and up to March. What of the 4 remaining months of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941? If more money is needed, why did he not definitely recommend its appropriation and specifically how to provide it? Is it the wrong year for taxes? Is it the wrong time to ask that the debt limit be raised? Maybe so; but it is the right time to be open and honest with the people of this country. They want no more of 1936–38 W. P. A. spending with crowded W. P. A. rolls through election day only to have thousands of needy people then eliminated from W. P. A. to shift for themselves through the cold months of the year.

I want you to hear this editorial which appears in today's Buffalo Courier Express. It is entitled "Harrington's Pledge" and reads:

"You are entitled to vote or not to vote, as you choose," Commissioner F. C. Harrington, of W. P. A., has advised employees of that agency. "No one connected with the Work Projects Administration can get you fired or change your wages because you do or do not vote or because you belong to or do not belong to a political party. It is against the law for anyone to ask you for money for any political campaign. * * * Voting is your own business. Keep it that way."

And Commissioner Harrington adds this assurance: "As Commissioner of Work Projects, I will not tolerate any violation of the above regulations. The Work Projects Administration is not in politics and does not take part in politics, either directly or indirectly."

Commissioner Harrington's record is such that no one will question his sincerity. There seems no doubt that he intends to do his best to make his pledge good. If and when the amended Hatch law, with its additional and sharper teeth, finally is enacted by both Houses and signed by the President, Mr. Harrington's prospects of making good will be improved. Disillusioned citizens, however, may be pardoned if recollections of the 1938 W. P. A. scandal still are lively in this Presidential election year, and if they see the W. P. A. as an important cog in a political machine, or a strong patronage weapon in the entrenched party's fight for continuance in office.

Laws now protect the W. P. A. employee from having to "kick in or else" and from plugging for some politician or political party. Now the President wants to remove the Woodrum safeguard. Let us meet the problem squarely.

Let us vote the administration of W. P. A. into the hands of the States with grants from the Federal Government for work relief contingent upon the States meeting requirements as may be laid down by Congress. High and nonrelief salaries, traveling, telephone, and telegraphic expenses could be saved to the advantage of needy people, including taxpayers. Why not meet the issue and eliminate any chance for a repetition of the Federal and local politics so vivid in our memory and so shamefully crushing to those requiring the aid of work relief through no fault of their own? It must be met, and there is no year like the present.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks and to include an editorial.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HARTER]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HARTER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a petition concerning a tax.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HARTER]?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER] is recognized for 1 hour.

THE TAXPAYERS' BILLION-DOLLAR UNDERCHARGE

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, the Tennessee Valley has a great Federal eleemosynary institution for the indigent Aluminum Co., Boss Crump's Memphis city-hall gang, and Tupelo's rural sweatshops. For these worthy poor the T. V. A. is Uncle Sam's house of charity.

To protect the vested interests of these paupers, the Tennessee Valley Authority has everwatchful defenders on the floor of this House.

They make no attempt to justify the fact that of the hundreds of millions of dollars Congress has appropriated to this income-producing, proprietary business, T. V. A. has returned not one penny of interest to the Federal Government, and is accumulating an interest deficit at current Government rates of $8,918,000 annually.

Nor have they stood on this floor and honestly faced T. V. A.'s critics to justify the 60 percent charge-off of T. V. A.'s power costs to the fictional objectives of flood control and navigation.

Not once have they defended the endowment of T. V. A.'s yardstick rates by a 50 percent subsidy out of the pockets of the Federal taxpayers of Ohio and other taxpaying States. Driven from corner to corner in a debate of that sort, only one plan of defense could they present with any sort of validity.

This defense would be that, after all, the T. V. A. is a huge eleemosynary institution and can only be defended as such.

If they would come in here frankly and admit that Mississippi has three times the native white illiteracy of Ohio, that Tennessee has six times the native white illiteracy of Ohio, they might meet with a more sympathetic and understanding audience.

But I could suggest better ways of spreading the more abundant life to the ill-clothed, ill-housed, ill-fed rural slums of Mississippi and Tennessee. When the average family with a $1,500-a-year income—twice to three times as much as the lower third in these States—finds its electricity bill just above 1 percent of its total expenditures, it is obvious that to spend the same money for education, resettlement, and rehabilitation were a better place to start than cutting the light bills a few cents.

They ask for bread and T. V. A. gives them a stone.

The defenders of T. V. A. make no such justification for this Federal almshouse.

They do not—because they cannot—defend T. V. A. on its merits.

Their methods are craftier than that.

Let any man stand on this floor and attack the waste of T. V. A. Let him propose decent, honest yardstick bookkeeping. Do the gentlemen meet such arguments foursquare? They do not.

Evading charges they cannot meet, they broadly imply that T. V. A.'s accusers are conniving with "boodlers" and are spokesmen for the Power Trust.

They go further. They select the rates of T. V. A. and the rates of the publicly owned municipal plant at Tacoma, Wash., and the rates of the Ontario Hydro Commission in Canada, and attempt to show by the same criteria that the home district is being even worse overcharged.

Such speeches have been repeated so often in this body that they empty the seats in record time whenever they launch one of them.

Mysteriously financed, these speeches soon appear in the mail of the offending Member's constituents. It is more than a coincidence that these speeches are being circulated in the districts of T. V. A. opponents by the Public Ownership League of America, founded by and as an adjunct to the Socialist Party. It will be recalled that it was brought out on the floor recently that Carl D. Thompson, secretary of the Public Ownership League and onetime campaign manager for the Socialist Party, is doubling in brass as secretary of the Public Ownership League and chief propagandist of the Bonneville administration at $5,600 a year.

IS DEFAMATION T. V. A.'S ONLY DEFENSE?

Can it be that the case for the T. V. A. is so poor, so unworthy, that its best, its only defense, must be a campaign of vilification, of mud slinging, of defamation of character?

I particularly desire to destroy the effectiveness of such tactics by which a speech inserted into the RECORD under leave to revise and extend remarks, printed at Government expense, is mailed into districts of Congressmen who seek to bring out the truth about T. V. A.

In the facts presented here I shall emphasize the relation of Ohio to T. V. A. and its rates. With little adaptation to different local conditions the same figures will apply equally well to any of the States which foot the bill for the T. V. A.

If they are right, private ownership of public utilities has not a leg to stand on. If they are right, we are all of us remiss in not voting to spread T. V. A.'s throughout the land as fast as we can.

But, if they are wrong, I leave it to the solemn judgment of this House as to the measure of the guilt of men who, on the basis of fake statistics, impugn the motives of the Members of this body.
